"Everything Is Changed"

Mrs. Elbert Koontz, Beatrice, Nebraska

IT IS morning; we have awakened and seek renewing of spirit out where we can be alone, away from the possessiveness of the daily routine. What a beautiful scene! The night has brought snow, not a "story-book" heavy snowfall, but a common, two to three-inch one. Common, did we say? Hardly! Nothing that can arouse such thoughts of the goodness, the kindness, of our good God can rightly be called common. There must have been very little breeze, for although the trees stand penguin-like, the ground is evenly covered.

We step out alone with Him; there are no other footprints ahead save here and there some queer animal tracks which we almost unthinkingly identify as we walk on. It is just as though the two of us are venturing out where no one else has ever gone. That requires faith, but hand in hand, He leads; and we cannot but go on, slowly, yes, but eagerly.

Everything is changed. We think back to our walk the other day. What we saw then was merely a skeleton of what we now see. How every tree, every bush, and even every dried-out weed is dressed in splendor. Each step we take together with Him reveals more beauty and warms our hearts to greater loyalty and devotion. . . .

It is evening and we can pause a bit to rethink the events of the day. Somehow the memory of that morning walk lingers and crowds other thoughts from the surface. How beautiful a newly-fallen snow is. We can think of no other phenomenon of nature that brings such rapid change. True, a tornado does, but we were thinking of constructive change that lifts and edifies.

Was it not the Prophet Isaiah who said, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow?" (Isaiah 1:18) And surely that is the greatest change that God can make in the human heart. And, too, when the snow of Christ's redeeming power has fallen upon a person, those things in his life which once were useless, unattractive skeletons now are robed in splendor and serve as a means of revealing the love of God to others.

As we venture out in this New Year where no one else has gone before, may each one of us have at his side the Christ, to encourage, to guide, and to purge us with a "newfallen snow."

EDITORIALS

ARE YOU OPPOSED TO UMT?

The American Legion has designated January 5 to 12 as "National Universal Military Training Week" as part of its "do or die" campaign to get the UMT bill enacted into law. To exert pressure upon congressmen, it has asked the governor of each state to proclaim Universal Military Training Week. The Legion, with over three million members and 12,000 posts throughout the United States, will use a wide variety of efforts to bring support of the bill to a climax. The efforts will include parades, mass meetings, Legion meetings, publicity stunts, etc. In addition its plans are that letters, telegrams, and petitions to congress will reach their high point during this week. It will also try to get the widest possible use of radio transcription, and news commentators will be asked to speak on the need of UMT. Columnists will be asked to write on it. Congressmen are to be deluged with petitions, the signatures of which were gathered during December. The December issue of the Legionaire was to be devoted to UMT. Local teams are to report on their visits to congressman, conducted during the vacation, so that congressmen not in line can be approached to insure the final victory. During the campaign, it is urged, that letters of appreciation be sent to all editors who write editorials in favor of UMT and that editorials opposed to UMT be carefully analyzed and then truthfully and politely answered point by point. January 5-12 is the week, the first in the new session of Congress, when an effort will be made to bring UMT up in the House. The Legion is reported to be hoping that the bill will pass the House in the first three weeks of the new session.

Christians opposed to UMT may want to glean from the foregoing some suggestions on how to oppose UMT. Certainly, it should make them think of their part in this whole issue. The Friends Committee on National Legislation makes this request: "Will you redouble your efforts to see that UMT is discussed in farm and church groups, that people understand the implications of it, the cost involved, how it would increase the military spirit, intensify the arms race with Russia, and weaken confidence in the United Nations? Will you encourage your friends and neighbors to express themselves to the President, to their Congressman and their Senators, to the Republicans and Democratic county chairman, and to the local paper?" It also suggests talking to congressmen about " . . . the need for generous aid to needy countries, admitting refugees, opposing UMT and pushing for worldwide reduction in armaments."

It is the Christian's job to be a peacemaker. As Mennonites we should be especially clear on an alternative to war. This alternative must be brought out clear and strong if those in favor of UMT are to see less need for it. We have work to do. For some more suggestions see the young people's section of this paper.

THE GREATEST

What person does not wish to be somebody? We all want to matter and we should. However, man's attempts to achieve this greatness are generally self-defeating. Jesus, in recognizing this universal human longing, did not despise it, but rather he suggested a way for utilizing it when he said, " . . . . whoever would be great among you must be your servant, and whoever would be first among you must be your slave; even as the Son of man came not to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many," Matt. 20:26-28. Two world wars are now over. They were struggles in which the attention of the world was often fixed on certain leaders. Today American corporations have the fattest profits in American history, and the names of Rockefeller, Morgan, Carnegie, etc., are well known. But does the true self of people rank these as the greatest? In the general swirl of things they and their works are acclaimed. But today the truer self of man seems to be expressing itself as men turn their attention to a Christian missionary who began his work in the jungles of Africa in 1913, performing his first surgery in a windowless hen-house with a broken roof." This man had come from Europe where he was recognized as one of the leading organists, where he was known for his philosophical work on Kant, where he had been appointed principal of a theological college, and where he had won a degree in medicine. His friends had urged him to stay in Europe, but he went to Africa to operate, build, preach. This man was Albert Schweitzer, now seventy-two and still fighting disease of body and soul in the jungles. Men are writing books about him. Some call him the greatest man in the world.

A Brazilian Trip "In The Name of Christ"

by Mrs. J. E. Kaufman

Common means of travel for Brazilian Mennonites

IT WAS A bright Wednesday morning when suddenly we heard a loud knock on our front door. At once this suggested urgency to us, for the customary way in Brazil for a caller to announce his coming is to remain a distance away from the house and clap his hands. I opened the door and there stood a gentleman who had come in great haste. He had just come from the hospital where he had taken his youngest son, Herman, eight years old, an hour's drive with horse and wagon. The boy, hale and hearty, earlier that morning delivered a letter to their neighbors when suddenly a mad dog attacked him, and bit him so severely that part of a finger was immediately amputated by the local doctor who at once sensed the seriousness of the situation The boy should have injections at once, but where would they find the serum? The closest town is twenty-five miles away, a distance of five or six hours driving. From there they could continue their search by bus or train. But how to get to this closest town; in their dilemma, the doctor thought of the only car in the settlement. "Mr. Kaufman would lend a helping hand," he said. While the doctor and nurses were administering first aid and making the patient as comfortable as possible, the parents continued their journey approximately another two miles to our house.

Upon hearing of the tragedy, my husband was ready within a few minutes and together they sped to the hospital. The mountainous roads around here were still very rough and a bit muddy in a few places, but their thoughts were centered on their mission of mercy, hoping and praying that the life of the boy might be spared.

The mother, who remained on the road with the team of horses, was sitting on the wagon weeping because of the misfortune of her son. My own heart was beating rapidly as I approached her attempting to give utterance to my compassionate feeling. Yes, she was to drive home alone and wait patiently perhaps days or weeks until word would come concerning the fate of her son.

The car arrived at the hospital, picked up the boy and also Dr. Dyck, who left his other patients in the care of the nurses and was kind enough to accompany them. The roads became rougher. Soon they struck a big mud hole and got stuck. All available means were used to get out, but without success. Finally three other men appeared with jack, spade and long planks, but even then it was impossible to get through. The boy was brave, for even though his pain was severe, he was patient. It was evident a team of oxen or horses would be needed even though there were none in view for several miles around. The father offered to search while the rest worked with what was available. Finally a team of horses was brought, and it pulled the car through this and other muddy places found in this bad stretch of road. For a distance all went well, only to get stuck once again this time tearing the fan belt so that continuing by car was impossible. The only recourse was to hire a team and wagon and proceed even though at a slower pace. In due time this was done, and the father, the patient, and the doctor continued the journey, while the driver, waiting for roads to dry, went to search for car repairs.

The party with the wagon arrived at Pres. Getulio, the nearest town, sometime in the afternoon. There was a small hospital there, but no serum for the boy. From this town the roads were hard-surfaced, so they hired a car and kept on going from town to town until they reached Blumenau, a city of considerable size where they had the best hope of finding the serum and ending their journey. By this time the sun had set and darkness was upon them. They were weary and the boy still was not taken care of.

Once more they were disappointed, for medical authorities informed them that in this entire province of Santa Catarina there was no such serum and that they must proceed again as far as they had come over dangerous, mountainous roads to a town called Curitiba. The bus was to leave at three o'clock that morning. When applying for tickets, they were informed the bus was filled and that they must make reservations ahead of time. "There must be room for the father and son," the doctor pleaded with the man in the office who soon realized the seriousness of the situation and consented to find room for them. So after hours of waiting that chilly night, they were again on their way. The boy had not lost courage and was making the best of the situation. The doctor, realizing the importance of the work he left behind, took the first opportunity to start his journey homeward.

The father and son arrived in Curitiba, a town about 220 miles from Witmarsum, the next afternoon. Here finally the boy is receiving the necessary medical aid. In spite of all the difficulties encountered, they were confident a higher hand was watching over them. We are all thankful that according to latest reports the boy is making satisfactory progress toward a complete recovery. They have not arrived at home as yet, and it was more than ten days before the mother had any word as to how her son was getting along.

Mr. Kaufman walked approximately five miles to a station where he stayed over night. In the morning he located a fan belt, the only one to be had, walked back to the car, only to discover it was too short. Having patched one together, the roads had dried enough so that it was possible to drive to Pres. Getulio with the hope of meeting the other members of the party. He spent another night there, and by morning the doctor had come back and together, on Friday morning, they started for home arriving about noon. They were tired, but had experienced an inner satisfaction and joy for having had a share in saving the life of a promising boy "In the Name of Christ."

The Bible fits the push-button age.

In the present age the turn of a key puts a huge engine in motion. The throwing of a switch lights a whole community. The pressing of a button even promises to obilerate a whole nation. How much depends on how little and how few!

Science has found the key to nature, but it has miserably failed to find the key to human nature that will make man good. Nature is almost completely controlled; human nature is still savage.

The Bible fits the push-botton age because it is the key to human nature. The Bible as interpreted by Calvary and the empty tomb is the key to the heart behind the hand on the switches. Only the Bible can take man's hands off the switches of death and place them on the switches of blessing. If this is to happen, however, man will have to turn this key and not merely carry it around in his pocket. Atomic energy was discovered because men applied in the laboratory the theories wrought out in their study. Regenerating power will only be tapped if the Word that is "hid in my heart" becomes effective in the laboratory of everyday life.

The Bible is ineffective because it is studied, memorized, distributed, preached, read, carried to church, but not obeyed. The Bible ought to be read with a list of one's besetting sins at hand and the expectation of repenting and confessing; it ought to be read with a newspaper before one and the expectation of applying the gospel in the community and the world. The Bible should be read with the problems of the home in mind with the expectation of eliminating its tension; it should be read with the spiritual condition of the church in mind with the expectation of kindling the flame of her witness.

LET THERE BE AN END OF ORNAMENTAL BIBLE READING!

As one has said, "It is true that 'Thy Word, O Lord, is settled in heaven,' but it is my business and yours to see that it is settled in Nappanee, Newton, Bluffton, Freeman, and throughout the world."

College and Seminary News

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Mennonite Historical Committee of the General Conference has been called together by Dr. Cornelius Krahn, secretary, for a meeting in the Bethel College Historical Library on January 2 and 3. The Committee will discuss and act upon a number of items in the long-range plans to coordinate efforts in obtaining, preserving, and making available Mennonite historical materials. A gratifying flow of material has been coming in constantly to the Historical Library from many parts of the world, which is then studied and classified by Dr. Krahn and his assistant, John F. Schmidt. They also report an ever-growing subscription list to Mennonite Life. Mr. E. L. Harms, accompanied by the Bethel College Men's Octet, left December 28 on a tour to the churches in western Kansas. The octet under the direction of Professor Suderman, is composed of Harold Schmidt, Burt Russell, Hugo Reimer, Walter Jost, Orville Voth, Leo Goertz, Walter Siemens, and John Gaeddert.

Jesus' Reaction to an Atrocity

By Ford Berg

It is not commonly thought of that Christ lived His admittedly, unspotted, perfect life in the little countryside of Palestine that had been conquered and annexed by a foreign, blatant and aggressive military power.

The power-thirsty Caesars had subjugated little Palestine and had made it a province of Rome. One could describe the brutal oppressions, the extreme exactations and atrocities of the Romans. The wheel taxes, the bridge tolls, the poll taxes, the grain hand-ins required, the road charges and the thousand and one petty things that make oppression and subjugation so irritating could be enumerated in great detail. Let it suffice that life under the Roman yoke was aggravating.

NEED OTHER TRAINING THAN MILITARY

Robert Hutchins, Chancellor of the University of Chicago and long-time opponent of universal military training, "reiterated the warning of scientists when he frankly stated 'there is no defense against the atomic bomb. This means that there is no way of preventing the destruction of the cities of the United States, for nobody seriously supposes that there is a "secret" of the atomic bomb which the United States can keep. If we cannot beat the atomic bomb we will have to beat war. There is no other way in which we can save our cities from the fate of Hiroshima and Nagasake.'

"The matter of training for the aftermath of an atomic disaster is relatively unimportant, says Hutchins, for the majority of the population will be killed. He believes that the survivors would need scientific and industrial training, but military training is unrealistic. 'Professor Einstein,' Hutchins said, 'thinks that about two-thirds of the population will be killed and that is certainly a conservative estimate. But of all the kinds of training which the two-third surviving might need, the most useless is military training.' "—The Reporter

This explains the dominant desire and passion of almost every Jew that a military saviour appear on the scene. With their limited understanding of the meaning of Messiah and their extreme desire to see the Messianic hope come to fruition, the Jews tolerated, strangely enough, an insurrectionist—like Barabbas and even expected Christ to come with earthly power and sword-swinging ideals. They thought Christ would gird a sword, raise a rebel army and in the name of eternal righteousness and liberty drive agressive, yoke-burdening Romans from the land of Palestine and leave the country to the mastery of the Jews, the rightful owners and rulers.

Jesus was a Jew. He dearly loved His country, but He repudiated, without exception, the way of violence. He knew that an insurrection would be futile, but more than that, He regarded the intrigue and the violence of an insurrection as immoral and as a violation of the will of God.

"In Jesus rejection of the use of violence a new and unprecedented ethic was instituted. Here was a more powerful and effective remedy for the overthrow of tyranny and the establishment of true liberty. This ethic was not limited to a limited band of eleven disciples. It was to be a law for the whole Jewish nation, an inviolable law of God.

What was this new ethic so forcibly presented in the midst of the insurrectionists and the discontended Jews? Here it is: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you" (Matt. 5:43, 44).

Jesus told this to His own, but His own received Him not. Instead He was met with a perpetual clamor to serve as a military Messiah, a political redeemer. Lest we begin thinking that Jesus did not need to face the horror stories and the atrocities which have been so prevalent during the last war, let us remember the occasion when some bystanders told Him about Pilate's excesses. It seems that an insurrection had just taken place in Galilee, and violence breeding more violence and counter-violence, Pilate, military appropriator that he was, determined to quell such uprisings, and as a finger-snapping lesson had 3,000 Galileans slain, probably in neo-Lidice style. To make the lesson more impressive he had taken the blood of Galileans and sacrilegiously mixed it with the blood of bullocks on the altar. Atrocity of all atrocities—to desecrate the Jews' holy altar was an act worthy of immediate death! No greater horror could have been committed.

This sensational account was flashed to Jesus in the hope that it would arouse His anger, lead Him to spear-head a revolt against Rome and wage a victorious "war of liberation." Plotters, fifth-columnists, censors, underground workers and secret planners abounded.

Would Jesus accept the political Messiaship so urgently needed by the Jews? One can visualize their surprise when Jesus blandly replied, "Think ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay: But except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:2, 3).

The words of Jesus meant two things: First, and of greatest importance, was the need for repentance, a change of mind toward God. Second was the plea to renounce the sinful way of violence and take the way of love as a guiding and motivating force. Jesus told them that if they persisted in their way of violence and insurrectionists' activities, the Romans would simply practice more gruesome atrocities against the nation, and they would all perish in like manner as did the Galileans (Luke 13:3).

Secular history informs us that the prediction of Jesus was fulfilled with the destruction of the Jewish nation in the fall of Jerusalem, 70 A. D., when General Titus' victorius army got out of control and slaughtered about a quarter of a million Jews.

Do not the words of Christ apply today with as much force? Repentance is necessary; nonresistance is necessary. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Turn from destructive, evil ways to the ways of God, salvation; and secondly, follow the conquering force of nonresistance, which is to go hand in hand with Christian living, Retributive thoughts when atrocities are committed will bring death and more deaths. Engines of war produces other engines, hand grenades, bombs, rockets and now the atom bomb! New military alliances are formed—all in the hope of establishing and maintaining righteousness and true liberty. Jesus has a further lesson when He advises us to build on the rock and not on sand so that there will be no occasion for the house to fall, submerging all the indwellers.

This is clear: Jesus came to call men to repentance. But with His calls to repentance comes a call to renounce the way of violence and embrace His superior way of nonresistance to evil and engage in activities that have spiritual and enduring values.

If Jesus' reply to atrocities and horrors was "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," how much more do we as Christians need to preach the same message!

Your Life Is a Sermon

By Henry Thiessen

(Rev. Henry Thiessen is pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Fredonia, Kansas. This small group has courageously launched out to have their place of worship. They purchased an abandoned school house and are making it into their own. May the Lord add His blessing to such efforts. We welcome this exposition as a product of a worker.— A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Home Mission Board of the General Conference.)

God created man to be a praise of His glory, Eph. 1:12. When a man's work is well done, then it praises its Master. Certainly God's creation speaks of the greatness of its Creator. "The heavens declare the glory of God." But above all, man should declare the wonderful work of His grace. Not only is he to proclaim God's greatness in creative power; the closest to our heart is the power of love. God has chosen fallen mankind for the object of His love. And where there is love there is joy. God's program for His children is so rich in love and joy that joy and love should shine out of all our words and deeds.

Joy in Christ and love for Christ are two of the most powerful incentives for Christian work. Real joy is the heart of real life; it comes from God. It helps to make believing easier, as well as vice versa. God has provided this world with clouds and trials, but joy is glad that "it came to pass." The disciples rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name. Therefore joy is not and cannot be hilarious laughter, but having given self for the praise of His glory.—Henry Thiessen, Route 2, Fredonia, Kansas.

NOT BY BREAD ALONE

The accompanying picture will surely suggest different things to different people. To some it will suggest the thought, "That man needs bread. 'Send thy bread across the waters, and it shall return to thee after many days.' "

To others it will suggest the Scripture passage: "Man shall not live by bread alone." Indeed he shall not. And our relief workers are bringing back the testimony again and again that these people stricken in so many different ways need more than bread—they need the spiritual fellowship of all Mennonites everywhere, and one way in which they get that is through the printed word. Again and again the cry is: "Send us more printed material for these people to read!"

That is why we ask our people, individually and as churches, to support the relief and mission boards in their current attempts to secure gifts for subscriptions to our church papers for distribution among the brethren abroad.

You don't live by bread alone. Why should they?

Parsonage of the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia

IN June of 1947 the congregation of the First Mennonite Church of Philadelphia decided unanimously upon the purchase of a parsonage. In August a semi-detached home was purchased in Olney, a north-central suburb of Philadelphia. Workmen began immediately on a complete job of renovation. The finished work has brought about a bright and cheerful home. There is ample living space and one room is particularly adaptable for the study. On Sunday, November 2, a brief parsonage dedication ceremony was observed in the Church, and on Saturday, November 8, "Open House" was held to which the entire congregation and interested friends were invited.

Not only did the congregation buy and renovate a home—they also completely furnished it to the extent of including a refrigerator, automatic washing machine and a vacuum cleaner—household articles which are difficult to purchase at any time within the range of a Mennonite minister's salary.

The task undertaken by the First Church congregation is commendable from numerous standpoints. It provides an adequate home for their pastor and his family and it evidences a recognition of the fact that on current minister's salaries no young minister, after spending years in college and seminary, has the means with which to furnish a home.

The trend in the General Conference ministry tends toward more seminary trained men. This being the case, it appears that the action taken by First Church, Philadelphia, points the way which many of our congregations may see fit to take in the near future.

Wesley C. Ewert, Pastor

Speaker Links Sharing and Peace

Upland, California, December 9,—"We have to live with the Russians if we're going to live at all. It is possible to live in the same world with the Russians as friends!" This thought was expressed by Dr. Harold C. Case at the Community Conference on World Affairs recently held in the First Mennonite Church, Upland, California.

Dr. Case assailed the idea that a war between Russia and the United States is inevitable. He had the attention of the listeners when he said, "There is as much understanding on one side of the fence as the other."

"Food is the first key to the social, political and economic life of Europe," Dr. Case declared. He reported that at the Oslo World Christian Youth Conference, which was attended by approximately 1,500 young people of seventy-two nations, "the U. S. delegates complained of fatigue after the fifth day because the food they ate represented a 40 per cent reduction in their accustomed diets. At the same time European delegates were saying, 'This is the best food we have had in years!' The same diet represented a 25 per cent increase in the rations to which they had been accustomed and still receive in lucky cases."

"Unless we help the people of the world, friend or enemy, solve their problems," Dr. Case said distinctly, "we are helping breed World War III!"

"There is no future of mankind except barbarism if another war comes."

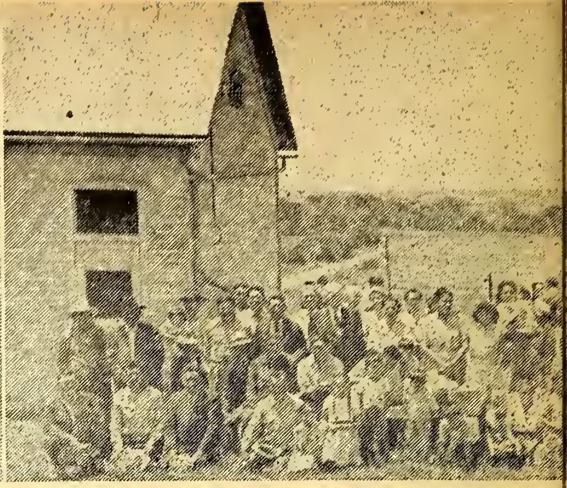
"The problem in the world today is not a problem of communism versus capitalism, but a problem of free governments everywhere. Europe can recover only if we recognize a great new moral impulse in America,' he said.

Possible solutions suggested by Dr. Case included a largeness of heart, an understanding of the background and psychology of Russia and her people, the non-political distribution of relief, and the raising of the level of industry and production.

Concluding he said, "If we will share and share and share with the hungry peoples of the world, it is possible to have enduring peace in one world!"

Since I have come a little way upon the path, there is no such thing as a "bother" or an inconvenient season in my day. I can know that any given minute of a committed day I am exactly where He has placed me, doing the work, seeing the people, saying the word, thinking the thought, dreaming the dream which may be His will concerning me at that minute. The condition of truth in this lies in the extent of the commitment. We cannot stand upon His promises until we have fulfilled His premises.—Mary Welch

Despite her opposition to war, Mary Elkinton Duguid, Nahant, Massachusetts, has been re-admitted to her American citizenship by the United States Federal Court at Boston. The action is reported to have been based on the recent change in this matter by the Supreme Court. Marriage to a British citizen in 1915 had cancelled her American citizenship and she had been unable previously to recover her citizenship because she would not agree to defend the Constitution by force of arms.



The J. B. Edigers Served among t

BY ART

IT is quite some time since Brother and Sister J. B. Ediger retired from their place of service among the Cheyenne Indians in Oklahoma. But even though time has passed we still feel like expressing our appreciation for the work which they so faithfully carried on. After six months of trying to follow somewhat the same routine and covering the great distances in serving the three churches at Thomas, Hammon and Clinton, and the Government Boarding School at Concho, one realizes anew what a great task it has been for them for forty years. One begins to realize what has been accomplished. Their's has been almost a lifetime of deep and full consecration to their place of service among the Indians.

The Edigers completed their forty years of mission work in May, 1947. They retired to Buhler, Kansas, on June 4. Several days previous the Indians of the Clinton Church honored them with a farewell service and dinner. The pictures show several incidents and groups at this occasion. (Pictures by Blunck's studio)

Just a brief historical review might be of interest. In The Mennonite of June 27, 1929, Brother M. M. Horsch wrote of the first journeys to the upper Washita river in 1892. Rev. and Mrs. Petter stationed at Cantonment made occasional visits to the Indians where Clinton is at present. In 1894 the mission board asked Brother and Sister Horsch to move to this district to begin regular work. This was done in the "small and tough cowboy village called Arapaho." In the fall of 1897 they built up the station near Clinton, and in 1898 the first church was built. The lumber was hauled from Geary, Oklahoma, fifty miles away, and the church built for only $500. This church is still in use even though it has been braced and anchored down. Since May, 1907, the Edigers have cared for this station.

Forty years of service to a people of another race have brought many varied and interesting experiences. Pioneering among them, sharing of the spiritual gifts, first converts, unfaithfulness, rejoicing over victories, deep consecration of converts, these and many more have made life eventful. But of greatest importance has been the opportunity to present the Way of Life and Him who said "I am the Life." The Word has been scattered abroad. Now we, together with Brother and Sister Herbert Dalke, have the opportunity to harvest where the Edigers have sown the seed.

May the Lord give them joy as they recall their past and may His richest blessings be upon them.

And now to enjoy the meal and the fellowship in smaller groups. In the background is the house which was the Ediger home for forty years. Lower left: The faithful workers. Enough for everyone, yes, and to spare. Lower right: Young and old, with dishes in hand, await their turn to be served.

Menno Colony Representative Visits North America

One of the pioneer Mennonite settlers in the Paraguayan Chaco is at present in the United States representing Menno Colony in various business interests

Jacob Braun was a member of the first group of 309 Mennonites who migrated from Canada to Paraguay in 1926. During the period from 1926 to 1935, at total of 1,777 Mennonites made this journey from Canada to Menno colony. To begin life on this unsettled and isolated prairie land meant the building of homes, producing of food, making of clothing from raw materials, establishment of schools, churches, medical facilities, economic system, and many other services which are essential to a thriving community.

For many years Brother Braun was Oberschultze of Menno Colony. In this capacity he was the person responsible for the direction and coordination of all community activities of the colony, excepting the religious life, which was more directly under the charge of the church. The Oberschultze also is the chairman of the Choritzer Komite, which is a committee of about thirty persons representing the interests of each village in matters common to the entire colony.

During the years since its establishment, the colony has prospered and grown so that now the population (as of 1945) is nearly twice that of the original number, and the area of land covered is about 300,000 acres, which is more than twice that of the original settlement. Even with this expansion, however, there is continued need for more land upon which to settle. Therefore the colony hopes to purchase an additional tract of approximately 250,000 acres.

Ethiopian Emperor Visits MCC Units

An unusual experience for the MCC workers at Nazareth Hospital in Ethiopia was the visit of the Emperor Haile Selassie I, on November 23. He had come to the village to see the new Nazareth School, and upon invitation, came also to inspect the hospital of which the MCC workers have direction. He seemed very much interested as he was shown through the various rooms and wards, asking many questions regarding the work, and regarding the Mennonites and their beliefs. It was a unique opportunity to express some of our beliefs and mission interests.

M.C.C. Meetings at Goshen in January

This year the annual meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee will be held in Goshen, Indiana on January 9 and 10. Prior to this annual meeting, the Mennonite Aid Section and the MCC Executive Committee will hold meetings on January 8, and the Peace Section on the forenoon of January 9. All of these sessions will be important in the evaluation of the work done during the past year, and in discussing together the work to be undertaken for the coming months.

Orie O. Miller returned on December 23 from a three and one-half week trip to South America, in the interests of Mennonite Refugee migration to Paraguay.

ALLENTOWN CHURCH MAKES STATEMENT OF POLICY

The following item is taken from the bulletin of the First Mennonite Church, Allentown, Pa.

For some time the Church Council has been discussing various projects that are brought to our attention for financial aid. After examining the constitution of our church a committee was appointed by the pastor to further study this matter. The following statement is the result of the final action taken by the Council:

Statement of policy adopted by the Church Council concerning the support of projects not endorsed by the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America:

We, as a Church Council of the First Mennonite Church of Allentown, Pa., a member of the Eastern District Conference of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America, recognize that our whole-hearted financial support should be given to all projects sponsored or endorsed by the General Conference of which we are a member. We will, in addition, consider lending some financial aid to outside projects where the work of these projects does not duplicate the work being carried on by the General Conference.

We do not, however, sponsor or encourage the giving of financial aid to any project where work of a similar nature is being carried on by the General Conference, but we are in sympathy with and will spiritually support all Christian work which is done in the will of God and which does further the Kingdom of God here on earth.

PENALIZING THE CHILDREN

Parents—oldsters in general—have to be extremely careful not to "take out" their anger or other emotions of fear on the children.

With increased prices of everything that goes into living, let us face frankly the fact that if our children are going to learn to "live" as they should, only the finest spiritual food should be given them. Many people, having tried out the new JUNIOR QUARTERLY, feel that there is nothing finer for that particular age level. And it does cost quite a bit to put out a fine booklet like that for our children. But, while it costs a lot to put out fine printing, it costs a church like the General Conference a great deal more not to put it out. One way, it costs us thirty cents a copy or more, but think what it costs if we don't put out fine materials for our children to use in the Sunday school! The problems in juvenile delinquency in our larger cities bear testimony to the fact that the costs are also high if you don't put out good materials!

MEET MR. EPP

D. H. Epp, Editor of DER BOTE

Many of our readers, after hearing Mr. Epp, present Editor of DER BOTE, which was recently merged with DER CHRISTLICHER BUNDESBOTE, have inquired to know more about this new associate of the General Conference Board of Publication in its program of publications.

Mr. D.H. Epp was born in the oldest Mennonite settlement of Russia named Chortitza. He belongs to a family that for many generations was leading in the spiritual and cultural life of that settlement. His father was a teacher and elder, and his brother David H. Epp was one of the last elders of that settlement, Besides, his brother was editor of the leading Mennonite paper of Russia, Botschafter, and writer of a number of books.

Mr. D. H. Epp taught for many years in the Chortitza Zentralschule. The hundredth anniversary of this school was recently commemorated by graduates of that institution in Canada. D. H. Epp was one of the few surviving senior teachers and, therefore, center of this commemoration.

After his arrival in Canada, he started the publication of the BOTE in 1924. By doing so, he immediately set the pattern for and raised the standard of German Mennonite publications in this country. From its beginning to the present, the BOTE has maintained a high cultural level, even though the lowering of it might have been financially advantageous. The BOTE and the editor of the BOTE have won the hearts of many readers, not only in Canada and the United States, but also in South America and in Europe. Now that the BOTE and the BUNDESBOTE have been merged, we are convinced that this union will help to serve the reading public even better than before.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

What would you do if your best friend were struck by lightning while you were sitting with him at a party? That was the experience of Peter Waldus, the central character in the story, "The Fellowship of the Cross," pages 12 to 17 (Note how short the story is), in the charming little book TALES FROM MENNONITE HISTORY, available at your Conference book stores.

Jottings

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pa.: The parsonage recently purchased and furnished by our church was dedicated November 2, and open house was held November 8. The Beginners, Primary and Junior department's Christmas program was unique in that it was given before the entire Sunday School on Sunday morning December 21. That evening our choir rendered the cantata, "The Infant Holy," by Louise Stairs. The next evening the older departments of the Sunday school gave the play, "Twentieth Century Christmas Spirit." The Senior Christian Endeavor Society sponsored carol singing. A group of forty started out at midnight, made a number of stops, covered a large territory, and returned to the church in time for coffee and buns served before the well attended early morning Christmas service held at 6:30.—Mrs. H. S. Weiss, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: On Christmas Eve thirty carolers sang from 8 to 2:30, sang at sixty-three homes, and collected gifts of food for the Rosenberger family, Mrs. Rosenberger still being ill. Our Christmas evening program utilized varied talents in flute, marimba, girl's chorus, and Junior Sunday school numbers. Then Rev. Rosenberger showed the Christmas story in pictures. College students presented the Christian endeavor program Sunday evening, December 28. Following the program Christian Endeavorers surprised Mr. and Mrs. David Rosenberger with a canned goods shower.—Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Gotebo, Oklahoma: Many sons and daughters returned home from school, business and professions to attend the church Christmas eve program. Following recitations and candle lighting drill by the small folks, the Junior, Intermediate, Seniors and church choir presented the play "Why The Chimes Rang." At the close of the services an offering for underprivileged children amounted to $83.00—Mrs. Oscar Schmidt, Corr.

—A "Christian Life Conference" for young people between twelve and seventeen, was held on the Bluffton College Campus, January 2, 3. The conference aimed at helping young people "see more clearly the various possibilities or kinds of service that can be rendered through and in the Christian Church."

—Gnadenberg Church, Whitewater, Kansas: Our pastor, Rev. J. J. Voth will teach a Bible course at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College during January. He will treat the Gospel of John and the Book of Revelation. During his absence Rev. J. R. Duerksen, former missionary to the Hopis, will serve us. On December 7 Rev. and Mrs. Frank Manning showed pictures and told us of their work in Africa. Mrs. Manning is a sister to Mrs. J. J. Voth.—Mrs. Leo Voth, Corr.

—First Church (north of) Butterfield, Minnesota: Rev. D. J. Sawatzky of Emporia, Kansas, conducted three weeks of evangelistic meetings. The Lord blessed his ministry. Our congregation has canned 3,300 cans of beef, pork, and chicken for relief.—Mrs. Henry Penner, Corr.

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pa. "The Pageant of the Kings" was featured at the White Gift Service. At the close of the service representatives of the classes and departments brought their White Gifts to the altar, where they were dedicated for use in God's Kingdom.

—Einsiedel Church, Hanston, Kansas: The Community Christmas Program featured "The Christmas Story" by Cathedral Films assisted by the Junior and Senior choirs. The program concluded with the singing of "O Come, All Ye Faithful" during which time Mr. John Lingenfelder showed colored scenic slides photographed by him.—Mrs. Agnes E. Schowalter, Corr.

—Erna J. Fast, M.C.C. relief worker in Hamburg, Germany, writes: "At present I am setting up the feeding program which we will start here in Hamburg during the next weeks: providing a daily supplementary meal for about 500 undernourished and sick children sent to convalescent homes in the suburbs for short term 'cures,' and offering a meal of hot soup and a brotchen to 7,000 old people three times a week. As we see the tremendous needs all about us this seems like a meager contribution. However, when one is familiar with the actual subsistence ration of these people, it becomes an item of real value."

—The General Conference Executive Committee announces the appointment of Dr. Isaac P. Tieszen, Marion, South Dakota, to membership on the Board of Trustees, replacing Brother J. J. Eymann, Reedley, California, resigned. —Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary.

IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. Anna Wiebe Toevs was born June 5, 1864, near Heubuden, Marienburg, West Prussia, the youngest child of Henry and Marie Fast Wiebe. When two she lost her father. When twelve the family sought out a new home east of the Volga. At the age of fifteen she was baptized and received into the Mennonite Church. In 1880 the family went along with others on the trek into Turkistan. Here she was married to Henry Toevs on February 20, 1882, with Rev. Jacob Toevs, the father of the groom, performing the ceremony. In 1884 the couple, along with many others, migrated to the United States. They lived in Kansas for twenty-four years and then moved to Aberdeen, Idaho, in 1908. Here she lived until her passing on November 1, 1947. For thirty-seven years she was a member of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen. Furthermore, for a period she shared the duties and responsibilities of a pastor's wife while her husband, Rev. Henry Toevs, served the First Mennonite Church. She was preceded in death by her husband in 1933, and by two children, Marie in 1884, and Jacob in 1946. The six children who mourn her death are: Henry C., John E., Mrs. Frieda Kopper, and Mrs. Magdalina Dirks of Aberdeen; Otto of San Jose, California, and Walter of Spokane, Washington.

There's a Way of Keeping a Healthy Mind

by Prof. Menno Harder

Nobody's education is complete unless he knows how to care for his body. It is our sacred duty to see that we remain as healthy as possible. To be most useful and successful in life requires in most instances a great deal of physical strength and endurance.

In order to achieve and maintain good physical health, our schools teach many health rules such as: (1) Sleep in well ventilated rooms, (2) Eat foods that contain all the necessary elements and vitamins, (3) Brush the teeth regularly. Such rules have helped to make Americans healthier and more physically fit.

But a human being is not just a physical body. To make a physical body function requires a mind that directs and governs it. Thus, it must be said, that a person is composed of a body and a mind which must function harmoniously together.

In our mental hospitals there are many persons most of whom possess strong bodies but sick minds. And in every community there are individuals whose minds are keen and alert but who have sick bodies. Both types of people suffer greatly and are either useless or seriously handicapped in their lives.

Nobody's education is complete unless he knows how to care for his mind. It is our sacred duty to keep our minds as healthy as possible. Good mental health, like good physical health, can be achieved. To accomplish good mental health, requires the observance of some simple mental health rules. The following rules have been a great help to many who have tried to obey them in their daily lives.

1. Do not accept hurry as a necessary part of life. Americans are terribly busy making a living or trying to get ahead of everyone else. We rush around "like mad." We are too busy to meditate, to pray, to visit, or to be concerned about the truly worthwhile things. Such rushing around puts a terrific strain upon our mental health. Good mental health requires that a person adopt a "take life easy" policy.

2. Make clean cut decisions. Life demands that we make decisions every day. Some decisions concern themselves with little things as, for example, shall I drink a glass of water now. But there are more important decisions, as for example, shall I go to college. There are many people who worry much about decisions they have made. If one has bought a pair of new shoes, it is poor practice to come home and fret not having bought another pair of shoes instead. Such a concern about our decisions puts a severe strain upon our mental health. Once a decision has been reached, our minds must become free to consider the next problem that needs to be decided.

3. Keep work, play, rest, and exercise in their proper relative proportion. This mental health rule calls for moderation in everything that we do. Overdoing any of the mentioned activities strains the mind. In every community there are those who need to take time to play, or to rest, or to exercise, or to work. An old maxim says, "All work and no play make Jack a dull boy." A dull boy is a boy with a sick mind. It seems so easy for a person to forget to keep work, play, rest and exercise in their relative proper proportions. This mental health rule is very important for good mental health.

4. Do one thing at a time. It has become a very common practice to listen to the radio while reading a book. Mothers in the home attempt to clean house, cook a meal, care for the baby, converse with other members of the family, and listen to some favorite radio program all at the same time. To force the mind to attend to so many fields of interest is putting an undue strain upon it. Our minds, like machines, can be overtaxed.

5. Develop a sense of the ridiculous. Everyone meets trying situations. These situations are trying because they are not easily solved. If the car is stuck in the mud, a person can become tremendouly aroused with anger and fear. Many do so. But such a situation can be viewed with laughter. Seldom can a situation become so bad but that it presents some aspects that are ridiculous and hence funny. Laughing when stuck in the mud does just as well as fuming with rage as far as getting the car out of the mud, besides, laughing releases any feelings of tension. There seems to be a close relationship between a happy and a healthy mind.

6. Recognize that your problem is fundamentally the same as everybody elses. Have you ever heard somebody speak like this? "Nobody knows what I have gone through." or "Nobody knows how it feels." People who talk like that feel very sorry for themselves. Such people do not speak the truth, for there are countless people in the world, maybe in every com-

What About Universal Military Training?

In 1940, with Europe in the throes of another war, France over-run by Hitler's troops, England receiving telling air-raid blows, North Africa the scene of a running battle, the United States Congress enacted for the first time in the history of this country a conscription program for American youth during "peace-time." It was fifteen months before the United States entered the combat. It was a preparedness measure.

In 1948, almost two and a half years after the shooting war ceased, while the former enemy lies helpless under the heal of their victors and the former allies now have begun to view each other with suspicion and fear, again this country is asked to enact a tremendous program of Universal Military Training. Although the 1940 Selective Service Act was the first "peace-time" conscription, the present proposal stands out even more clearly as a "peace-time" measure. There are minor skirmishes in various parts of the world underway today, but no major battles as there were during the gloomy summer of 1940.

A Program in Your Church on U.M.T.

Because a measure such as the U. M. T. bill if enacted would so deeply affect young people in each community and church, the Young People's Union, through the National Service Board and the service of Paul Goering in Washington, D. C., has made available a literature packet. This packet is for a program or discussion in your church on U. M. T. It can be used according to the discretion of the leader in your church, perhaps, as a special forum with a number of churches joining together, perhaps as a special study for young people personally affected, perhaps as a Sunday evening church program.

If your youth leader does not receive a packet by the end of January, he can contact Paul Goering, National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 941 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington 1, D. C., and obtain a packet from him.

The Mennonite church has never made political matters a major concern in its faith and life. At the same time, political matters have enormously and deeply affected the faith and life of the Mennonite church. The long history of persecution, migration, suffering, with-drawal from one country to another is sufficient to indicate the depth with which poiltical matters have affected and colored its faith and life. Although the Mennonite church has not functioned primarily as a political body nor made political matters her major concern, there were numerous times in her 400 years that she was gravely concerned over developments and events in this world's state system.

It is so again today. Th effects of compulsory military training in Switzerland, Germany, Holland, and Russia are enough to cause anyone interested in the spiritual welfare of youth to pause and think. The present Universal Military Training bill proposes to take young men between the ages of seventeen and twenty-one into a year's training for military purposes. This is the age when young people have not yet had the chance to arrive fully at and develop their own convictions; it is the age when they begin to feel freedom from parental dominance and tend toward action based on impulse rather than experience. During the recent war, when the age limit was lowered, the proportion of men entering C.P.S. likewise lessened. Many men, who at the age of seventeen to twenty-one would make one decision, would at the age of twenty-one to twenty-five make a different decision. There is reason for grave concern when a bill such as the Univeral Military Training Bill confronts our country.

A Young People's Problem

What is the Christian answer to Universal Military Training? What is the mind of young people in each of the local churches on such training? What do we know about the Universal Military bill? How can we express to congressmen Christian concern about this grave matter?

It is with questions such as these that the Young People's Union executive committee grappled. A decision was reached to make every effort to inform, confront, and aid each local church youth group with material on Universal Military Training. In light of this, Paul Goering, Mennonite representative on the National Service Board, Washington, D. C., has arranged to send to each youth group leader in the local churches a packet of literature which may be used in a program or a discussion group presenting the facts about the present bill before Congress. This packet of literature may be used at the local leader's discretion. It may be used for a Sunday evening meeting, a special meeting with the young people the bill would involve, a general church meeting, or a special forum composed of representatives from several churches in the community.

The need to be informed and to begin to crystallize opinion is before the youth of our church. Will the church let them down?

MISSIONARIES IN HIDING

That there are times when a Christian must apparently go into hiding but if he does his sufferings and privations become the seed for a greater church, is a thought beautifully brought out in some of the stories in Jacob H. Janzen's book TALES FROM MENNONITE HISTORY, available at your Conference book stores.

Some Objections to Military Training

The American Veterans' Committee at their national convention in Des Moines, Iowa, in June, 1946, passed the following resolution: "We are opposed to universal compulsory military training in time of peace."

The Catholic War Veterans' stand on compulsory military training was printed in the January, 1947, issue of The Catholic War Veteran. Excerpt follows: "Compulsory military training has long been tried by the nations of Europe and always found to be wanting. Such a program is not compatible with the ideals and traditions of the American way of life. Our national strength is nourished on the firm foundation of the American home, and the training there received by our youths. Any program which tends to disrupt that foundation should receive thorough and critical consideration."

The UAW-CIO Veterans' Conference, a group representing 213,000 veterans, at its meeting in Washington, D. C., Jan. 30-31, 1947, passed the following resolution: " . . . Therefore Be it Resolved: That the UAW-CIO Veterans' Conference go on record as opposing(1) any form of compulsory universal military training, and (2) the extension of the Selective Service Act, and be it finally resolved: That we call on the United Nations Council to adopt these principles in their program of world disarmament as a step toward permanent peace."

The National Grange Convention, meeting Nov. 21, 1946, in Portland, Oregon, passed the following resolution despite the presence of high-ranking military officers sent to secure a resolution favoring conscription: "Be it resolved that the National Grange reaffirm the action taken at the 1945 session held in Kansas City that the National Grange oppose compulsory universal military training during peacetime."—From Conscription News April 24, 1947.

Why Oppose U.M.T.

When one takes a position on a social issue, he often finds himself in fellowship with a great variety of people with whom he previously had no association. There are those Christians who sincerely and soberly took the position of participation in military service. They used a great variety of arguments, in all sincerity, to make their position valid — that as Christians they needed to minister to those in need of Christ in the army, that theirs was a choice of a lesser of two evils — the other choice being the victory of the enemy, that the enemy was the equivalent of an anti-Christ and therefore must be quelled, etc. As military men wearing the uniform, they found as their bedfellows a cross-section of humanity — from Hitler to the local saloon-bibber to the sons of the best and most prominent people in town. They all accepted the same philosophy of solving differences by the military method.

There are those who criticize the position of the conscientious objector to war because of his bed-fellows. In like manner, he finds himself to be a part of a great conglomeration of people who for a great variety of reasons oppose war and conscription. There are anarchists, wild-eyed idealists and utopians, Biblical legalists, draft dodgers, and those who in all sobriety find themselves conscience bound to take such a stand. Let the fact not be blinked that there are a great variety of people taking the same position but for a variety of reasons.

There is no reason for us to be aloof to the positions others take. We can learn from them, and we trust that they can learn from us. The central and traditional reason for the Mennonite church to stand in opposition to things military, including Universal Military Training, is that such a program stands directly cross-wise to the spirit, teachings, and way of life set before us in Jesus Christ through the New Testament. For this reason the opposition of the Mennonite church is not willful; we can do no other! The opposition is not critical of those who have other viewpoints. It stands in and of itself as the Christian way, the Christian walk of redemptive love and forgiveness of those who oppose us personally, as a people, or as a nation.

Oversold on U.M.T.

The newspapers have been giving a very great amount of space to the question of Universal Military Training. The great weight of the publicity has been in favor of such a program. During the first seven months of 1947 The Washington Post, outstanding paper in Washington D. C., carried twenty-six front-page items which dealt with universal military training. Of these, only one was an anti-conscription item. When it is remembered that eighty-one national organizations, as listed in the boxed item on this page, are registered as opposed to such training, the lopsided emphasis of the newspapers becomes evident as exemplified by The Washington Post.

The Washington Post, according to Marc Hill of Washington, D. C., in the Gospel Messenger, has made use of what the Institute for Propaganda Analysis called the "card stacking device." The one who uses this device "stacks the cards against truth," the Institute said. "He uses underemphasis and overemphasis to dodge issues and evade facts . . . .

By the card stacking device, a mediocre candidate,

Opposed to Universal Military Training

- 18 national educational groups
- 33 national religious groups
- 4 national farm groups
- 12 national labor groups
- 4 national veteran's organizations
- 17 national civic organizations through the 'build-up,' is made to appear an intellectual titan; an ordinary prize fighter a probable world champion; a worthless patent medicine a beneficent cure."

There is without a doubt trememdous sentiment favoring a program of Universal Military Training. But, when the newspapers refuse to recognize as news the fact that leading national religious bodies opposed such training and at the same time gave front page space to the Daughters of the American Revolution when they went on record in favor, the news is lopsided. It is well that those who are quickly ready to give up, remember there are others who likewise have serious doubts about Universal Military Training.

munity, that have experienced a similar thing. Trying situations or experiences are hard to bear, but the recognition that others in this world also experience tragedies can serve as a great comfort. No experiences can ever be as tragic as those we hear people in Europe suffer again and again.

7. When a decision has been reached, when something has to be done, waste no time mobilizing extra energy—do it. This rule pertains to the problem of facing unpleasant situations. Don't postpone them, face them. Postponing them is to fill the mind with worry. If you have decided to speak to a person and apologize for an unkind word spoken, do so.

"When a mother, whose husband is in Siberia and who has lost two of her six children through starvation, can gather her brood about her on the eve of her arrival among friends and sing, "'Nun danket alle Gott' then we begin to understand that there are riches which far exceed those measured by estate, or gold, or property. When mothers and fathers, who lie awake at night because they cannot answer the questions: 'What will we eat?' 'How will we clothe our children?' face those burdens with Him who has promised to supply all our needs, it becomes for me as a relief worker a challenge that shames my own small faith." (Germany)

> "You have heard that it was said, 'An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.' But I say to you, Do not resist one who is evil. But if any one strikes you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also; and if any one would sue you and take your coat, let him have your cloak as well; and if any one forces you to go one mile, go with him two miles." Matt. 5:38—41 (Revised Standard Version)

> "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.' But I say to you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for he makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the just and on the unjust." Matt. 5:43-45 (Revised Standard Version.)

> And one of them, a lawyer, asked him a question, to test him. "Teacher, which is the great commandment in the law?" And he said to him, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second is like it, You shall love your neighbor as yourself. On these two commandments depend all the law and the prophets." Matt. 22:35-40 (Revised Standard Version)

"Spiritual Multiplication"

"There is a small boy here that hath five loaves of bread and two small fishes, But what are they among so many?" — John 6:9

A small boy, we've told, who had tucked away
Five small loaves of bread, 'case long were his stay,
His hunger to still with meat for the day.
But Jesus had need for it, so as to say.

"Oh, give them to eat; shall we go and buy!
They asked this of Him, but help was so nigh!
Oh, yes He can multiply times and again
The five loaves of bread for five thousand men!

The baskets of crumbs picked up, and behold,
The fishes but two. But now we are told
'Twas enough for them all. Oh, will you agree?
They were multiplied over again as you see.

But now if we hear, "Oh, give them to eat;
There are hundreds and hundreds crying for meat,"
Can He not still multiply as by the sea?
He still is the same, you will agree,

If but we, like the boy, would freely give all!
Oh, heed what was said: "The fishes were small.
The bread made of barley is all I can bring
You, my Saviour, my Lord, and my King."

Do bless this small offering to suffering men,
Yes, multiply over and over again.
I know it, dear Lord, it was first given to me,
So now I bring gladly this love unto thee.

Paraguay To Gain 1,600 Mennonites

World Refugee Body To Move Minority that Migrated to Russia from Holland

(Reprint of news article appearing in the "New York Times," January 1, 1948)

Geneva, January 1 — Some 1,600 Russian Mennonite refugees, descendants of a people who have been wanderers for 400 years, will be moved from German camps to Paraguay early this year by the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization.

The latest migration of this often-persecuted religious group has been made possible because of the painstaking research of a Netherland girl staff member, Johanna Hogerzeil. She established that the refugees were of Netherland rather than of German ethnic origin. The refugee organization cannot under its constitution resettle persons of German ethnic origin.

About 10,000 Mennonites were swept into Germany from Russia with the retreating German armies. They were the remains of the once large colonies that migrated to Russia in the late eighteenth century, when they were encouraged to come by Catherine II. Their advanced agricultural methods made them specially desirable colonists at a time when vast unsettled areas of the Russian steppes were being colonized by the Imperial Government.

Under the Soviet regime the Mennonites were at first allowed to continue their separate communal religious life. In the last ten years, however, many of their ancient privileges have been over-ridden, and thousands were executed or sent to Siberia during the purges of the Nineteen Thirties.

Because the Mennonites entered Russia from Germany in the eighteenth century, most of them have names apparently of German origin. Miss Hogerzeil, however, remembered having read something about the Mennonites' origin in the Netherlands and Friesland (at that time one of the several provinces later to become the United Netherlands) in the sixteenth century.

On a special trip to Amsterdam early this year, she tracked down in the garret of an old church a doctor's thesis that pointed the way to indisputable sources proving the non-German origin of the Russian colonists.

Their wanderings began when, in the middle sixteenth century, religious persecution by Spain, which then governed the Low Countries, forced the Mennonites to emigrate. They settled in northeast Germany, around Marienburg and Danzig, where for 200 years they prospered as farmers, using the Low Countries' methods to drain swamps and to reclaim lands.

The Mennonites' survival as a group distinct enough to justify special IRO treatment has been owing to the extremely severe religious community rules prohibiting marriage outside the group, and perpetuating group cohesiveness in other ways.

There is already a colony of Mennonites in Paraguay, as well as colonies in Nebraska, Kansas, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Manitoba, British Columbia and Ontario. As has often been done in past centuries, the older residents will play host to the newcomers, and a new chapter in the history of a proud, independent people will begin.

NOTE: The Mennonite Aid Section on September 9, 1947, submitted a petition to the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization for the purpose of securing its assistance in moving another group of Mennonite refugees to South Ameri-

THERE IS AN ALTERNATIVE

If Americans will do more thinking on how the Russians see us, then the chances for peace will be improved. How do the Russians see us?

Russia is a great imprisoned land giant which has never had all-weather access to the seas for trade or military purposes. The U. S. navy bosses the waters to the extent that from the Mediterranean U. S. bombers could range over western Russia. American bases in the Arctic, the Atlantic and Pacific are considered by the Russians as a menace to their cities. Russia has not jumped to Cuba, Trinidad, and Newfoundland and planted bases there. What must Russia think of U.S. motives?

We have atomic bombs. In preference to the American plan for the control of atomic energy, Russia insists that the atomic bomb and other means of mass destruction be outlawed and then plans for the peaceful development of atomic energy be made. Why should not the U. S. agree to outlaw the bomb if Russia would agree to full inspection of all her atomic plants?

How must U. S. interest in peace appear to the Russians when congress is unwilling to set aside $17 billion dollars for a four-year European recovery program, while spending around $11 billion every year for military preparedness? Where must Russia think we put the greater reliance? According to a New York Times study Russia's military budget is only about one-half of ours. In face of world suffering how must the Russians look upon this use of money?

The administration and the military forces of the government are pushing for the adoption of peacetime conscription. How else can the Russians view this than a gathering of manpower for war?

The military are reported as infiltrating into civilian government positions as never before. Does this inspire confidence in civilian ways of settling problems? What does Russia think is our motive for rebuilding industry in Germany and Japan? What about all the talk of "containment" of Russia?

Must not Russia feel that America is convinced that war must come? Can Russia feel that America is vitally interested in her welfare? What kind of a mental picture must Russians draw if they picture America having its way with her?

It is hardly necessary to say that Russia is more feared than loved by Americans. Yet saying it helps to sharpen the point that as long as Americans do not love, they will continue to fear. The Christian faith declares that loves casts out fear. It is natural for many Americans to fear, for we do not clearly comprehend an alternative to the fear-war way of dealing with people. Yet the Christian faith declares that that alternative is there. Faith in God as Creator declares it. As men see each other's points of view, they become aware of elements in each one's way of life that can be harmonized in new creation. Is it possible that rugged individualism and regimented socialism have nothing to learn from each other? Or are we come to a time in history when something is to be learned and the Christian way of love is the best way of learning it? (The first two-thirds or so of the above editorial are based on the article "As the Russians See Us" in the "Christian Century" of January 7, 1948.)—the Editor

A CHRISTIAN WORLD VIEW

One of the most popular subjects for discussion in our day is the question, "What is the individual and collective destiny of mankind?" In this endeavor we see an attempt to formulate a new "philosophy of history." In this struggle for a clue to the meaning of history, the Christian is as much concerned as anyone, for unless the Christian world view can interpret history in a meaningful way, it has little to say to mankind in its troubled world.

One of the great distinguishing features about the Christian interpretation of history, as opposed to other religions and philosophies, is that it has never tried to obviate or deny the existence of evil or evil forces in history.

Rather, Christianity has always realized what a tremendously powerful force evil is in history, and it has believed that only a redeeming love could overcome it. It is this realism which gives meaning and strength to the Christian interpretation of life and history.

The job of giving meaning to our individual and collective histories is by no means a simple or easy task. Our lives individually and collectively are filled with many strange and perplexing paradoxes.

The Christian interpretation of life alone seems best fitted to answer these perplexities by its realistic facing of the problems of evil and its undying faith in the power of Christian love to overcome this evil.—(Mr. Wiebe is an accountant—with seminary training—who lives in Chicago. The Mennonite Central Committee, a World-wide Spiritual Influence

IT was during 1919 and the early months of 1920 that a call for help came from the famine-stricken Mennonites of Russia. The brotherhood in America was moved to help in this time of need, and the relief committees of the various Mennonite groups began to plan and organize for the sending of aid. However, it was soon apparent that this great work could be done more effectively if all the groups would coordinate their efforts through one common agency. Consequently, a meeting was held on September 27, 1920, and the following resolution was officially adopted: "Resolved that we, the representatives of the several branches of the Mennonites assembled at Elkhart, Indiana, this twenty-seventh day of July, 1920, deem it well and desirable to create a Mennonite Central Committee whose duties shall be to function with and for the several relief committees of the Mennonites in taking charge of all gifts for South Russia, in making all purchases of suitable articles for relief work, and in providing for the transportation and equitable distribution of the same." Under this organization a program of relief and reconstruction was set up which continued until 1925.

Paraguay Colonization

The next period of MCC activity began in 1930 when a large number of Mennonites found it necessary to flee from Russia for the sake of religious freedom. Again the Mennonites of America stood ready to help and through the Mennonite Central Committee arrangements were made to finance and direct the immigration to Paraguay of all those Mennonite refugees who could not secure admittance to Canada. This movement to Paraguay included a total of about 2,000 people together with basic equipment for settlement.

World War II Period

The coming of the second world war brought about certain conditions which again called for the united effort of the Mennonite groups. In 1940 the Selective Service System was adopted, one provision of which required that young men conscientiously opposed to military service must serve instead in work of national importance under civilian direction. The Mennonite groups designated the Mennonite Central Committee as the agency to administer the camps to which Mennonite young men would be assigned. This Civilian Public Service program continued until March, 1947, when the draft law was terminated.

The war also brought devastation and impoverishment to many countries in Europe, the Near East and the Far East, causing suffering to millions of people. The Mennonite groups felt that it was a Christian duty and opportunity to undertake again the work of relief among the needy. In this large relief program, our people have contributed to date slightly over two million dollars worth of food, clothing, and other supplies in addition to large amounts of cash contributions. A total of 473 workers have volunteered to serve abroad in the administration of this program. These workers have served in the following 18 different countries of the world: China, India, The Philippines, Ethiopia, Poland, Denmark, Hungary, Germany, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, Holland, Paraguay, Puerto Rico, and Java. In a number of these countries the work has changed from immediate war sufferers' relief to that of reconstruction and rehabilitation. In other countries, particularly Central Europe and the Far East, there continue to be very acute relief needs.

Another problem which came about because of the war was that of refugees. Among the millions of displaced peoples in Europe about ten thousand Mennonites have been located and contacted in Germany, Austria, Holland, and Denmark. Most of these had been residents of Eastern Germany, Prussia or Russia prior to the war. When gigantic military drives moved to and fro over the area, these people were forced to flee for safety, losing virtually all of their earthly possessions and in many cases their families and friends. The MCC has assisted in caring for these people in temporary camps and has also taken steps to help them migrate to new homelands. In February, 1947, a group of 2,305 were taken to Paraguay aboard the Volendam. Quite a number of individual persons have been able to enter Canada to join close relatives and a few have been able to come to the United States. Further steps are being planned to help still more of these refugees who remain in Europe.

Basic Philisophy

The Mennonite Central Committee endeavors to serve "In the Name of Christ." It does not compete for a prominent place among the larger relief agencies. Its purpose rather is to help the neediest of the needy regardless of race or creed and especially to do this with a spiritual emphasis.

The entire program is made up of three distinct parts each of which is essential to the work; material aid contributed by our people, consecrated workers willing to go abroad to distribute this material aid, and money contributions from our people to finance the work. It is felt that this program has made and is making a distinctive contribution through this spiritual emphasis even though the total value of the material distributed is small in comparison with the needs.

"The disciplined young Marine faces overwhelming odds in terrifying combat, but unflinchingly he writes with his own blood the communique of victory.

"The conscientious objector writes as brave a passage before the lurid, glowering rage of sheltered brass-hats and bigwigs. He knows intimately and painfully the lonely path that those must travel who dare to live above propaganda in the white light of an unyielding conviction. Where did he learn to be so courageous? Well, one day he met the Son of man, and he inscribed into the youthful heart, 'Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the sons of God.' What matter then what the militarists call him."—The Covenant Weekly.

ca. The Akron office and Bro. C. F. Klassen since that time made continuous efforts to secure IRO's approval of the project. About a month ago, we received written assurance from PCIRO that ocean transportation would be provided for 1,600 of our people from Northwestern Europe to Buenos Aires.

We did not announce this publicly, because we felt IRO should make the announcement when they were prepared to do so. IRO has now announced publicly their plan to take our 1,600 Mennonites to South America; we enclose herewith a copy of a news item appearing in the January 1, 1948, NEW YORK TIMES. The Dutch ethnical origin question upon which the eligibility of our Mennonite people depended was first established over a year ago when the Mennonite Central Committee applied to the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees for assistance in moving the VOLENDAM group. The doctoral thesis referred to in the news item was first located by Dutch Mennonite scholars who assisted in searching for materials to substantiate the case for Dutch ethnical origin.

It should be remembered that the North American brotherhoods through the Mennonite Central Committee will be responsible for this group of 1,600 on arrival in Buenos Aires and for their river transportation from Buenos Aires to Paraguay. We will also be responsible for the long-term resettlement of these people. This entire resettlement program was discussed at the MCC meetings on January 9 and 10.

John S. Raugh, Home Mission Worker, Dies

On Sunday morning, December 21, 1947, Rev. John S. Raugh, East Freedom, Pa., preached the annual Christmas sermon at the Smith Corner Mennonite church and taught the Sunday school lesson to the Adult Class, as was his custom, not realizing that these would be his last words to his flock. Soon after dinner a heart attack overtook him, and by 4:15 P. M. the shepherd was taken from the flock.

John S. Raugh was born December 2, 1902, near Roaring Spring, Pa. As a young man he made a profession of faith in Christ as Saviour and was received into the Methodist Church.

He was married to Dorothy Fluke in 1923, and a few weeks ago they celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

The death of a daughter, Mary Doris, in 1930, made a deep impression on the father. As a result he gave himself to the Lord anew, and expressed a willingness to serve as minister. At this time Rev. and Mrs. Sylvan S. Lehman had taken over the work in Smith Corner Mennonite Church. The two men became friends. Mr. Raugh became interested in the Smith Corner Church. He did not have much formal education, but he was a devout student of the Word, and this coupled with a natural gift for preaching made him a speaker of interest and power because his messages were built on Holy Scripture.

In 1934 he was licensed to preach by the Eastern District Conference. On May 6, 1935, he was appointed to the Smith Corner Church by the Board of Home Missions, after Rev. Lehman had been transferred to another field. On July 22, 1935, Rev. W. S. Gottshall, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions, ordained him as Elder. Ever since he has faithfully served this congregation.

In the fall of 1939 the Board of Home Missions sent Rev. Raugh to visit the Western District Conference. He spoke on Home Missions at the Conference and visited and spoke in many churches in the District.

Rev. Raugh assisted in the organization of the Blair County Ministerial Association, and for several years served as one of the officers. He was a staunch supporter of the local Eight District Sabbath School Union. Brotherhood work was his delight, and he had an organization in his church and also helped in neighborhood work. Brother Raugh served in various capacities on different committees in the Eastern District Conference.

The departed is survived by his faithful life companion and the following children: Mrs. Edna Mae Fornwalt, Dorcas, Mrs. Maxine Aungst, John J., Schenley and Alma, two grandsons Sammy and Barry besides nine brothers and sisters. Rev. Raugh reached the age of forty-five years and nineteen days.

The funeral service was held December 26 in the Smith Corner Mennonite Church, which was filled to capacity by members, friends and neighbors. The following brethren had a part in the service: Rev. Freeman H. Swartz, Rev. Sylvan S. Lehman, Rev. George Greger, Rev. David Miller, with Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions, in charge. Three ministerial friends from the neighborhood gave words of testimony of their esteem of Brother Raugh.

Before returning to their homes, the ministers and the two deacons of Smith Corner had a meeting, and it was agreed to have Rev. David Miller, pastor of the Roaring Spring Church, to serve the Smith Corner Church, making it a two point charge. — A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions

MINISTER'S RETREAT

To Be Held at

ESTES PARK, COLORADO

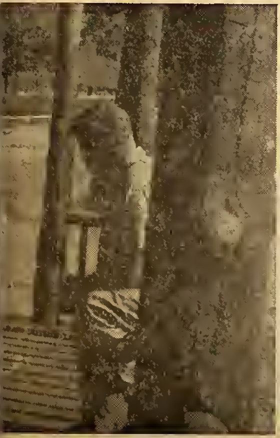
July 29 to August 5, 1948

The Minister's Retreat Committee is happy to announce to all ministers, missionaries and teachers and their families that the Y.M.C.A. conference grounds at Estes Park, Colorado, have been secured for our next summer's retreat, July 29 to August 5.

The committee feels quite fortunate in being able to secure this nationally known vacation spot established specifically for conferences of this nature. Adjoining the Y.M.C.A. grounds is Rocky Mountain National Park which covers 405 square miles of unsurpassed mountain scenery, including sixty-five towering peaks over 10,000 feet high, 150 highland lakes and scores of rushing streams, brooks and waterfalls. These and many other facilities should provide a "mountain top" experience for all who plan to attend.

We trust that July 29 to August 5, will be suitable to a large majority of pastors in our conference. Other organizations in planning for their summer activities may wish to keep these dates in mind, so that their pastors may be free to attend.

Further details concerning the program and rates will appear later.—The Retreat Committee. J. N. Smucker, L. L. Ramseyer, I. I. Friesen, Henry Harder, Ronald von Riesen,



H. J. Brown Reports on Conditions in China

IN the summer of 1941 the Chinese Christians held their last conference at Tamingfu. At that time the heavy burden upon every heart was the Japanese-Chinese war. Some of us, however, saw beyond that war and realized the coming terrible conflict with the Communists. Even from that day on the situation grew worse, until when finally the war came to a close and the Japanese soldiers were sent back to their native land, there began a real conflict between Chinese Communists and Nationalists. During all these years of war the sufferings caused by war and war-devastations, heavy taxes and squeezes, drought and famine were very severe. The people suffered hunger and cold, and a good many perished. Some tried to escape to more tolerable regions. Thousands died on the way for lack of food and on account of exposure to severe winter weather. Everybody seemed economically helpless. The weaker believers fell away from the Church and the Christian faith. The spiritual leaders however faithfully carried on church-worship.

The personal work with souls in their homes became very dangerous, for the officials in power considered this dangerous to their regime. Then too, these workers had to provide for their own existence, since foreign funds had long discontinued coming. For the Chinese Christians to be able to support their ministers under the above mentioned circumstances was simply impossible, much less bearing the expenses of annual conferences. The Japanese were opposed to larger gatherings, and the Communists went even a step further and prohibited all such meetings. For some time the local churches still had liberty to hold worship services. Later even this liberty was taken away from them. Accusations were often brought against the leaders of groups of believers. They were arrested, mocktried, persecuted, tortured, jailed, robbed of all property that they might possess, and many of them were killed. Every village has a list of cruel deaths, and among these are many Christians.

Some people have managed to escape. Many Christians and non-Christian refugees have come here to Kaifeng. The Communists try hard to force all able-bodied persons into service, men and women, some as soldiers, others as forced laborers. Even to-night a young man of twenty-three came into see us. He was pressed into service for the Communist army. In Shangtung the Communists were badly beaten and scattered. The Nationalists took many prisoners. He too was taken. His liberty and life depended upon joining the Nationalist army. He went along for several months, but when he found an opportunity he escaped. Here he is with us now, doing dirt-work and rehabilitating his spiritual faith. His father has been a Christian teacher in our K'ai Chow schools for many years. He too can yet make good, if he gets a second opportunity.

Kaifeng by now has a goodly number of refugee-Christians. A new church has come into existence. Ch'ang Yuan north of the Yellow River has had to bear great trials, but just now the Communist's pressure from the outside is abating, and ten to fifteen miles of country north of the city seems free of Communists, while the regions south and east are under Nationalist control. Tung Ming, lying south of the Yellow River, only once, for two weeks, had Communists in the city. The church and school work here has been greatly revived. In the villages ten evangelists are now at work preaching the way of salvation in Christ Jesus. In the country seekers are formed into groups and taught the way of life. In some places the people are more open than in others, but generally speaking the people are more receptive than they were years ago. The government too breaks down temples and builds school-houses for their children. Under these circumstances many turn to the church for their religous needs. In the Tung Ming church the instruction class has an enrollment of close to fifty inquirers. One of the evangelists yesterday remarked to me: "Formerly the evangelists were more after salary, but we are after souls."

Everybody after these years of suffering, trials and separation felt the need of a spiritual refreshing in conference. The General Committee elected in 1941 was still functioning; but after two members had left for the new mission field in Kansu, only three members remained out of the former nine, for some of them up to this very day are still in the hands of the Communists. Thus the General Committee had dwindled down to an executive committee. We badly needed to reorganize both the annual Conference and in the General Committee. Tung Ming has the largest free church building and also the largest congregation on free soil. We prayed for guidance and we were led to hold our five-day meeting, beginning with November 5, at that place.

For us Kaifeng delegates it meant a truck trip of some eighty miles one way. God was good and merciful, for He gave us nice sunny days both ways; but the truckmen were different. They thought only of themselves and how to enlarge their pockets. Going home, for instance, after they had loaded more than five thousand pounds of old iron, they loaded fifty some passengers on top, and some were actually on top of each other. Such are not pleasure trips, but our pleasure and our joy were in once more meeting the former Christian friends and together being strengthened in our common faith. I was a little afraid for myself and even for Maria that the trip would turn out too tough, but praise the Lord for traveling mercies! We can now relax and rest. We certainly have had a wonderful time with our fellow Christians. The messages brought by Rev. Chang Ching, myself, and the prayer-meetings all brought great spiritual blessings to all. Things have been organized too. The conference has new officers, and our General Committee now has again nine strong members. We are confident that from now on the church work of the five counties in which we are now active will go on with new courage and new zeal.

The government officials promise us that by the beginning of the new year the regions north of the Yellow River shall be cleared of Communists. Whether this will really come to pass is too early to judge. Sometimes in the waiting one is inclined to run into doubt and almost despair. God can and in His own time will send deliverance.

Then here is the Hopei mission field with much to praise God for and still more to pray for. Think of your home community without a single church open, no weddings, no funerals, your ministers, deacons, Sunday school teachers and many other prominent Christian leaders arrested, tortured and even killed, your property confiscated, taxes and levies often demanding your whole crop, your children forced into Communist service, your wives given to men, and you being comcompelled to leave wife and small children and to go to a strange village and a strange home. This is what we have in Communist occupied territory. You need to pray for the deliverance of our mission field from the cruel hand of this satanic force!

BETHEL COLLEGE

P. R. Kaufman will be able to return to his teaching duties in Industrial Arts when classwork is resumed on January 7. During his long illness his classes, which moved into the new Farm-Shop building for the second quarter, were in charge of his assistant, John Loewen. The Galen Koehn family moved during Christmas vacation into their newly-completed apartment on North Campus. The remodeling and brick facing on Elm Cottage is progressing as weather permits, with the plan to have the building ready for occupancy by next quarter. A number of new sidewalks have been laid on the campus and, under the direction of the Town Council, the campus streets have been resurfaced and new street lights installed. Faculty and staff members taking part in the town organization of North Newton include J. H. Doell, C. B. Goering, W. H. Hohmann, L. C. Kreider, and J. J. Voth.

The Chicago Little Philharmonic Orchestra Memorial Hall number which was to be given on March 2 will be given on Tuesday, January 20, at 8 P.M., instead.

Jottings

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: The climax of the Young People's New Year Party, under the leadership of their recreational director, Rev. Walter. H. Dyck, was a half hour of music appreciation. Such pieces as the "Hallelujah Chorus" by Handel, "The Unfinished Symphony" by Schubert and others were presented with appropriate remarks made by our choir director, Wm. J. Regier.—Mrs. Louis A. Janzen, Corr.

—Newport Church, Newport, Washington: Five Bible school students had charge of the morning worship on December 21. They brought a message from God's Word in song and testimony. This year at the Christmas program we did not have sacks for everyone but only for the children. A collection for relief was held instead. This amounted to $80. The choir, under the able direction of Rev. Rudolph Schmidt, gave the cantata, "The Great Light."—Mrs. Henry Hiebert, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Fortuna, Missouri: On December 28 the Men's Gospel Team Quartet of Bluffton College gave an interesting program. Stuart Lehman gave a message and Richard Baum played the marimba. Rev. Paul Shelly accompanied the group. On December 14 the twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. Eli Bucher gave a message in word and song. The fiftieth wedding of Eli Buchers was celebrated on this day, and on December 21, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Hofstetter had open house in observance of their golden wedding day; more than 200 guests called to wish them well. Wm. Loganbill, aged seventy-eight, was laid to rest in the Bethel Cemetery on December 18.—Mrs. Joe Lehman, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Lustre, Montana: Rev. Andrew Shelly of Kitchener, Ontario, and representative of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, visited our church on December 11. On December 14 the Lustre Bible Academy gave a Christmas program, and the same evening the girls' dormitory at the academy was dedicated. Our missionary, Miss Anna Baerg, has returned to the Hopi-Indian mission field in Arizona. Our Mission Society sent a number of mending and shoe repair kits to the M.C.C. Can You Beat It?

Can you beat it? What? Buying such a valuable book, as TWENTY-FIVE YEARS WITH GOD IN INDIA, at such a price, only $1? To get so much for so little?

Here is a book of one hundred illustrations, 250 pages, 50,000 words, plus charts, a map, and stiff board cloth cover, for ONLY ONE DOLLAR? Such a book produced today would probably cost $3.50. When I was in Winona Lake during the summer, I saw many of the books marked up, e.g. from $3 to $3.75. But this book has been marked down to the ridiculously price of ONE DOLLAR.

Though it is not a recent book, it is still brimful of valuable information AND inspiration, and EVERY library, EVERY Sunday school, EVERY acedemy, Bible school and college SHOULD MAKE SURE that they have it on their shelves. Only 110 copies remain unsold. Within a year's time it likely will be sold out.

The first printing of WITH CHRIST ON THE EDGE OF THE JUNGLES, made in India, was sold out twelve weeks after it was off the press.—if one reckons as sold those sent from India to America. It is granted that this is not quite true of the stock in the United States. Of the second printing, made in America, only 250 remain unsold. A brother recently ordered 133 at a single order to supply a book club. Me thinks I ought to take 100 copies to meet the market demands in India and elsewhere. If so, only 150 will remain of the second printing. Price ONLY ONE DOLLAR!

Again a word to the wise ought be sufficient: get this book NOW for your library,—at home, in the Sunday School in the Church, in the Bible school, in the academy, in the college. Get it NOW or else it may not be gotten at all, after one year's time.

Both of the above can be gotten from any Mennonite Book Store—While they last!

My host in a Canadian city was a linotypist. In his hands he held a copy of the pamphlet JANJ-GIR, published by the Literature Committee of the Women's Missionary Society, 722 Main Street Newton, Kansas. When he examined the quality of the paper, the covers, the number of pictures, he was surprised when I told him it cost only twenty cents. He said, "We can't beat that" up here. To publish it here would cost considerably more. So—order JANJ-GIR NOW. Some hundreds have recently been sold. Every missionary society officer and every mission friend ought to have a copy.—S. T. Moyer

Our readers will surely wonder why two different features in the same issue under the same title. The reason is, that the ways of God are past finding out!

On December 10, in the office at Newton, the text for the feature in the upper right-hand corner was being dictated to the stenographer in the General Conference Headquarters Office under the title, "Can You Beat That?" That same day in Pandora, Ohio, Missionary S. T. Moyer was writing a letter to Reverend Reynold Weinbrenner, typing up the manuscript in the upper left-hand corner, under the title, "Can You Beat This?" He then struck out the word, "This," and changed it to "It." These two manuscripts arrived on the desk of Reynold

If you are an artist, will you please look at the above heading carefully.

The Board of Publication is planning to revise the above heading which is used as the title for our children's paper. THE JUNIOR MESSENGER. We have had a number of suggestions made, none of which exactly suit us. Would you like to try your hand at it? Why not sit down and see what you can do! Your design should be prepared in jet black ink approximately the same proportions as given in the sample above. We would like to receive something that suggests children at play or at work or at worship but the lines should be less intricate, plenty of white space, with simplicity as the dominant key-note in the entire design. All designs submitted will become the property of the Board of Publication. A prize of $5 will be offered for the one which is selected for permanent use in the JUNIOR MESSENGER. Weinbrenner, Editor of THE MENNONITE, approximately the same day. Neither the Publication Office nor Missionary Moyer knew that the other was writing a manuscript, both for publicity purposes, both on material of particular interest to our General Conference readers, and both for appearance in THE MENNONITE, and both specifying, "Any time it is convenient" for the editor.

Experiences such as these make one very thoughtful and perhaps they should make the readers also thoughtful—thoughtful of what they read, thoughtful of what they should read, thoughtful of the writers in the Conference who share with them their best thinking, thoughtful of the editors, thoughtful of the printers and all others who are associated directly with the work of General Conference publications—but thoughtful!

The most unusual part of this tree is that it has a small music box, which when wound up, plays three children's Christmas songs. Many children have enjoyed the tree and the music each Christmas. PACIFIC DISTRICT PEACE COMMITTEE MEETS

The Peace Committee of the Pacific District Conference met in Portland, Oregon, on December 29. Members of the committee are Luke J. Horsch, chairman; Rufus M. Franz, secretary; and Rev. Clyde J. Dirks. This was a mid-conference-year meeting of this committee and necessitated that Brother Horsch come from Ontario, California, and Brother Franz from Eugene, Oregon. Among items of business considered was the progress of the MCC mental hospital work in the West, peace education in the conference, and the specific peace program of the district conference. Rev. Paul N. Roth, vice-president of the conference, was also in attendance and represented the executive committee.

Concern was raised that the conference officials again urge our constituency to contact their Congressmen laying before them the concern of our people in their opposition to the universal military service legislation. A resolution opposing universal military conscription was passed at the last session of the conference in Albany, Oregon. Plans were also discussed to further peace education by forum discussions, written articles, and young people's discussion groups. The churches are urged to make the peace teaching permeate all of the phases of the Christian life. The district conference ministers are going to be contacted for frank suggestions on how they can help the peace committee and how the young people can best be reached. These suggestions should be very valuable in determining the activities of the committee.

Brother Luke J. Horsch and Brother Rufus M. Franz are also members of the General Conference Peace Committee. The latter gave a report of his attendance at the October 17 meeting of the General Conference Peace Committee in Chicago and the Peace Section meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee. Brother Franz presented a paper at the latter meeting entitled, "Education for Peace in Our Churches."

Lansdale Church Dedicates 362 Bibles

In response to a suggestion made by the General Conference Laymen's Committee, in it's effort to supply Bibles for use in war-torn areas, the Brotherhood of Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa., assisted it's pastor, Rev. J. J. Plenert, in arranging a project whereby groups and individual members might buy Bibles for this cause and bring them for public dedication at a special service on Universal Bible Sunday, December 14.

At this impressive service, 362 Bibles were brought to the altar for dedication by individual members of the whole family, from little tots to elderly grandparents, each carrying their copy of the Scriptures.

The Bibles were purchased by a laymen's committee, in one lot, for the donors. Funds were deposited with our Treasury in Newton, Kansas, for this purpose. All but a few were in the German Language, others Dutch and Greek. They are to be distributed by the Mennonite Central Committee in Europe and among our colonists in Paraguay, South America. A recent letter from the M. C. C. reports that the Bibles are already packed and on their way to their final destination.

Quite fittingly, our guest speaker was none other than Dr. P. C. Hiebert, Chairman of the M. C. C. In dedicating these copies of Holy Scripture, Rev. Plenert once again pointed out that above and beyond the physical needs of suffering men lies a greater spiritual need, which can only be met by a knowledge of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. We may therefore praise God for the opportunity of adding spiritual food which brings hope and faith, to our gifts of food and clothing. Are we not told in Matthew 4:4 that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"?—John E. Fretz, Secretary General Conference Laymen's Organizaton.

H. J. BROWN CONVEYS THANKS

Kaifeng, Honan, China, December 29, 1947.—Through the pages of The Mennonite I wish to reach some of our relief friends. The M.C.C. unit here turned over to us some of the Christmas packages for our Sunday School here. We ourselves greatly appreciated these nice large and very valuable bundles. Such bundles truly are a demonstration of Christian love. In the name of all our S. S. pupils we want to thank you very heartily. The pupils were all overflowing with joy, when they received these gifts. Since many of our pupils were older than the age-mark on the packages, Mrs. Brown and I tried to readjust some of them. But even some of the clothes were too small for a pupil, he had a smaller brother anxious to receive. We noticed that some packages contained an envelope for a return letter: but some of these children were far too small to write a letter. Those that can write know only Chinese, which would not have been very intelligible to the giver. Foreign postage on one letter costs only $30,000. So taking everything together it was not convenient for them to write. You of course realize that for us to write individually to every donor would require much time, say nothing of the stamps needed. So please take this as a personnal letter of thanks and God bless you to you!—Yours for Christ's service, H. J. and Maria Brown.

things are possible with God, including peace and world order. We reject the idea of the inevitability of war and policies predicated upon that assumption. We oppose the increase in our military establishment, especially the program of universal military training for our youth. We favor the immediate release of the seven hundred or more conscientious objectors who even two years after the end of the war have not been freed by the government. In a time when atomic energy opens up such awful possibilities of destruction and such momentous possibilities of creative living, we seek to focus the mind of America on the

It is very necessary that the people and their representatives think and talk in terms of peace, states the National Council Against Conscription. The Council suggests that you do either or both of the following: 1. Telephone three friends asking them to write today to their Congressmen giving their reason for opposing compulsory military training. 2. Invite a small group to your home for a discussion of peacetime conscription and for writing letters to your congressman. It also suggests that letters to Congress should include the suggestion that the U. M. T. bill be sent back to Committee for further hearings.

Second, each adult class elects an associate leader, who leads the class on the first Sunday of every month, and takes charge on any other Sunday when the regular leader may be absent. The Annual Fellowship Banquet was held December 29. About 157 attended. Rev. Ronald von Riesen of Newton, Kansas, was the main speaker. The Intermediate C. E. sponsored a Young People's Watch Service preceded with a social on December 31.—Mrs. John J. Wiebe, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: The congregation surprised their pastor with a Christmas gift of cash to cover the cost of the piano which the Claassens recently purchased. It was decided that the offering received at the Christmas Eve program be given towards paying passage for refugees. The offering amounted to $516. Rev. Marvin Dirks and the Seminary Quartet will favor us with a program on the evening of December 28. In the evening of New Year's day, the Bluffton College Gospel Team will bring a program. We look forward with keen anticipation to both of these musical programs.—Corr.

—First Church, Summerfield, Illinois: For our Christmas program, the young people presented the pageant, "The Road to Bethlehem." On December 28, the Bluffton College Gospel Team presented the morning services. The church was full, and every one who attended received a blessing from the music and sermon which was given by the men.—Kathryn Ruth, Corr.

—First Church, Fredonia, Kansas: Our plan for a church of our own has materialized since the group purchased a nice school building which was new in 1941. About December 1, we began digging the basement on two lots in Fredonia. Although the church is far from being completed, we are having our services in it regularly. Rev. W. F. Sunday morning two young people were baptized. In the afternoon the members partook of the Holy Communion served by Rev. Unruh. In the evening the group enjoyed a Christmas program followed by a social.—Mrs. Alvin Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church, Colfax, Washington: The grand total for missions given the past year was $9,051. Puran Banwar gave an interesting talk here Tuesday evening, December 30. Willis Rich showed pictures of Bethel College and spoke in behalf of the College. A pot luck supper and program was enjoyed in our church New Year's Eve. The young people finished the remainder of the evening at the Rev. P. D. Unruh home. Marjorie and Herold Unruh leave for Grace Bible Institute. Eldon and Melvin Unruh are returning to Whitworth College, Spokane, and Wayne Aeschliman, Philip and Richard Largent are going to W.S.C. Pullman after spending the holidays at home.—Mrs. Horace D. Rogers, Corr.

—Grace Church, Lansdale, Pa.; Our annual Stewardship and Thankoffering service was held on November 23. The total Building Fund offering received on this occasion was $1,600. A total of 364 Bibles were dedicated on Universal Bible Sunday at a service in which each person present brought one or more Bibles to the altar. These Bibles had been purchased from the American Bible Society with money given by individuals and various organizations of the church as a result of the campaign which the Brotherhood undertook as a project. Dr. P. C. Hiebert, Chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee, brought an inspiring message on this occasion. The Bibles were later taken to the M.C.C. headquarters at Akron, Pa., for

MRS. RODOLPHE PETTER EXPRESSES THANKS

I am deeply grateful to my fine co-workers, who planned and directed a birthday celebration for me on Sunday afternoon, December 21. The program consisted of a piano prelude; a trio; a quartet; a solo, "He Shall Feed His Flock like a Shepherd" from Handel's Messiah, by Rev. Habegger and Scripture reading and prayer.

Mrs. Habegger then produced a huge frosted angel food cake with lighted candles and made a presentation speech in handing me an envelope. Ice cream, cake and coffee was served.

Also I was quite overwhelmed with about 200 cards, letters, and messages that came through the mails from pastors, churches, sewing and mission societies, friends and relatives. It happened that just then three letters came from Switzerland and one from relatives in Paris. I am deeply grateful for all this kindness, and herewith I express my thanks briefly as it will take more time to answer each individually.

The Right Honorable Mr. Nicodemus

J. Stuart Lehman

It was a beautiful day in Judea but Senator Nicodemus, a ruler in the Sanhedrin, did not notice the weather nor anything else, for that matter, except the fact that Jesus was proclaiming Himself as the Messiah.

Now Nicodemus was a Pharisee and one of the mainstays in the government. He was an elderly rabbi who was very just, timid, good natured, sensible, and learned in the orthodoxy of Israel. He was a great Jewish teacher, had an unblemished reputation, had an influential social position, and was, in a word, a "gentleman and a scholar." Very dignified.

Nevertheless, the staid old scholar was bothered by a restless heart. Nicodemus was looking for the Messiah, and now here was Jesus, an humble Galilean, who claimed to be the Messiah. Nicodemus had heard of Christ's cleansing of the Temple and of His miracles, and yet he wasn't really sure that Christ was the Messiah. Wasn't the Messiah to form a victorious kingdom here on earth and conquer the World? After thinking these things over Nicodemus decided to see Christ and to get the answers from the prophet himself. But great care must be taken in making this visit, for the other rulers must not know that he is going to visit Jesus; also Jesus, being very busy in the daytime, would probably have more time at night; and then too, Nicodemus was just a little ashamed and fearful of being seen with this "Son of a Carpenter." Taking all these things into consideration, he decided to visit Jesus at night.

Therefore he came to Jesus "by night;" nevertheless he came. That is the important point. Although he was timid, he was sincere. He opened his interview by calling Jesus "Rabbi," which showed that Jesus impressed him, for he called Him "Teacher"; and then he told Jesus that he knew Him as a teacher from God because of His miracles but that he wanted to know if they were really "works of the Messiah."

Christ saw in Nicodemus a sincere soul, and so He launched forth in an explanation of the new birth. He told him that he must be born anew in order to see the Kingdom of God. But Nicodemus couldn't understand this for he was thinking of the traditional Jewish idea of an earthly kingdom, and thus he thought of a natural rebirth. Jesus then told him that it must be a spiritual rebirth; and, although it could not be seen, it could be felt for it was like the wind that was blowing around them as they sat on the hillside; they could feel the wind but they couldn't see it nor did they know from whence it came. Now Nicodemus, after hearing this, was more puzzled than before because he just couldn't understand that his position could be bettered by a rebirth, for he was already in the highest Jewish class and surely there was no one better. This rebirth idea was for the lowly Gentiles who were proselytes from heathenism but not for a Jewish ruler. The elderly Jew could not comprehend that one didn't get into the Messianic kingdom through one's meritorious obedience to the moral and ceremonial codes but by the spiritual experience of regeneration. This being his situation, he told Jesus simply and sincerely that he didn't understand, and it was then that Jesus reproved him for not knowing these things and he, Nicodemus, a teacher of Israel.

Jesus then told him that it was a simple matter of faith; you do not have to know why and how, but it is like the serpent which Moses lifted up in the wilderness. You just look at the cross in faith, believing on Christ; and in this way Christ revealed that He was to die on the cross.

Evidently the senator believed, for in later accounts we see where he made a timid plea to the Sanhedrin in behalf of Christ, and at Christ's death he begged for His body that he might give it a decent burial.

And so from this account we see how hard it was for an old Jewish scholar, who was bound in tradition and false expectation, to see in simple faith the wonderful way of salvation. May we as young people follow the plea given in the following poem:

In simple trust like theirs who heard,
Beside the Syrian sea,
The gracious calling of the Lord,
Let us, like them, without a word, distribution in Europe. Most of the Bibles were in German and a few in Dutch Greek and Spanish.—Ruth E. Fretz, Corr.
Rise up and follow Thee—

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: A group of approximately forty-five young people went caroling Christmas Eve after the Sunday School Christmas program. Christmas night our C. E. presented an inspirational program with the rendition of the Christmas songs by the choir and other musical groups. Services were held on the mornings of the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth.

—"Mennonites Help the Hungry" is the name of a feature story in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of December 28, 1947. The article centers around the Mennonites of the Hillsboro, Kansas, community and their efforts for relief through the Mennonite Central Committee. Four cuts illustrate the story which was run under the paper's "Hollywood - Personalities - Broadway" section.

—The Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pa., is showing an active interest in Brook Lane Farm, the M.C.C. Hospital for the Mentally Ill. The church recently called for volunteer labor to help at the Farm, and in the past year $500 was given for the new institution. At the annual meeting the church adopted the General Conference Minister's Pension Plan. Sunday School attendance has increased from thirty-two in 1943 to fifty-four plus. The present church membership is sixty-five.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: A movie of the work of the church in the last two years was an outstanding feature of our annual church business meeting this year. The movie, much of which was in color, was shown by Dr. Lotus Slabaugh.—Mrs. Loyal Corwin, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: On January 4 five hundred seventy people enjoyed the program of the Mennonite Seminary Quartet, with Marvin J. Dirks as its director. The major problem at our annual business meeting resulted in the election of a board to investigate the possibility of opening an Old Folk's Home in Pretty Prairie.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Los Angeles: The men's Chorus recently conducted an evening's service at the Union Rescue Mission in downtown Los Angeles. Rev. Harold Burkholder had charge of Sunday vespers over radio station KMPC, Hollywood, January 4.—Mrs. Harold Burkholder, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: The young people's watch night service included a program with interesting talks. Refreshments were served after the program. Since the Christmas season is over we are again resuming our Bible study on Sunday evenings. Our pastor, Rev. T. A. van der Smissen, is beginning a series of Sunday morning meditations on "The Sermon on the Mount."—Amelia Becker, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: About fifty-five cooperative, forward-looking church members helped make our annual business meeting quick-moving. A large majority voted to take the steps toward improving our church: A new organ and addition to house it; raising the church for an enlarged basement and rest rooms. We are continuing the 100 per cent plan for subscriptions to The Mennonite. We gave the minister a deserved bonus. Mission disbursements for the year were $2,366. Church disbursements were $4,111.95.—Corr.

—First Church, Newton, Kansas: We had the privilege of having with us on Sunday, January 4, a quartet from the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois. The men gave an excellent inspirational program in song and testimony that worthily represented our Seminary before a capacity audience that greatly appreciated such a service. Dr. S. F. Pannabecker and Rev. Marvin Dirks of the faculty brought short messages. We are grateful to God that He used Dr. A. Warkentin even in the last years of his active and blessed life when already greatly hindered by serious illness to do so much in the establishing of the Seminary.

—Deep Run Church, Pa. Burton Yost, of Lansdale, Pa., and ministerial student at Bluffton, filled the pulpit Sunday morning during the absence of Rev. Fretz, who has been appointed to fill an unexpired term on the General Conference Historical Committee and was attending a special meeting of this committee held at Newton, Kansas, January 2 and and 3.—Mae Gross, Corr.

—Missionary W. C. Voth plans to leave for China on or about February 7 on the S. S. General Gordon. After he leaves his home in Newton, Kansas, he can be reached by mail in care of: American S. S. Lines, 311 California Street, San Francisco 4, California. A farewell for Rev. Voth will be given by the Bethel College Church on the evening of January 25, at 8 P. M. in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall. All who are interested in attending are invited to come. This will probably be the last Sunday that Rev. Voth will be in Newton.

—Miss Elisabeth Goertz plans to leave for China on or about February 7 on the S. S. General Gordon. She and Rev. W. C. Voth will return on the same ship, and she can be reached by mail, after she leaves Newton, at the same address as given above for Rev. Voth. A farewell for Miss Goertz will be held at the Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, on January 18.

THE READER SAYS (with a pain in the head)

Dear Editor:

I have just found an alternative to the Pension Plan! Let the Conference Secretaries keep on sending out report forms that have conflicting classifications and no pensions will be needed — just more space at Brook Lane Farm.

Why, in the name of reason, can't one form, sent out by the district secretary meet the bill? Could not a carbon of the report, or tabulation by districts supply the information for the General Conference Secretary? Could not the General Conference officers and district officers agree as to information desired?

—George S. Stoneback, Fairfield, Pa.

"Unto the Least of These"

QUIETLY seating ourselves on the front benches of the church, joining in congregational hymns, silently listening to the words of the minister, bowing in prayer—these are not the total fulfillment of the Christian's obligations. Such privileges only increase our responsibility: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

"But what can we do?" dozens of young people reply. "I haven't been trained for Christian service." "Not everyone can be a foreign missionary." "I'm busy studying for my life work." "My parents need me on the farm most of the year." These instantaneous responses which at first appear to be handicaps or excuses really helped motivate the Voluntary Service Program.

Voluntary service provides a channel of service for young people who are free to devote only a short period of time to service outside their home community. This article deals only with the M. C. C. service projects. Some of the Mennonite groups individually and the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ groups together are providing channels for various types of service. These are not substitutes for mission work, but aspects of it, or supplementary to it. Through the talents of young people who volunteer, M. C. C. Voluntary Service attempts to meet vital unmet human needs and to bring relief to areas of need, tension, and confusion. Serving our fellow men in the name of Christ is the major purpose of voluntary service, with the ultimate aim of all such service as the spiritual enrichment of those who are served.

It is also an experience of internship in Christian service. This internship is a gateway to a life of greater usefulness in the home community, a chosen vocation, or in service for the church. Having compassion on humanity—witnessing urgent want and ignorance—awakens within a compelling consciousness of man's dire spiritual need. This contact with the world's suffering and darkness will cause many to be constrained by the love of Christ to commit their whole life to the ministry or to the mission field.

Voluntary service is also planned for those who will find their place of service in the home, in the factory, or in the schoolroom. Those of us engaged in these usual tasks are tempted to think that only full-time church work demands total consecration. Consecrated Christian living embraces more than that. Even Christ spent most of his life in a carpenter shop. Sometimes it is more difficult to represent Christ while doing menial or monotonous tasks than it is when we are telling others of Him by word of mouth. But it is no less important. To always exemplify patience and cheerfulness, to be truly honest, to be humble, to think first of your fellow laborer, to love him as yourself; these are the standards Christ has set for our daily lives! Do we live them? Do we even try or want to live them? Voluntary service is a challenge to make Christ known while serving on a regular job, perhaps doing a service or unpleasant task; to live a life of Christ-like love morning, noon, night, and inbetween.

Last summer six units were sponsored by the M. C. C. with ninety-two members participating in them. These young people came from five of the church groups represented in the M. C. C. In addition there were six unit members from other denominations. Five countries, seventeen states, and three provinces were represented. The average age was considerably higher than last year with ages ranging from eighteen to forty-four.

Experiences of Last Year's Service Units

Two units were located in mental hospitals, one in a village for epileptics, another at the M. C. C. headquarters, one in the South, and one in Mexico.

The first visit to the wards of the Colorado State Hospital was a new experience for most of the twenty enthusiastic volunteers who arrived at Pueblo in June. They found attitudes of fear, doubt and suspicion toward the patients giving way to feelings of love, kindness and understanding as they began to work with them day after day. As recreational therapists, the unit members centered their efforts on making patients happier and their lives more meaningful and pleasant. With the patients they played croquet, ballgames, catch, went for walks, played dominoes, admired the handwork of patients and lent a helping hand or suggestion wherever possible. These manifestations of love "to the least of these" brought expressions of gratitude and appreciation from the patients as unit members prepared to leave. Pueblo's scenic surroundings were enjoyed on days off. Pike's Peak, the Garden of the Gods, Cave of the Winds, and other of nature's crowning beauties were close at hand. Coming home from one of these excursions the unit enjoyed a most inspiring worship period as they spontaneously began to sing praises to the God of this glorious creation.

"Why did I have to be born black?" a colored child in Gulfport asked his Summer Bible School teacher. Many equally challenging situations faced our Gulfport unit as they were brought face to face with the actual intensity of race prejudice in the South. They witnessed hate, poverty and need, ignorance, disease, filth. With prayerfulness and humility they approached the thrilling and sobering responsibility of teaching those who knew not of Him about Christ in both colored and white Bible schools. On crudely equipped playgrounds they enthusiastically played games with colored boys and girls. Homes were visited, and houses cleaned, sanitary privies were built, sewing classes taught, and a Sunday school conducted. Proof of the community's welcome and gratitude was evidenced when, following one Bible School program, the colored mothers served cake and ice cream to surprised white teachers while a whole audience looked hungrily and happily on.

In Cleveland, Ohio, sixteen girls and four fellows worked as regular attendants on various wards of the state mental hospital. Cleveland members won my admiration—especially those spending the summer on Pellow, the most untidy ward in the hospital. Theirs was not a martyr complex nor an air of enduring. They learned to love their patients, a love which manifested itself in a warm concern for the patient, a love unbiased by personal likes or dislikes, free from sentimentalism or emotionalism. They loved the patients, not because they always had lovable qualities, but because they represented a soul and spirit that are priceless in God's eyes. As regular attendants the members mopped and scrubbed, bathed, dressed and fed their charges, combed hair and trimmed nails. The cheery "Good Morning!" words of comfort or assurance, or just pausing to listen to the most recent joy or sorrow of a patient was often rewarded by love and gratitude from these hungry hearts.

Patients at Skillman ranged in ages from five to ninty; men, women, and children; colored and white, who have one thing in common—all have a type of epilepsy. Many epileptics live relatively normal lives in our society. It is the mentally ill, the feebleminded, and those who have for some reason failed to adjust themselves to normal living that need hospital care. Since the beginning of the war the labor situation at Skillman has been acute. The need, the favorable and considerate attitude of the administration, and the summer unit's ringing testimony of blessings experienced while serving in this area of need, led us to open a year around unit at the Skillman State Village for Epileptics this fall. Members will serve as regular attendants in the cottages, and may serve any season of the year. The minimum period of service is ten weeks. This unit is intended primarily to accomodate those young people who are busy during the summer but would like to serve another part of the year.

Six girls reenforced the ranks of the regular Akron staff this summer. Two of the workers on part of their time conducted a very successful playground and craft department for the Akron children. The unit became an integral part of the M. C. C. family here at Akron. The girls testified to spiritual revitalization through the Christian fellowship they met and enjoyed. It was also a means of their becoming acquainted with the work of the Mennonite Central Committee at home and abroad.

This summer, Voluntary Service reached out to begin service in one of Mexico's needy areas. In Chihuahua unit members served in a general hospital, taught English classes and tended a nursery. Throughout the coming year the work will be continued in Mexico. Our immediate concern is to help the Mexicans and Old Colony Mennonites in Cuauhtemoc meet their health needs.

Testimonies of Those Who Have Served

The effect of voluntary service on the individual can best be shown by sharing with you a few of their testimonies:

"Our church needs the challenge we are receiving here, the challenge to living faith. Without being prigish we wish there were ten times as many young people in voluntary service to share our enthusiasm with us. Our immediate objective is service here, but we also feel a deeper sense of being part of the church's mission on earth.

"We hope the spiritual well springs we have tapped will bring forth an abundant well of faith. Ultimately even our own lives receive the highest benefit if we give them in service in "the name of Christ." A logical result of this realization should be for us to commit more thoroughly our lives to God's direction and purpose. This short internship points to a lifetime of service."

"The contact with suffering gives us a new sense of values, makes us see and understand things we didn't before, inspires us with new thoughts—it is a strengthening and refining of our faculties; it is something we shall have at our backs to drive us forward and to sustain us in our work because suffering is a positive force.

"The contact with suffering makes us face thoroughly our responsibility, shows us the amount of our moral obligation: it is a silent but powerful "thou must" which says whatever our personal mission in life, we must understand life as a mission."

"In these past few weeks I have been challenged as I have never been challenged before. I have come to realize what I want to do is of secondary importance. I have made my choice. I have a life to live, and it is my God-given duty to live it for Christ. My desires and wishes count only when they are in accordance with the will of God."

These channels through which you can serve the Master and mankind, through which your own life can be enriched and broadened, are not confined to a select few. They are for all these young people who are willing to offer their services for a period of time: ten weeks, six months, perhaps a year. The task is for those who are willing to serve wherever possible and who are willing to give up self and seek the will of God. It is for those willing to serve humbly, day after day "in the name of Christ."

Every member in the church should give at least a year of full-time service to the work of the church!

An Incident with the Tyndale Bible

[One of the first men to translate the Bible into English was Tyndale. His work was done in the 1520's about the same time that the Anabaptist forebears of our church arose in Switzerland. He did His work under severe opposition because it was considered heresy to translate the Bible from Latin into the vulgar tongues. The following is an incident which happened to Tyndale. Do you feel he followed correct course of action? Ed.]

Finding no room in England for the translation of the Scriptures, Tyndale fled to Germany. At Hamburg he completed the translation of the New Testament, and then joined Luther at Worms for the printing of it. Soon copies began to pour into England in cases, barrels, bales of cloth, sacks of flour—in any way to avoid detection—and soon were scattered throughout the land.

When it seemed impossible to stop the flow of Testaments a brilliant thought occured to the Bishop of London, who decided he would buy up all the copies as they were published across the water. He secured the services of a merchant trading at Antwerp. Augustine Pakington, who agreed to purchase every book that remained unsold.

A few weeks later Pakington sought the translator whose funds he knew were at a low ebb. "Master Tyndale," he said, "I have found you a good purchaser for your books." "Who is he?" asked Tyndale. "My lord of London." "But if the bishop wants the books it must be only to burn them." "Well," was the reply, "What of that? The bishop will burn them anyhow, and it is best that you should have the money for the enabling you to imprint others instead."

And so the bargain was made. The bishop had the books, Pakington had the thanks, and Tyndale had the money. "I am the gladder," quoth Tyndale, "for these two benefits shall come thereof. I shall get money to bring myself out of debt, the whole world will cry out against the burning of God's Word, and the overplus of the money that shall remain with me shall make me more studious to correct the New Testament and so newly to imprint the same once again, and I trust the second will be much better than the first."

This was done and soon the Testaments were coming into England three times as fast as before. The bishop sent for Pakington again, and asked how the Testaments were still so abundant. "My Lord," replied the merchant, "it were best for your lordship to buy up the stamps too by the which they are imprinted."

It is with evident enjoyment that the old chronicler presents to us another scene as a sequel to the story. A prisoner, a suspected heretic named Constantine, was being tried a few months later before Sir Thomas More. "Now Constantine," said the judge, "I would have thee to be plain with me in one thing that I shall ask, and I will promise to show thee favor in all other things that thou art accused. There are beyond the sea Tyndale, Joyce, and a great many of you; I know they cannot live without help. There must be some that succor them with money, and thou, being one of them, hadst thy part thereof, and therefore knowest from whence it came. I pray thee, tell me who be they that help them thus."

"My lord," quoth Constantine, "I will tell thee truly—it is the Bishop of London that hath holpen us, for he hath bestowed among us a great deal of money upon New Testaments to burn them, and that hath been our chief succor and comfort."

"Now by my troth," quoth Sir Thomas More, "I think even the same, for I told the bishop thus much before he went about it."

The New New Testament Translation

Well over a million copies of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament are reported published by now. It is as yet less than two years since this new version appeared. It was in February, 1946, that it came off the press.

This new English translation is one of many translations into the English tongue that have preceded it. It all began about 600 years ago when Wycliff, in 1382, produced the first translation to be distributed by the wandering Lollards, his followers of that day. Wycliff's translation was into a quaint old tongue that is quite impossible for the modern English speaking world to understand. In 1525, Tyndale came forth with the second translation. It was the result of devoted effort on the part of Tyndale; however, due to faulty sources, it was subject to error. There were eight translations preceding the King James version of 1611 so many today know so well. The King James version, when it appeared, showed that it was greatly influenced by the preceding versions.

After the King James version appeared, translating the Bible into English came to a standstill. Only in our modern era from 1885 on have there been a series of new efforts to translate the Bible into English. The Revised Standard Version is the last of this most recent series. The inspiration to translate again the Bible into the modern tongue came because of two reasons. First, a translation familiar to modern language was needed. The old translations, fine as they were, tended toward vagueness of understanding and were subject to creating a barrier between the reader and the message. Secondly, in the past 100 years the results of archaeologic and scholarly research has yielded a wealth of new light on the people, language, customs, and writings of the people of Bible times. This has made possible making of translations of the Bible.

The result of all this is the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament. It was done by a committee of picked American scholars, and the material was checked and cross-checked before appearing in its final form. An effort was made to put the version in simple understandable, readable language which would as accurately as possible express the thought of the original sources. Another committee of scholars is at work on the Old Testament. It will appear in 1950.

The Revised Standard Version of the New Testament is something to look into for personal reading and for public worship.

Beginning of Bethesda Leper Home, Champa, India

BY P.A. PENNER

(At Champa, India, is a large, efficiently run home for lepers. Many Mennonites who are interested in mission work have heard and read about it. Older people may remember some of the facts of its beginning. The following article is a vivid description of the spontaneous beginning of this great work, written by the founder of the home, Dr. P. A. Penner, veteran and beloved missionary of the General Conference.—Editor)

Some of the first lepers in the beginning of the work at Champa. Standing close to the tree are Rev. and Mrs. P. A. Penner. The tree also marks the site of the outdoor worship services. Nearby were built the huts which housed the first leper patients.

On April 27, 1902, two leper lads came to the mission premises in Champa, Central Provinces, India. They sat under a char tree. Their emaciated bodies were scantily clothed. Sidhu, almost blind, with distorted features due to facial paralysis, and neglected festering leprous wounds on hands and feet, was the spokesman. The other, Puran, less disfigured but equally ragged, with leprosy plainly written on face and body, was the fellow-sufferer.

In real oriental fashion, faces to the ground, they begged for food, saying, "Where shall we go? Everybody sends us away. Please have mercy on us and give us something to eat." This was gladly given to them. They left the premises satisfied. These two lads were between eighteen and twenty years of age. They came to the mission compound a few days later with the same request. They came a third and a fourth time. When their visits became too frequent I said, "Young men, we are willing to give you your daily bread (rice), but we must forbid you the mission premises. Our daughter occasionally plays under this tree and is consequently in danger of contracting leprosy, but if you will live near the river one-half mile away, we will build you some huts and will supply you food, clothing, and medicine." They agreed. This was the beginning of the present "Bethesda Leper Home" in Champa, one of the larger leper homes of India.

This growing institution had no promised financial support from the General Conference of the Mennonite Church, nor from The Mission to Lepers to India and the East, as it was then known. It was purely a faith venture. Praise God, no leper has ever gone to bed hungry from April 27, 1902, until today. God always supplied our need when there was no money in the treasury and no rice in the granary. How well I remember that Thursday many years ago when our poor lepers, at that time about twenty-five, were to receive their weekly supply of rice, lentils, and vegetables, and we had nothing to give, neither had we any cash in the house. In those early days we had no credit with the Indian merchants. We were in great perplexity. But we have not only a rich God, but one who is ever ready to help in time of need. Mrs. Penner and I went into our bedroom, and on bended knees we reminded the Lord that lepers had not come to us by our request but that He had sent them to us and hence we put our confidence in Him that he would supply their need. We depended on Him to supply the need of these poor people. After ten o'clock that day the mail came in. Among the letters was one from a lady living in Bombay, who wrote something like this: "The spirit leads me to send you Rs.30/-/- (about $10) for lepers." We had never seen this lady nor heard of her. Here was rice supply for our dear sufferers. Two full days before our prayer went up to God, these thirty Rupies had left Bombay (Isa. 65:24).

During those early days, the twenty-five lepers lived in bamboo huts costing less than $25. The roofs were covered with leaves and obviously not waterproof. We had no granary, no clinic, no hospital and, of course, no house of worship. Every Thursday the lepers came to the mission station, a half a mile distant, for their weekly supply of rations. Every morning I walked to their temporary home and dressed their wounds (I have never used gloves). With this simple service I also gave a Christian message. Occasionally a death occurred, but this vacancy was soon filled by another applicant from among the hundreds of lepers in our district. When we had four lepers, one died. Three lepers and I carried the corpse on a primitive wooden bed to the grave and buried it. I have never feared leprosy, though I used common sense in working among them and depended upon God to protect me from this awful disease.

Sunday services were conducted in the open if the weather permitted. If the weather did not permit, no service. These services were, naturally, simple because I was speaking to ignorant non-Christians. Moreover, my Hindi was extremely imperfect. One part of the service consisted in taking a collection. Obviously, our lepers could not contribute much, generally one-half cent, but even this part of the service taught the lepers to think of others and also show an appreciation to God for what they were receiving from Him in this primitive Home.

To teach lepers to sing was the most difficult part of the Christian meeting. None could read; none was familiar with the hymns. I had to sing some hymn to the group until tune and words had been committed to memory. It was in truth "a joyful noise unto the Lord."

The first leper baptized was Sirkanti in 1904. His wife, Budhwara, became a Christian some time later. One of their boys, being symtom-free returned to his native village. A girl also symptom-free married a young man from another mission and became a useful and consecrated church member. A second girl, tainted, left our home, went to Calcutta and married a leprous young man. Years later, this couple returned to our Leper Home and asked me to accept into our Bethesda Leper Home their daughter, Ashin. Being untainted, this nice little girl, Ashin, was given a home in the Home for Untainted Children. She received a fairly good education and also received nurse's training. She is at present working in one of our hospitals, and the doctor calls her an efficient nurse. How wonderfully God has blessed the acceptance of Sirkanti and Budhwara.

A Conference on Faith and Life among Mennonites in Denmark

by P. S. Goertz

Next April it will be three years since the Danzig and West Prussian Mennonites suddenly found themselves in Denmark refugee camps. They came with some 200,000 others who were forced from their homes and landed in a frightfully chaotic condition in this country of Denmark. How can such a heterogeneous society be long left without some kind of Christian nuture? There were, of course, Christian ministers among them, but where were they, and were they properly distributed? This Christian nurture has been undertaken by several agencies and in several ways. One should give credit first to the Danish National (Lutheran) Church for organizing the forces available, for providing preaching services, for printing small pamphlets with hymns, for editing and printing a camp Christian paper, and for being concerned about the spiritual welfare of the strangers within their gates.

Among these masses the Mennonites became the particular concern of our American and Canadian Brethren. Brother C. F. Klassen made the very first visit to Denmark. I understand it was brief. Brother Walter Gering, pastor of the Eden Mennonite Church of Moundridge, Kansas, was first to be sent under the auspices of the Mennonite Central Committee to minister to them. Miss Elma Esau and Miss Susie Peters served with material aid. Later came brother H. H. Janzen as gospel preacher. Then Brother and Sister John Wichert from Vineland, Ontario, Canada, made a similar tour through the camps. Since the latter part of August my wife and I have tried to counsel with them and to break the bread of life to them. It has been gratifying to have them come out practically 100 per cent strong to every service that is held. What gratitude is being expressed for all that their brethren in the faith across the ocean bring them! Much could be said in greater detail about this. However, the purpose of this article is a report on another special effort that was made by a group of workers serving jointly.

For eight days, November 6-13 inclusive, the five camps, where by this time practically all of the remaining 70,000 refugees are located became the center of Mennonite activity. The purpose was to share with the sojourning brethren the faith and hope that we as Christians and especially as Mennonites have in this troubled world. It was thought that in this way some of the cherished principles which the two great wars had tended to blot out of their way of life could again be restored. It was hoped also that by this concerted effort the bonds of fellowship between them and Mennonites elsewhere in the world could be more closely joined. To these ends all available latent resources were brought together and organized for concerted action. We could call on three brethren among the Prussian Mennonite refugees and three who are now in Europe representing the Mennonite Central Committee. The three brethren in the camps were, Elder Bruno Ewert, now especially shepherding the biggest single group of Mennonite refugees, concentrated in the Oksboel camp near Varde; Elder Bruno Enss who is still stationed in a camp near Copenhagen and has been sent by the Danish Church Service also to minister to a hospital group, refugees, in Hilleroed; Brother Herman Epp was the third, and he is at present located in camp Rom near Lemvig serving as spiritual counsellor to non-Mennonite refugees in that camp. All three brethren have privileges to travel, when the occasion calls for it, to other camps. The other half of the team consisted of Brother H. S. Bender, from Goshen College, in Europe this year as representative of the M. C. C. Peace section; Rev. John Wichert from Vineland, Ontario, in Europe for the year under the M.C.C. as minister to the various groups of refugees; and the writer from Bethel College at present director of the M.C.C. work in Denmark.

The original plans for a Conference on "Faith and Life" (Mennonitische Glaubenskonferenz) were born when brother Bender came to Denmark on September 8 and we made a hurried trip to the Oksboel Camp. This emphasis being so definitely in line with his commission to promote the peace testimony in Europe, we give him credit for being the spearhead in suggesting this conference and the nature thereof. It became the writer's task to organize it, determine the itinerary, arrange the schedules, and in general promote the smooth execution of the plans.

Our first meeting point was the Oksboel Camp. Here we spent two days holding meetings with the total Mennonite membership during two afternoons and two evenings. Each meeting lasted two hours. From Oksboel our party went in two cars to Aalborg, a distance of 209 kilometers. Here are two camps known as Aalborg East and Aalborg West, 13 kilometers (9 miles) apart. Three days were spent in these two camps together. With a few exceptions the same kind of program was carried out. The next three days were spent at Camps Grove and Rye. These two camps are at least 50 kilometers apart and 100 kilometers from Aalborg.

The areas to be emphasized were definitely assigned to different members of the team. Brother Ewert usually started us off by speaking on the theme: "The Gospel, a Power of God." Brother Enns followed with: "In Christ a New Creation." Later in the series brother Epp spoke on: "The Task of the Mennonite Church in the Present Day." Each of these men spoke once in each series. Brother Bender in his two discourses led us to appreciate: "Our Mennonite Heritage," and "The Biblical Basis for Our Non-resistant Faith." Brother Wichert's messages were evangelistic in that he presented to us: "Jesus the Savior," and "Salvation and Sanctification." In the writer's first message he attempted to stress the "Practical Applications of Our Non-resistant Faith," and in the second ("Saved to Serve"), to emphasize that service always grows out of salvation as an expression of gratitude. All messages, of course, were given in their logical sequence so that unity and coherence were assured.

To the refugees from the Danzig and West Prussian areas these meetings could not have been complete without a word about the possibilities for emigration to a future home, and a report by Brother Bender from their homes and churches from which they had fled two and one half years ago. Brother Bender had recently spent a week visiting the whole area from which they came and had with him thirty-six pictures of churches, parsonages, homes, cemeteries and the like. What heartache was written on their faces as he related to them the condition in which these treasured centers were found!

An evaluation is always more precarious and in some respects more difficult than a narration of historical facts. Yet a few concrete outcomes of these conferences one might safely enumerate.

First, it was a continuing demonstration that their brethren in the United States and Canada are vitally concerned about them. How many times that was expressed in one way or another! It kept hope and courage alive and made the lot in which they find themselves just a little more bearable.

Second, it was mutually enriching. This sharing of thought, belief, and practice makes for understanding and mutual appreciation. We heard from them repeatedly that such contacts before the war could have changed the course of things that have happened.

Third, every such effort is an oasis in the monotonous and humdrum life of refugees in a camp. The weather was sometimes very bad and the camp paths are dark in the evening, but apparently no able-bodied person out of the Mennonite group was missing from the meetings. They furnished food for their hungry souls.

Fourth, these are significant days here in Denmark for the future of the Mennonite fellowship. There is no question in my mind that history is being made. These conference days and the work connected with them are a part of a pattern that is being woven. Someday, we hope not too far in the future, the refugees one and all will either go back to Germany or to a new home in the Americas. What was said, heard, felt, and seen will help to make their future for them. To this end our good loyal friends at home have done their share in what happened before, during, and after the days of which we have just spoken. Therefore, "let us not be weary in well-doing."

Mennonite Biblical Seminary Students and Faculty Consider UMT

Reported by Don E. Smucker

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 9.—A unique demonstration of peace conviction took place at Bethany Biblical Seminary on Thursday and Friday, January 8 and 9, when classes were dismissed for a serious consideration of Universal Military Training and the relation of the Christian to this development. Mennonite Biblical Seminary cooperated fully in the entire program.

Paul Goering, a graduate of Bethel College, who is now related to the National Service Board for Religious Objectors in Washington D. C., opened the program on Thursday evening by describing the current developments in connection with Universal Military Training. Because of recent action taken by the Roman Catholic Church and because this is a presidential year and because of general opposition, Paul Goering declared that at the moment the drive for a military training has bogged down; however, he did not hold out any optimism for the long term campaign against it. Paul Goering went from Chicago to Goshen where he met with the peace section of the Mennonite Central Committee.

The following morning Laurel Weiss, Research Director of the Peace Section of the Brethren Service Commission, spoke to the group on the possibility of stopping Universal Military Training. He suggested that we have two large jobs—the first is the educational task of laying before the American people the convictions of the peace churches and other Christians with similar beliefs, and secondly, the legislative task whereby the church is actually related to specific legislation. Dr. Weiss said that it is difficult to analyze public opinion in relation to military training. On the one hand, the public opinion polls suggest that U. M. T. is supported by a majority of the people, but he declared that deep down in the hearts of the American people is opposition against it, but they are not effectively opposed to it because casual sentiment is hard to translate into effective opposition. He also pointed out that the opposition of the peace churches of necessity is of a different nature than that of the majority of the American people who do not share the nonresistant position. The speaker from the Elgin office also observed that in the peace churches we are not altogether united in our approach to Congress and our method in influencing the thinking of these men. In conclusion he declared that while the peace churches have limited resources they are not alone in their Christian convictions.

Following his address there was a symposium in which the participants were Dr. Rufus Bowman, Paul Weaver, Curtis Naylor, Esko Loewen, and Don Smucker. This symposium was primarily concerned with two matters. First, whether it destroys the reality of our opposition to U. M. T. to consider what we might do if it does come. After considerable discussion it was agreed that the discussion of the possible course of action in the event the bill passes does not nullify our present opposition to the bill. The second area of discussion centered around the desirability of something in addition to Civilian Public Service as the answer of the peace churches. After considerable analysis it was clear that only a small minority actually favored having the church support something like noncombatant work under the army, and no one expressed a desire to lessen the fundamental peace conviction of the Brethren and Mennonite groups.

Following this discussion, Dan West, the well-known peace leader of the Church of the Brethren, led an open discussion about our motivation in connection with peace work. There was overwhelming agreement that our motivation is primarily and mainly the fact that we believe war to be un-Christian and military training likewise; however, other arguments can enter into our point of view as well to supplement this larger Christian prospective. Some of these considerations are the matter of political freedom involved in conscription, the moral questions it raises, the antagonism it creates with other nations, the shock to our educational system and that sort of thing. There was agreement that we must not use arguments with the American people in the realm of military necessity, believing that this is simply out of bounds for those who do not accept any of the military premises. Personal evangelism, prayer, and letter-writing were viewed as the most effective ways of making our witness against conscription. In thinking of the future it was agreed that a radically reformed Civilian Public Service system would approximate the conviction of most of those participating in these discussions. Desmond Bittinger, editor of the Gospel Messenger, closed the session Friday night by challenging the Seminary to express the peace message not only in relation to war and military training as such but in all the areas of life including church relationships and racial brotherhood.

Our Colleges and

BETHEL COLLEGE

The annual School of Missions, a joint enterprise by the local church and the students, began January 11 and will continue for five Sunday evenings. The class of college students is conducted by D. C. Wedel, and three students — Helen Kornelsen, Catherine Enns, and Joe Duerksen — are serving as teachers for the Junior High School and Junior groups. As has been true through the years, the January reorganization of the College Church again includes the names of a number of faculty and staff members in a variety of positions. R. C. Kauffman is representing Bethel at the meeting of the American Association of Church-Related Colleges, held in Cincinnati January 12-14. J. J. Voth has been given a leave of absence during January to serve the Canadian Mennonite Bible College.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Alvin Franz, Irvin Richert, David Habegger, Joseph Mason, and Professor Marvin Dirks returned late Friday night from their 3,000 mile tour during the holiday season. During this time they gave twenty-three programs in a period of fourteen days. With the exception of bad weather on January 1, limiting the crowds at Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel and Eden Church, Moundridge, the quartet was given a large hearing in each instance. The tour started at Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and concluded at Grace Bible Institute in Omaha, Nebraska.

Among the crucial dates in the weeks ahead are the following: the Seminary Board is scheduled to meet here January 21; the Central Conference Minister's Retreat will be held at the Seminary on February 10 to 11; the General Conference United Boards' Meeting will be held here February 17 to 19. The Seminary rejoices in the opportunity to be a center of life for the Mennonite Church.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

After a lengthy Christmas holiday season of two weeks, school life resumed its natural course on the morning of January 6. Several additional students from Manitoba and Ontario came to join the College family during the winter term. Additional lodging places had to be found for young men in private homes. We are grateful for those in the city who have graciously opened their homes to the students during these winter months.

Rev. J. J. Voth of Bethel College has begun his series of lectures on the Writings of John and the doctrinal teachings found in the Epistles of Paul. A good interest in these classes is to be seen in the large enrollments both of students and residents of Winnipeg.

One of the additional feaures of the College has been to offer evening classes for those who are interested in enrolling for Bible study. A number of students attending the Normal School just outside of the city limits are taking advantage of these periods from 7:30 to 9:00 P. M. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Faculty members held a Christian Life Conference at the Carlock, Illinois, Church January 10, 11. The Carlock, Normal, and Congerville churches also cooperated. Those making the trip to Carlock were J. S. Schultz, Edna Ramseyer, Harry Yoder, and Paul Shelly. The theme of the meeting was "The Christian Home." Dr. R. C. Kauffman of Bethel College was a Vesper speaker Sunday afternoon, January 11. Rev. Harry Yoder and Dr. I. W. Bauman attended the MCC meeting in Goshen January 9,10. The Helmericks, Arctic explorers, gave a lecture and showed colored motion pictures in a program sponsored by the college January 15. President Ramseyer and Dean Schultz attended meetings of the Association of American Colleges in Cincinnati during the week of January 12. During the Christmas vacation five students attended a volunteer convention in Lawrence, Kansas. They reported a very inspiring meeting. The Girl's Gospel Team gave programs in Eastern Pennsylvania and the Men's Gospel Team traveled as far west as South Dakota during the Christmas vacation.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

President Unruh attended a meeting of the General Conference Historical Committee at North Newton, Kansas, during vacation. Dr. and Mrs. Gross spent part of their Christmas vacation in Kansas, while Prof. E. Lichti made a business trip to Chicago. Some of the faculty men worked on the Boys Dormitory during vacation, and one section of it is now completed. Eight boys moved in this week and others will move in as soon as more sections are completed. For each section housing eight boys there are two sleeping rooms with two closets each, two study rooms, and one washroom and shower. Chapel speakers this week were Miss Waldner and Dean Gross. Miss Preheim showed her pictures of Europe to the joint Y. W. and Y.M.C.A. The Annual Bible Week will be held Januray 26—30. Rev. Albert Gaeddert, pastor of the Mennonite Church at Inman, Kansas, will be the speaker. He will speak to the students and faculty twice a day during this week.

THE PRESENT MENNONITE CENTRAL COMMITTEE PROGRAM

Various periods of MCC activity have come to a close: the relief in Russia during the 1920's the migrations to Paraguay in the 1930's, and the CPS Program of 1940 to 1947. But several great and challenging needs face the Mennonites of America, and it is through the continued work of the Mennonite Central Committee, in part, that this challenge is being met.

Relief

Today the wounds of war have not been healed, but rather, hunger, suffering, and privation prevail in many countries. These people cannot lift themselves from this condition, because of the scope and degree of this need, and because of the fact that while this need is initially physical, it is basically spiritual. We as Christians believe that only as relief is done "In the Name of Christ" can permanent help be given. At the present time 288 MCC workers are serving in the following eighteen countries of the world: China, India, Java, the Philippines, Ethiopia, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Switzerland, France, Holland, Italy, Belgium, Denmark, Paraguay, Brazil, and Puerto Rico. During the past year our people contributed nearly two million dollars worth of food, clothing, soap, and other relief materials, in addition to large amounts of money for the operation of the program (transportation and maintenance of workers, etc.).

Refugees

Many refugees are aided materially through direct relief work. Among the many refugees and displaced persons in Europe, about 10,000 Mennonites have been contacted. Some over 2,000 of these were taken to Paraguay early in 1947. A few others were able to enter, and fewer still come to the United States. The remaining 8,000 are still in Europe, hoping to find a way to a new homeland. The Mennonite churches naturally feel a duty and opportunity to help "especially them who are of the household of faith," and in this light are taking steps to continue helping these homeless brethren. This refugee work is a supplement to the general relief program. Eight full-time workers are serving in Europe to facilitate the movement of certain individuals and groups of these Mennonite refugees to Canada, and the United States where possible, and also to Paraguay.

Peace

A doctrine which is common to the Mennonite groups is that of nonresistance. There is a desire that this teaching might be strengthened among our own people, as well as carried forth to those beyond our immediate borders. During the past summer C. J. Rempel worked among the Mennonites in Brazil, Paraguay, and Argentina who have in former years experienced much hardship and persecution, and who now long for growth in and fuller understanding of this teaching. In Europe, Harold S. Bender is at present endeavoring to help in the revitalization of the nonresistant belief among the European Mennonites. For the strengthening of this doctrine among our people in North America, peace literature is produced and distributed, and helpful information is supplied to church leaders.

Voluntary Services

If our young men served under the compulsion of the state during CPS, should we not now give service under compulsion of love? Many young people have seen the vision of helping the needy persons here in our own country, through the Voluntary Service Program. Under MCC, several projects are in progress: 1) Voluntary Service Unit, Gulfport, Mississippi; 2) Voluntary Service Unit, Cuauhtemoc, Mexico; and 3) Skillman Village for Epileptics, Skillman, New Jersey. Other projects, such as Summer Service Units, continue only for short terms. These service units are not only to help to the recipients, but are also an internship for Christian workers.

Mental Health Service

Also growing out of the CPS Program has been an interest in care for the mentally ill in hospitals under the direction of the church. Certainly the charitable functions of the church are hardly adequate if those who are mentally ill are not properly cared for. The MCC has been requested to take the initiative in opening several hospitals of this nature. The former Leitersburg CPS Camp site is being converted into a Home for Mentally Ill to be known as Brook Lane Farm. Another hospital is planned in California. A possible third location is that of the midwest.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

John Horsch (1867-1941)

The Mennonite Quarterly Review is to be congratulated on its recent excellent John Horsch Memorial Number. Among other items it contains a biography, evaluations of Horsch's contributions, and a bibliography.

His Life. The life of John Horsch did not have an

More! More!! More!!!

by Orlando Waltner

HAVE you ever watched a small child, which eagerly expecting another piece of candy, cake or tidbit, stretched forth its tiny hand to its mother as it kept on saying, "More! more!! more!!!"? The missionaries of India are coming to the churches and with out-stretched hand are pleading, "More! More!! More!!!." More of what? Primarily, the call is for more workers.

A desperate need is a full time American missionary doctor for the Leper Home in Champa. In its forty-five years of history, the Champa Leper Home has never had a full time missionary doctor. Should it have been so and must it remain so? From our conference of almost 50,000 members, God must be calling someone to medical service in the large leprosarium there. Who is it? Where is the young man who out of Divine compassion for bodies broken by leprosy and for souls lost in sin and darkness will answer this call for "more workers"?

And where are more young nurses? Hospitals should serve as centers from which health programs are carried out in the surrounding areas. We're calling for young nurses who, with a love for evangelism and not counting the cost will plan, begin and supervise such health programs. This type of worker could and maybe should be a graduate with the "Masters of Religious Education" degree. Further training in a Seminary would enable the nurse to combine more effectively evangelism with public health service.

We need more young men and women to serve as district workers. The area which has been allotted to our conference is still too large for our present force of missionaries. To possess the land it is necessary that more workers with small groups of helpers constantly proclaim the crucified, risen and glorified Christ in the many villages in our area. This needs to be done systematically, intelligently and prayerfully. It is a work that requires the greatest amount of initiative, study, resourcefulness, patience, perseverance and prayer.

We are calling for workers who love Christ because of what He has done for them and because of what He is able to do for others. They should be workers who wish to proclaim Christ through powerful testimony and holy living. They should be workers with ample training. If possible, they should be graduates of a college and a seminary or Bible school. On the foreign field much, very much is required of a missionary and it is well to place a premium on the training of the heart and mind.

There is a great host of young people in our conference. Of that able and consecrated number we are pleading for more workers. As these workers will be leaving America for the foreign shores, the home churches will not be impoverished but will be enriched greatly. India's gain will be their gain.

even flow. At the age of twenty he left his father's home in South Germany secretly and came to America. Elkhart, Halstead, Berne, and Scottdale are a few of the fourteen places at which he resided. At his home he had joined the Mennonite church of which his father was the elder. In Elkhart he joined the Old Mennonite church. In Halstead he affiliated with the General Conference Mennonite church, at Berne with the Missionary Church Association; for a time he was a member of a Baptist church, and finally he joined the Old Mennonite church. In younger days he was influenced by Ludwig Keller, a Protestant champion of Mennonite research. This influence very likely determined his life work.

His Work. Horsch's significant contribution was not in the spoken, but in the written word. His greatest achievement was probably in the realm of collecting Mennonitica. He built up an excellent research library at Scottdale, Pennsylvania, which has now become a part of the Mennonite Historical Library at Goshen College. His first writings were mostly in German and the latter mostly in English. From 1908 until his death he worked for the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pennsylvania, as an editor and a writer of numerous articles, pamphlets, and books. Most of these contributions dealt with some phases of Mennonite history, practices, and principles. Among his outstanding books are those dealing with Menno Simons, the Hutterites, nonresistance, and the Mennonites in Europe. He became involved, for a time, in the Modernist-Fundamentalist controversy and wrote numerous articles and books on the subject.

There is no doubt that the work and achievements of Horsch, especially for the Old Mennonites, are of great significance. In his group he was the first to do dilligent research which influenced and inspired a younger generation. In addition to writing his books, he published many scholarly articles in the Mennonite Quarterly Review. All these studies reveal an untiring effort to create love toward the Mennonite church, to prove some point, or to defend the soundness of a practice or a principle. He was a great pamphleteer.

"In Full Time Christian Service"

by Marie J. Regier

IN one of the reports of the General Conference I read a statement that a group of about fifteen young people had declared their willingness to enter full time Christian service. In a letter I received the other day a missionary wrote, "I am so glad that we are back in the Lord's work."

When I read those statements I thought of a service which we had in Union Church a few Sundays ago. It was a dedication service for all who had come out to serve in China for the first time. This service had its origin in a similar service that had been held in San Francisco last fall when hundreds of missionaries were waiting to take their boats for the Orient. Our pastor thought, "If people are dedicated when they leave, why not dedicate them when they arrive? "Then someone asked the question," "Why only missionaries?" To ask the question was to answer it. At the service the American Consul read the first scripture passage, and the English Consul the second. After the sermon all Christians who had come out to China for the first time, whether to serve in business, consular work or mission work arose. It was a very impressive service.

Missionaries are in Christian work professionally, but every Christian is in full time Christian service, otherwise he isn't a Christian. Isn't preparing food in order to keep alive the body which God has given us doing God's work? Isn't tilling the good earth which God has put into our care doing His work? Sometimes, to quote our pastor again, we try to be more spiritual than God is.

Once we really realize this, it ought to make those of us who are in religious work professionally, very humble, because it means that we are set apart—not on a pedestal to be admired and envied — but for a certain type of work for which God has given us special gifts just as He has given other gifts to other people. Those of us who are not in religious work professionally should feel a thrill of importance in our work and a greater sense of responsibility.

There ought to be a natural, spontaneous sort of witnessing connected with whatever type of work we are doing, for the ultimate end of all of God's work is the all around salvation of every human soul for there is nothing else in life as important as to get into the right relationship with God.

There always will be a great need for a limited number of those whose special work is in the speaking ministry. There is, for instance, a young Chinese graduate of Yenching University who has a rare personality so winning that students flock to his meetings and are converted by the hundred. Certainly he ought to be in religious work professionally. Some of us are not gifted like that, but we ought all to witness in whatever way we can and possibly more often in words than we usually do.

I think if we really become convinced of this there may be some changes in professions, but there will be more real full time Christian service.

An Evaluation. Considering the fact that John Horsch never graduated from high school or college it is surprising what he achieved as a more or less self-taught man. A lack of scholarly discipline and objectivity are his chief weaknesses. His biographer states that Horsch's writings contain "a frankly propaganistic strain" and a "polemical slant that at times annoyed his readers and irritated his critics." Horsch was great as a pioneer research worker, but he had not yet attained the objectivity, discipline and scholarly methods which other Mennonite scholars have demonstrated. It is therefore surprising how the same biographer could state that "John Horsch was, without doubt, the outstanding historian for the history of Anabaptism which the Mennonite Church has yet produced." (If the "Mennonite Church" is identical to the Old Mennonite Church the statement might be true. But this church hardly produced John Horsch.)

Another extreme in the evaluation of John Horsch we find in the last book of the Dutch Mennonite historian, W. Kuehler, who for a long time quietly ignored the attacks of Horsch and then finally broke out with "The writings of Mr. Horsch are not within the bounds of scholarly research. They have no other purpose than to defend Menno and the strict Mennonites, his associates. He denies truth which is unpleasant for him and hushes up that which does not suit him . . . . Thus Mr. Horsch, even though he speaks in high tones about the history of the Dutch Mennonites, has never studied the wealth of sources of the library and archives of the Mennonite Church of Amsterdam . . . . It is too bad that the American Mennonites have to get their information about Dutch Mennonites history from such a writer." This outburst is understandable but also one-sided and the truth about the work of John Horsch as a historian must lie somewhere between these two extreme statements.

NEEDS OF THE VARIOUS BOARDS AND COMMITTEES

The General Conference Headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, receives many types of inquiries daily. In a letter received January 10, 1948, part of which is quoted below, our attention is called to one method in which mission moneys are being allocated into the various Conference treasuries by certain congregations of our Conference. We quote also our reply to this inquiry.

General Conference Headquarters
Newton, Kansas

Dear Brethren:

About a year ago you were working on a schedule that would show the needs of the Boards and Treasuries, which was worked out on a percentage basis. Would you please send me a schedule of this sort . . . .

We are creating what is called a Mission Fund into which all moneys given for missions will go. This fund is to be divided and directed into the different channels of the Conference by the Church Board. So please give us any help you can along this line.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Brother—:

The plan for distributing Mission offerings which you are adopting is used by a number of General Conference congregations.

In the 1947 Mennonite Yearbook, page 27, a report was given on the "General Conference budget for 1947" of $735,000 representing the needs of the various Boards and Committees.

The percentage basis was as follows: Emergency Relief Board 40 per cent; Foreign Missions—32 per cent; Mennonite Biblical Seminary—12 per cent; Home Missions—5 per cent; Board of Education—4 per cent; Peace Committee—3 per cent; Board of Publication—2 per cent. The remaining 2 per cent was distributed covering the needs of the Young People's Union, the Women's Missionary Association; the Mutual Aid Board, the General Conference Treasury; the Doctrine and Conduct Committee; the Minister Placement Committee, and the Church Unity Committee.

God willing, on February 17 to 19, the 1948 Council of Boards will be meeting at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Headquarters in Chicago to discuss and adopt a budget for the current year.

We earnestly request your prayers for the Lord's guidance and blessing upon the ministry entrusted to our Conference fellowship.

Your Brother in Christ,
Walter H. Dyck
Executive Secretary

By the request of Brother P. A. Penner, we wish to remind individuals and treasurers of all churches, Sunday schools, and young people's societies to address all remittances intended for General Conference purposes to the General Conference Headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

Signed,
Walter H. Dyck

Receives Letter from President Truman

At General Conference time, Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary of the General Conference, sent a letter to the President urging him to take action which would help to remove the causes of war. To this the Clerk of the White House replied that the President was out of town, but that it would be called to his attention. On January 2 Brother Dyck wrote to the Executive Clerk of the White House, requesting the reaction of the President. The following is the reply received from the secretary to the President:

Dear Mr. Dyck:

This is in acknowledgment of your letter of January second addressed to Mr. Latta, Executive Clerk of the White House.

I am glad to assure you that the President is in complete agreement with the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America on the paramount importance of removing the causes of war as far as possible at this time. The President is prepared to work to this end with every agency of good will whether religious, political, economic, or social.

The President is heartened and strengthened by the assurance that your General Conference will give help and support to a constructive Christian policy that seeks to remove causes of war.

We arranged, with the other churches in town, to make that week of Religious Emphasis Week for all of Geary. We have a membership of about eighty-five, of which fifty-one are resident. About twenty children below high school age are attending our Sunday school. Our attendance for the services has been around sixty to sixty-five. Our contributions for relief, for the year, amounted to about $1,084 and about 500 pounds of clothing. The other contributions totaled a little over $800. We spent approximately $2,059 for local church support, which includes the redecoration of the inside of the church building. We were glad that our pastor, Rev. A. H. Peters, and his family could move into the new parsonage on December 23.

In Memoriam

Otto C. Gingrich, well known Butler County farmer, died at the home of his son Earl, near Overpeck, Ohio, very suddenly of a heart attack on December 11, 1947, at the age of seventy-two years. Mr. Gingrich was the son of Daniel and Anna Sloneker Gingrich. He united in marriage with Clara Augspurger, who preceded him in death in 1943. He was a member of the Trenton Mennonite Church, and is survived by three sons, Earl, Clarence and Orland. The youngest son died in 1939.

Mrs. Katharine Amalia K. Kruse-Ewert, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Christian Krehbiel of Halstead, Kansas, was born April 10, 1866 at Summerfield, Illinois and came with the family to Halstead in March, 1879. Being the oldest daughter in a large family, even in her early "teens" she was a great help to her mother. In those pioneer days educational opportunities were limited for all, especially for girls, but Katie was one of the three girls admitted as students of the Mennonite Preparatory school which was established at Halstead by the Kansas Conference of Mennonites and strongly supported by her father and other friends. She was married on August 1, 1886, to Henry O. Kruse, an educator, who taught as superintendent of the Halstead public schools, later at Bethel College, and then to the time of his death on September 29, 1922, was professor of German at the state university at Lawrence, Kansas. In 1926 she was united again in marriage, this time to another prominent educator, the widower, H. H. Ewert, who for over thirty years had been the head of the Mennonite Collegiate Institute at Gretna, Manitoba. Here too she found ways of endearing herself to the student body as she had done at other schools, and the M. C. I. had a memorial service for her on December 14, 1947. After the death of Professor Ewert in December, 1934, Katie was brought by her only son Robert (Schiller) Kruse to his home at Madison, Connecticut, her future home, with the exception of some time she spent in Kansas with members of the family. In the summer of 1947 she suffered a stroke and was lovingly cared for by her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Madilene Kruse and the family until she was called on December 12, 1947, to her eternal home to be with her Lord and Savior whom she loved and served. Her body was brought to Lawrence, Kansas, and interred beside that of her first husband. Beside her son Robert and his wife Madilene and their two sons, Carl and Roland, four of her brothers remember her in deep affection, namely C. E. Krehbiel, Newton; Edward B. of New York; and Paul G. and Lucas P. of Halstead, and many friends.

A member of the Halstead Kansas, Mennonite church has written: "She was always interested in our church and asked about its welfare and sent her contribution. In a recent letter she wrote that she was the oldest standing member of our church."

Announce Tentative Plans for European Summer Service

by Elmer Ediger

Europeans are obviously needing help. Many individual lives and homes still show in varying degrees the cruel effects of war—physically, morally, and spiritually. In some places conditions have improved, but in others conditions have become much worse with the decay and disintegration of their prolonged continuation. We as a people are continuing and must continue to go in their midst "In the Name of Christ" to relieve physical and spiritual needs through our relief program. In addition to personal reports of our relief workers the recent awakening of our country as a whole is further evidence of this dire need—as individuals and corporately as a crumbling civilization. As Christians all of us have a responsibility for such a situation. One way of helping is to heed the call of the need for additional consecrated relief workers. The above is true not only of Europe but of other fields. Those who can should consider giving several years of relief service.

This proposed short term European voluntary service of one month in a devastated area is obviously not a substitute for regular relief work. It is to provide an opportunity to serve for those who can travel to Europe at this time but cannot give a regular term of service. Obviously a trip to Europe is worthwhile and educational in itself at any time but particularly so in this history-making period. Christians, students, and others, who since the end of World War II have gone to Europe as "tourists" have felt moved to contribute more to the personal needs of those about them than their tour permitted. This short term European V. S. is designed for those who can afford to take a trip to Europe at their own expense and who wish to contribute a portion of their time in direct service to needs about them. This pattern is an outgrowth of several suggestions—from U. S. students in the tour last summer, requests from non-students interested in such a contribution of education and service, the desire of some European Mennonite young people to participate in short term service projects, and our relief and voluntary service experience. Groups such as the Quakers and Congregationalists have pioneered in international work camps and have contributed much to the concepts of this projects.

Purpose

Although individuals may have other motives for their summer and tour as a whole, the major aim of this short term project must be that of Christian service—understanding, sharing, serving. This means doing within limitations what we can and what is best for the people to be served. We hope that such service is a moral equivalent to war and more. It can be one of Christian youth's ways of "fighting" in this world for Christ, peace, goodwill, understanding, and the relieving of physical needs.

A strong secondary purpose of V.S. in general is the experience-of-service value. In this case—sensing effects as directly as possible of war and its accompanying evils; having international inter-Mennonite fellowship in Christ through work, worship, and play; and through Christian fellowship, leadership and this setting, defining more clearly our Christian responsibility, individually and as a group. This short service period as an internship should contribute to this end.

The Work Project

Several useful projects in war devastated areas are being considered at present. Winterizing huts with mud plaster is a larger project being undertaken in one devastated area and to which such a V. S. group might contribute. It might be removing rubble, or helping to repair a church. There is a slight possibility that a work project might be arranged in Germany. Those knowing relief work realize, that possibilities can change anytime. We are not resting our planning on the Germany possibility. The project will be of a manual nature such as suggested above, adapted to generally non-skilled men and women. Atlee Beechy, Robert Kreider and other relief workers are making the investigations. Although the project will be a manual one and a needed service, the greater accomplishment should be, in the realm of Christian sharing, understanding, fellowship—a Christian witness.

Who is Eligible

Personnel will likely come from three categories: (1) The Council of Mennonite and affiliated colleges have requested a four week program in Europe in connection with the Council's proposed 1948 summer program for U. S. students. (2) Other U. S. and Canadian young people (young in spirit) may apply. Some Canadian Mennonite students, teachers, and other workers have already expressed interest. Individuals of this group may request part in tours organized by Menno Travel Service, Akron, Pennsylvania, and Amsterdam, Holland. (3) European young people having interest in our Mennonite principles and program.

The Applicant

. . . should be a sincere Christian desirous of serving wherever possible in the Name of Christ and be willing to do the most menial task cheerfully.

. . . should be desirous of growing in the life of love —in giving up self, in finding the will of God, in developing habits of prayerful devotion, and in disciplining self strictly to the way of love in all personal and group relationships.

. . . should have good standing with his church and represent it worthily.

. . . should manifest a willingness to respect another's convictions and to avoid such practices and attitudes as would be a stumbling block to others.

. . . should be eighteen years of age or above and should be emotionally and physically qualified to do a full day's work.

. . . should be willing to participate in the religious, educational, and recreational program and contribute of his time and energy to make it a success.

Unit Life and Activity

Not only six or eight hours of a day but all of the time in such a unit are to be considered part of the service. It is hoped that the group and leadership will all contribute to the devotional spirit and life of this service unit. Some of the evenings and week-ends will be planned for educational activities such as discussions with MCC relief workers, European church and other leaders who can help toward a good understanding of the country. Field trips, including contacts with European young people, their homes, churches, schools, will be arranged particularly on week-ends. Director, matron and other leadership will be provided, but it is assumed that all of the members will participate in the work and educational planning.

Living accomodations will likely be simple if not primitive. Attempts are being made to borrow tents. Unit members will be expected to take their turn at the necessary household duties. Arrangements will be made for bringing in food from the outside as much as possible. We hope that members will be willing to limit their personal spending during this period, and will in general accept the challenge of being less dependent on material comfort and security.

Expenses

The M.C.C. will endeavor to provide the major portion of the board and room during the period of service. It is assumed that individuals will be responsible for their own travel expenses to and from the place of service. Last year $700 was the approximate amount required for the entire trip. Efforts will again be made to provide as low cost ocean transportation as possible. Obviously this financial requirement will limit the size of the unit. Those who cannot afford such an expense should study other summer service opportunities. A folder on M.C.C. opportunities will be available upon request.

Time

One of the four weeks service periods will be during the month of July. It is possible that another period may be arranged beginning several weeks later.

Application

Application forms are available from MCC Voluntary Services, Akron, Pennsylvania or any of the Mennonite or Brethren in Christ Colleges. Those who are now students of these colleges should send applications through the school. Non-students may send them directly to Akron. Further information will be available on tours to be conducted by Menno Travel Service.

An Idea for a Youth Project— Tools for Paraguay

The following announcement coming from the M.C.C. concerning the recent immigrants to Paraguay suggests an interesting and very helpful project for young peoples groups in the church. They could be in charge of the collection and shipping of tools for the local church.

Announcing a Tools for Paraguay Program

The Mennonite refugees who moved to Paraguay recently are experiencing much difficulty because of lack of tools and equipment. By this time all of them have tasted the hardships connected with the establishment of a new settlement. Although they are happy to be finally located in their new homeland, they are in serious need of many things, especially farm tools and household utensils. The colonists who went to Paraguay a generation ago also faced this problem and managed to make some of their own tools from the scrap metals that were available at that time. The new settlers do not have access to such raw materials from which to make tools, and therefore are doubly handicapped.

If all these tools were to be purchased new, the cost would be considerable. However, in many cases the very tools that are needed so badly are such as can be contributed by our people in North America. Certainly this needed equipment can be supplied much more ecomonically through this method than by the outright purchase of new items. Our people are therefore being called upon to give such good used tools as they can spare, and which are the type that are needed by the people in Paraguay.

It should be noted that only certain kinds of items are useable. Folders have been prepared and are being mailed to the pastor of each congregation, giving detailed lists of the articles needed, and the place to which shipment should be made. IT IS VERY IMPORTANT that the instructions appearing in this folder be followed carefully. If additional folders are desired, write to Material Aid Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Preparedness - It Has Been Tried Before

One argument frequently heard is that after the first world war the course of disarmament had been tried. It did not work; therefore, a plan of preparedness must be followed in order to maintain peace — or else. The truth of the matter is that at no time after the first world war were U. S. expenditures for armament reduced to pre-war levels. As a matter of fact, expenditures were consistently more than double the 1913 level until the depression year of 1935. In 1913, military expenditures stood at $296,700,327. In the disarmament year of 1925, expenditures were $694,921, 242. It is so that the disarmament scheme was tried after the first world war. Today, we are urged to be prepared because disarmament was tried after the first World War.

Local Events

The Gulfport, Mississippi, Voluntary Service Unit is in the process of moving from its old location to a new site about a mile away. The old camp is located in rented quarters. The owners desire the property. Five 20x100 foot barracks have been purchased, taken down in sections, and are being moved to the new site. Also army blankets, mattresses, pillows, beds, bathroom fixtures and pipes have been obtained. Soon, the Gulfport Voluntary Service Unit will have its own permanent home.

Gulfport is carrying on a visual education program in the colored schools. An effort is being made to fit the film program with the classroom curriculm. One of the teachers requested a picture showing the life of a great Negro. Her hope was that in this way some degree of self confidence could be instilled in the pupils. A film, "The Story of Dr. Carver" has been leased for this purpose.

The money raising project being undertaken by the Eastern District Young People this year consists of the following:

$200	Home mission work at Paint Rock, North Carolina
$200	Equipment for maternity ward in our Chinese mission hospital
$200	Relief and refugee resettlement
$ 50	Men-O-Lan Retreat Grounds development

The Northern District Young People have as their year's budget, $1,500. This budget is to be distributed in the following manner

General Fund, Y.P.U.	$300.00
Mission Student Education	350.00
The Northern Light	150.00
Workshop Project	300.00
Retreat	300.00
Expenses (Executive)	100.00
TOTAL	$1,500.00

The total amount received by October 20, 1947, was $1,470.26.

Notes from Northern District Churches

First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota. We were privileged to witness a new method of Christian education in the form of an "audio-visual" film. The film was entitled, "The Man Who Forgot God." This film has for its purpose the stimulation of Christians, especially young people, to Christian service.

Our project of the summer was completed recently when we as a young peoples group met to dig the potatoes which were raised by your "Youth Volunteers" for our own local hospital.

Also, one of our programs consisted of a discussion, led by our pastor, on the subject, "Why I am a Mennonite." Our Young Peoples group was divided into two groups, each group assigned certain topics under the main topic. A leader for each group was chosen and a general discussion was held. Afterwards, the two groups came together again and the leader of each group reported to the entire group the conclusions reached and point of interest in these discussions.

A program, recreation, and social are combined. There have been picnics, speakers, panel discussions, movies, worship and campfire services. We have no officers but at each meeting of every other Tuesday night a new committee of five is chosen to plan the next meeting. In this way providing a variety of programs, which please and interest all the young people.

Essay Contest on World Friendship

NEW YORK . . . To promote "ideas of world citizenship and Christian responsibility for world order," an International Essay Contest for Youth has been sponsored by the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches and the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches. Winners of the contest, to be announced at Christmas, 1948, will receive the Zelah Van Loan World Friendship Awards.

The essay contest is open to all Christian youth throughout the world, it was announced by Mr. William Keys of the World Council and Dr. A. William Loos of the World Alliance. Junior entries in the contest — aged thirteen to seventeen — will be asked to write a short essay on "What Does the Bible Say about World Friendship?" The topic for Senior entries — aged seventeen to twenty-one — will be "As a Young Christian What Concrete Action Should You Take for World Peace Today?"

The First Award for Seniors will be 1000 Swiss francs (approximately $250) to be used for travel. In the Senior group there will be thirteen other awards and fifty medals distributed by the Zelah Van Loan Friendship fund. In the Junior section sixteen awards and fifty medals will be given out.

Final judgements will be made by an International Body of Judges meeting in Geneva, Switzerland.

American young people wishing to participate in the contest should send their entries to Rev. William Keys, Secretary for Youth Work, World Council of Churches, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York, no later than May 1, 1948.

STORIES THAT NEVER END

When we were small, we used to sigh when the stories father told us came to an end. And secretly we often sighed, "Oh, if only there were stories that had no end!" In a way, the little book TALES FROM MENNONITE HISTORY fills the bill.

The stories are separate, and yet they continue. That is what children will like—no end. How old were you, Reverend Janzen, when you wrote such charming stories for children? You must have been very old to know so much and very young to tell them just like children like them.

The book can be gotten at your Conference book stores.

GENERAL CONFERENCE FACTS

The Young People's Union reported that 104 delegates representing 87 churches were here for the Y.P.U. meetings.

Almost 180 Women's Missionary Association delegates were registered. Naturally many of these also included in the regular conference delegate list and some in the Y.P.U. list. There were some who were delegates for all three divisions.

Of the 1,414 people registered, over 600 were delegates and over 800 were visitors, and it is certain that some visitors never registered.

More than 11,000 paid meals were served at the dining hall at the twenty-two meals. There were also in the neighborhood of seventy-five meal tickets given to our General Conference missionaries and their children and to the foreign students, these tickets good for free meals during the conference.—Bulletin, First Church, Berne.

DUTCH MENNONITES RENEW CONTACT WITH GERMAN MENNONITES

During the month of October, two representatives of the Doopsgezinde Jongeren Bond (Mennonite Youth Organization) made a four-day goodwill tour of the Mennonite communities in Northwest Germany. The two young men, Jan Uhlenbroek and Piet Allersma, met Pastor A. Fast at Gronau and spent four days traveling with him and speaking to the congregations at Gronau, Leer, and Emden. They also visited the Russian Mennonites in these areas. Before the war these German congregations were members of the Dutch A. D. S., and as far as is known this was the first official contact of the Netherlands brotherhood with the German churches in this area since the outbreak of the war. It is significant that the step to restore these earlier connections was undertaken by the youth organization. According to a report written in the Algemeen Doopsgezind Weekblad, November 22, the step was taken as a result of the International Mennonite Conference held at Elspeet, Holland, in May, 1947.

Our Christian Funerals

by R.C. Kauffman

TO THE question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" the Christian answers with a confident, "Yes." Equally confident is he that this life hereafter is not dependent upon that present physical habitat of the soul, the body. This is the doctrine of immortality, perhaps more commonly held than any other single Christian doctrine; yet, also, one of the most inconsistently applied. It would be less discomforting if an article such as this could be entitled, "Our Pagan Funerals." Such a designation would, however, appear unfair, since it is questionable whether there is any pagan society that has, as a general policy, made as much of a travesty of funerals as have we. Some belief in immortality is almost universal. In Hinduism, Tagore has given this hope the following expression:

"Death is not extinguishing the light;
It is putting out the lamp because dawn has come."

Consistent with his belief, the average Hindu spends less than $5 on a funeral. Let us look at our Christian practice.

THE PRESENT SITUATION

Each year, in the United States, about 1,400,000 people die. The cost of disposing of these, our dead, runs into a figure that gives funerals a decidedly "big business" status. In the Survey of Current Business for June, 1944, the Department of Commerce estimated that in 1942 the American people paid $337,300,000 for funeral and burial service, $163,000,000 to cemeteries and crematories, and $60,600,000 for monuments and tombstones—a total of $560,900,000. This was an average expenditure of $405 for each death.

These figures become more significant when compared with certain other items estimated by the Department of Commerce for the same year. Bequests to churches and other religious institutions totaled $720,800,000; tuition paid to schools, colleges and universities, $578,300,000; payments by patients to hospitals and sanitaria, $53,100,000. The amount spent on our dead, in other words, is over three-fourths of that given to religious institutions; very nearly equals that spent on education; and exceeds that spent with hospitals and sanitaria in making sick people well. In a society that has traditionally affirmed its belief in the temporal nature of the body as over against the immortality of the soul, these figures are hard to understand. To an outsider they must surely represent one of the great enigmas regarding "Christian" society.

In allocating the blame for this situation, funeral directors have often been singled out. There are those who, callous and coarsegrained, first compete for the possession of the body by "ambulance chasing" and prearrangement with hospitals and who then find out, if they can, how much insurance the deceased person carried in order to fix their fees accordingly. There are those who accept commissions from florists and cemeteries; and others who, through finely devised techniques take easy advantage of their clients in the time of their bereavement by grossly overselling them. But not all, nor any, of this may be true of the majority of funeral directors. Especially in smaller cities and towns, undertaking is characteristically a family business which descends from father to son, and the undertaker here is a well-respected citizen, as mindful of his reputation as the doctor or minister.

Irrespective, however, of the character of the individual undertaker, the nature of the business is such as to impose heavy costs that must be borne by someone. A city undertaker must maintain an establishment large enough to conduct two funerals simultaneously, and sometimes three or four in the course of an afternoon.

Still more pertinent is the fact that the undertaking business is overcrowded. For the 1,400,000 deaths in the United States annually, there are 25,000 undertakers. If funerals were divided evenly, each would conduct fifty-six funerals a year—a little over one a week. But they are not. According to the publicity department of the National Funeral Director's Association (in The American Funeral Director, December, 1936), "Funerals in cities large and small fall with an amazing approach to uniformity into the following brackets: 15 per cent of the funeral directors handle 60 per cent of the total; the next 25 per cent handle 25 per cent; the last 60 per cent handle 15 per cent." If 15 per cent of the undertakers now handle 60 per cent of the business, it seems reasonable to suppose that half of the total could easily handle all of it. At any rate, under present circumstances, the majority of undertakers conduct less than fifty funerals a year, which means that each funeral must carry the entire overhead and operating costs for at least one week.

The greatest and final responsibility, however, falls to the general public—not only for tolerating the system as such, but also for promoting it directly through their expressed wishes. Pride and affection play their part: "This is the last we can do for our loved one; the best is none too good." Regret and remorse are also involved. All normal people have recollections of neglect and pain that cluster about their dead: "I should have awakened him to give him that medicine." "She could have had that new hat." "Why did I slam the door in his face?" "Such a silly thing, to fight over a piece of butter!" "Many a bronze casket," says one writer, "is the rueful Atonement of a cold wife, or perhaps a substitute for the letters that were never written to mother. The funeral bill is a vicarious cross." Only in our saner moments do we realize how much better this money could have been used on the living. There is a story of a mountaineer attending the funeral of the wife of his neighbor, Josh, and philosophically remarking: "If only poor Mandy could of seen old Josh carryin' on just as though his heart was breakin', and if only afore she died she could have had some of all them roses that Josh and others brung her, I wouldn't be one mite surprised if she were still alive."

OUR RESPONSIBILITY

Now what is the point of all this? Obviously one does not write on a grim subject such as funerals for the sheer entertainment value of it. Nor are we interested primarily in quoting figures. The figures that have been quoted plus many more can be found in other publications that have appeared from time to time. They all point to one and the same fact—namely, that funerals have become with us an un-Christian extravagance on a national scale. The purpose of this article is, rather, to urge a point of attack which other writers, addressing themselves to the general public, are unable to urge. This is that we, as a Mennonite body, give this matter our religious consideration and initiate the necessary reform—on a denominational scale.

There are several reasons why we, as Mennonites, should feel impelled to take the initiative in this matter:

1. Somebody has to do it and it won't be done by either the general public or the individual. The general public is slavishly committed to custom; a custom, in this case reinforced not only by tradition, but by vested interests, emulation, and all such other factors as have already been mentioned. Only legislation could possibly bring about a reform, and legislation in such private matters is extremely unlikely. As for the individual, what is there that he can do of and by himself alone? Indications are that there are many who are acutely aware of the problem and anxious to see a reform, but the individual is quite helpless in this matter. So long as he is a member of a group that adheres to this custom, his deviation from it will be regarded as a reflection of his esteem and affection for the deceased. Few would dare to subject themselves to this, the severest of social censorships, for it involves not only the person himself, but his departed loved one as well. So impelling is this social censorship, that even where the deceased has left explicit instructions for a sane and simple funeral, they are often not adhered to. The only solution that holds forth any promise is, therefore, one in which some articulate group—preferably a group that is both motivated and intimately united by a common faith—goes on record as adopting an alternative procedure. Then, and then only, can the individual follow the dictates of conscience and common sense in this matter without fearing the aspersions of others.

2. The Mennonites are singularly adapted to this reform by their tradition of the simple life. Not only are they singularly adapted, but they should also feel themselves particularly called to make this move in consistency with this principle.

3. We need the savings effected through such a reform for our expanding program of Christian service. In other words, such savings could very properly come with us in the name, not of penurious thrift, but "in the name of Christ." In the face of an ever-widening and challenging program of Christian sevice, it is well to urge people to increase their giving—but there is a limit to this, as anyone will attest who has been repeatedly approached for various causes—all of them worthy. We should think also in terms of saving toward this end. The savings possible here are considerable. There are an estimated 200,000 Mennonites in the United States. Assuming our death-rate to be that of the general population (11 per thousand), there are 2,200 Mennonite funerals annually. At the national average of $405 each, this amounts to a total expenditure of $891,000 each year. If, however the average cost of a funeral could be reduced to, say, $50, this total would become $110,000—thus yielding an annual saving of $781,000. In a day when we have become accustomed to seeing figures "writ large," $781,000 may not be impressive. However, for a group of our size it is, or at least should be. It is more than the annual cost of all our Mennonite missions put together, more than the annual cost of operating all our Mennonite colleges, more than the annual cost of our entire relief program. It is enough to support thirty such excellent witnesses to our Christian faith as that found in the Puerto Rico relief project. We spend it on our dead. Yet we confidently assert that the body is "a mere shell," only the soul is immortal!

Is it unreasonable to suppose that funerals could be conducted at an average cost of $50? It is not within the scope of this article to offer an alternative to our present-day funeral system. Such an alternative would involve medical and legal as well as practical considerations and should come only after a careful study made by a qualified and duly appointed group. Offhand, however, it does seem to the writer that it is not unreasonable to suppose that $50 per funeral should be adequate —not only as an average, but as the approved maximum. Certain of our fellow Mennonites in Canada are doing it for less now. At Rosemary, Alberta, there is a small organization known as the Sterbekasse, which acts as a funeral-insurance company, serving about five of our Mennonite church communities. Each member pays about 50 cents into the common fund whenever someone in the membership dies. From this fund the family of the deceased receives $40 in the case of an adult, $20 in the case of a child. This is calculated as adequate to cover the entire expenses. In fact, over a long period of time, an average of $25 per funeral was regarded as about correct. The largest item of any funeral is the casket; and this is made locally by a carpenter from the church community at a cost $10-$15. (We pay $100 for a cloth-covered casket; $250 for an oak casket, and $500 for a walnut or mahogany casket. Still others, obsessed with the idea that no moisture must touch the body, may pay up to $2,000, sometimes even more, for a seamless metal casket, guaranteed to be "moisture proof.") Opening of the grave and making of the markers are also done by members of the church community. In other words, funerals remain a function of the church. We have permitted them to become commercialized, and in our reform, need to bring them back to the church. Funerals, like weddings, belong to the church.

When a native Christian of India dies he is usually, because of tropical conditions, buried that same day. He is buried in a grave similar to ours. While in some cases there is a simple box-like casket, more often his body is wrapped in a clean white sheet and therewith lowered into the grave. In each end of the grave there is a small pillar of stone or brick across which are placed several boards, separating the covering sod from the body. The total cost? Perhaps two or three dollars at most. We do not wish to identify ourselves in our standard of living with these, our brethren, during life; we may not be willing to do so even in the great democracy of death. But how near to doing so dare we come?

Little Kentucky Girl Gives Unorthodox Reply

by Margaret Slotter

Miss Slotter

"The Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name." Acts 9:15 These words were first spoken of Saul of Tarsus, but every child of God is chosen of Him to bear that Name to a world lost in sin. The bearing of the Name of Jesus into school rooms filled with boys and girls is a joyous privilege. Many children here, as everywhere, never enter a house of God, never hear a prayer or a hymn in their homes.

The forces of evil would hinder our entrance into the schools with the Word, but little ones and many teachers look forward to "Bible-teacher" days. The enthusiasm shown and warm welcome received make these days delightful ones for me. (Many teachers here love Him, too.)

While teaching a lesson on the Prodigal Son, I noticed a little girl (second grader) all tense with feeling. Her eyes got bigger and bigger and her mouth opened wider and wider and by the time the hungry boy was in the fields tending hogs, her little face took on an almost "starved-to-death" look. I asked who would like to guess what that hungry boy thought of doing? "I'll bet you, he thought of up and killing one of them hogs and eating it," was her quick and reasonable reply, for what could be better than a meal of fresh-killed pork? I'm not sure that she accepted the explanation to her answer, but when the boy finally reached his father's house and his father's arms, she said with a long relieved sort of sigh, "Oh, I'm just so glad that boy went back home." Now when reviewing with that group they get the question, "What did the boy say to his father when he reached home?" "I — have—sinned" comes in unison. And what must all boys and girls say to God before Jesus can clean them up and take away their sin? "I—have—sinned" comes the answer again.

Pray for children here that they shall not be deceived by Satan and hindered from taking that first step of faith and by faith in Him who bears the Name that is above every Name. And as they come to Him saying, "I—have—sinned," the angels will say, "Oh, we are so glad they too came."

Friends, notices of your share of my support being paid into the Home Mission Board and special gifts for Christmas continue to come to me and ever make me appreciative of your concern for and care of me in His work. Thank you.—Margaret Slotter, Scripture Memory Mountain Mission, Cumberland, Kentucky.

BIBLE COLLEGE SERVES CANADIAN YOUTH

THE Canadian Mennonite Bible College is an institution which was organized by the Canadian Conference of Mennonites of Canada. Its formal opening took place at the Bethel Mission Church, 103 Furby Street, Winnipeg, on October 5, 1947. Its purpose is to give Canadian youth an opportunity to prepare themselves for Christian service.

Its teachings and principles are to be distinctly Mennonite in scope and application. A deeper appreciation for our Mennonite heritage is to be fostered in all school activities and services. The distinct Canadian Mennonite needs are to be recognized in offering courses both in the English and German languages.

The inspired Word of God is to be the chief source book of study and training. Great emphasis shall be placed upon personal study and application of the Scriptures. The fundamental Scriptural teachings will be interpreted in accordance with our historical Mennonite positions. Christ Jesus, the chief cornerstone, shall be honored as Lord and Saviour of mankind through the atoning work on the cross.

The newly organized College shall give our young people an opportunity for a deeper, fuller and more adequate training for Christian service. It will seek to hold high standards of scholarship as well as spiritual endeavour so that all work done in it can be fully recognized by its sister Conference colleges.

Administration of the College

The Canadian Mennonite Bible College is essentially a Conference institution. Its administration is directed by a committee of thirteen members elected by the Canadian Conference. The executive members of this committee are: Rev. J. J. Thiessen, Saskatoon, Chairman; Rev. I. I. Friesen, Winnipeg, Vice-Chairman; and Rev. Jacob J. Gerbrandt, Saskatoon; Secretary-Treasurer. The Committee planned to have its first official meeting since the opening of the College, on January 12 and 13.

The Faculty

Rev. Arnold J. Regier, President, Instructor of Bible and Christian Education; Rev. I. I. Friesen, Pastor of Bethel Mission Church, Instructor of Theology, Greek and Christian Education; Mr. Henry Wall, Assistant Treasurer, Instructor of Bible and German; Rev. P. A. Rempel (fall and spring term) Instructor in Christian Education; Mr. John Conrad, Instructor of Music and Director of College Choir. Assistant Instructors: Mrs. Arnold J. Regier, Instructor of Piano; Miss Irma Conrad, Instructor of Piano; Miss Annetta de Graaff (Holland), Instructor of Voice. Visiting Lecturers for Winter Term: Rev. J. J. Voth, North Newton, Lectures on the Writings of John; Rev. Paul Schaeffer, Gretna, Lectures in Church History: Rev. J. H. Janzen, Waterloo, Lectures on the Epistles to the Galatians.

Entrance Requirements

Students must be eighteen years of age or older. It is expected that students coming to the Bible College will have at least Grade XI, preferably Grade XII academic standing. In some cases those not having this minimum standing may be permitted to enter as special students.

Grade XII in most of the Canadian Provinces is comparable to first year college in the States. Ontario students are an exception in that their standing is lower and are recognized on the same level as students in the United States. Accreditation in Canada is somewhat perplexing in that the provinces are not uniform in standards of degrees.

Degrees and Awards to students having Junior College standing and having satisfactorily completed a three-year theological course.

Full accreditation is sought in affiliation with Bethel College and Bluffton College toward the Bachelor of Arts degree. Arrangements are being planned and discussed whereby it is hoped that students desiring this degree might obtain it in one year's residential study in these colleges after finishing the prescribed course at C. M. B. C.

Those students not having full academic requirements before entering the Bible College and who are capable of college work will be awarded certificates showing work completed at the College. This provision is made in view of older students who have not had opportunity to finish their high school work in previous years. Prospective students are encouraged to finish their secondary academic work, wherever this is possible, before entering College.

Student Organization

The student body of the Bible College during the first term consisted of twenty-six students from all parts of Canada. They made up a fine Christian fellowship. Fifteen additional students from the Winnipeg area enrolled for night classes which are given on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. The Thursday evening class is climaxed by a mass choir rehearsal under the direction of Mr. J. Conrad. About one hundred young people have taken part in this choir, which now has become a very integral part of our school activities. A Christmas concert was given on December 18 in the large Mennonite Brethren Church of this city.

To further Christian fellowship and develop a more spiritual attitude among the students a prayer meeting is held every Saturday night beginning at 6:30 and lasting until 8:00. It is the hope and prayer of every student that these meetings may become traditional and that a gerat blessing may be derived from them.

Deputation work is probably the most important activity carried on outside of the College. These activities are varied and may include the rendering of programs in churches by the student body or smaller groups of students. Plans are also underway to have groups sing in hospitals and in homes where there are sick or aged people.

The Mennonite Central Committee -- It's Organization

A large program of relief, refugee aid, peace education, voluntary service, and mental health service, which reaches out to the four corners of the earth, and at the same time touches upon many activities within our own local communities, cannot be operated without appropriate direction and support.

The policies and activities of the MCC are decided upon by a group of Committee Members who are representatives of each of the Mennonite groups participating in the MCC work. (Each group is entitled to one representative for every 25,000 members or fraction thereof.) Within this group of MCC members, officers are elected to provide leadership. It is however, only through the clear support of this body of members, that the work is carried forth. Thus, the MCC is literally the agent through which the groups choose to work.

Akron Office

The work which this body of MCC members approves is assigned to a staff of workers. The central office for this staff is located at Akron, Pennsylvania, where forty individuals work as administrators, assistants, secretaries, and housekeepers. It is this office which handles, or coordinates the handling of matters relating to selection of service personnel, sending of relief workers, shipping of material aid, administration of relief work, receipt of cash and material aid contributions, arrangements for refugee migration, resettlement of refugees, remittances of funds, keeping of records, preparation of information and publicity, distribution of literature, and many other duties of greater or lesser importance. Much detail is involved in this work—writing of many letters, filing of much information, compiling much data on shipments, reviewing many workers' reports, maintaining large mailing lists, contacting many governmental officials, answering many inquiries, etc. In spite of this, sincere effort is made to avoid cold business routine, but rather to maintain personalized service. Each detail is undertaken with a devotion similar to that which is expected of relief workers abroad.

Other Center of Activity

But not all of the work is done at the Akron Office. A branch office is located at Kitchener, Ontario, Canada, which acts as a clearing center for all matters pertaining to our people in Canada. Material Aid collection centers are located at (1) Reedley, California, (2) Newton, Kansas, (3) Goshen, Indiana, (4) Silver Springs, Pennsylvania, (5) Ephrata,Pennsylvania. (6) Kitchener, Ontario, and (7) Winnipeg, Manitoba. Volunteer workers in communities near food or clothing centers help in packing and processing food, clothing, soap, fats, shoes and other materials. During certain seasons of the year a number of portable and stationary canneries are busy canning meat, fats, and other foods for relief.

How the Work Is Made Possible

Going just one step further, each congregation is in a real sense an "MCC Center." It is basically the sacrifice of housewives, farmers, business men, children, young people, ministers,—in other words the people of our local Mennonite communities—who make this work possible.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Delmar Wedel of Aberdeen, Idaho, reported to the entire seminary group on Friday about his experiences in prisoner-of-war work during the past two years. He showed pictures of the camps and a number of the prisoners in these dreadful enclosures. The terrible effects to body mind and soul of years in military service under depressing conditions were revealed in these pictures. The fact that America has been spared acute suffering is increasingly apparent whenever the M.C.C. workers report on realistic situations in the world today. Delmar Wedel spoke to the chapel service in the morning, and in the evening at the Woodlawn headquarters; he addressed the Mennonite Seminary Fellowship and the Mennonite Student Fellowship of the city, the latter group embracing all students in the various schools and universities.

This week the Bethany faculties voted to accept the suggestion of Robert Kreider, M.C.C worker of Stuttgart, Germany, to collect religious magazines and periodicals to be sent to him for distribution among Christian leaders of Germany eager to read American religious thought at this time. The entire combined student body is expected to cooperate in this collection.

Leo Beck of Amsterdam, Holland, has announced his engagement to Jahnke van Wyland. Miss van Wyland who is also from Holland, is a student at Bethel College. They expect to enter missionary work.

Marvin Dirks is sheduled for a week of meetings at the Central Conference Church in Washington, Illinois, January 18-23. Rev. Ben Esch is pastor of this church. He is a member of the Seminary Board.

Mrs. Jacob Goering has been asked to head the nursery department at the St. James Methodist Church.

Erna Friesen of Henderson, Nebraska, was in Chicago recently in her capacity as director of the General Conference Voluntary Service Program. She is planning the summer service units to be held in various communities throughout the States. Plans call for another unit to be located in Chicago.

Don. E. Smucker will conduct special meetings at Henderson, Nebraska, January 25-31. Central Conference ministers will gather here February 10-11 for their annual retreat. Meanwhile, great preparations continue for the United Boards' Meeting of the General Conferene to be held here February 17-19.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Erwin Goering, director of the Adult Education program has arranged, in cooperation with the Marion County and City school systems, for three extension courses to be taught each Wednesday evening at the Marion High School—Primary Methods, by Marjorie Ruth; Playground Activities, by Mildred Beecher; and Educational Psychology, by R. C. Kauffman. Previously Mr. Goering and Mrs. Harshberger assisted the Goessel Church during a series of mid-week classes. David H. Suderman was again invited to direct the chorus of 425 voices at the second annual Western Kansas Education Association League clinic and concert held January 18 at Scott City. The all-membership Winter Retreat for the Student Volunteers was held at the Halstead Boy Scout Cabin from 5:30 to 9:00 p.m. on January 16. Rev. Walter Gering addressed the group on the theme of the retreat, "The Challenge of Missions."

REV. ALBERT GAEDDERT TO SPEAK AT FREEMAN BIBLE WEEK

The next number in the Community Entertainment series will be the Blaisdell Trio—piano, flute and cello—on February 3. They present a program of classical music. Mr. Emil Waltner, member of the General Conference Peace Committee for a number of years, spoke to the students on the Compulsory Military Training conscription problem. Ralph Graber gave his original oration in chapel on Wednesday. The Annual Bible Week will be observed January 26-30 this year. Rev. Albert Gaeddert will be the speaker.

DUTCH MENNONITE MARRIED YOUNG MAN WISHES TO COME TO AMERICA AND WORK ON FARM

Johannes O. Franken, thirty-three years old, has had experience in raising of flowers and vegetables. His minister writes that he is a sincere young man who would like to leave the old country, because he believes and practices non-resistance and hopes to find a better opportunity in America to live and adhere to his principles. He is a good worker, says Rev. Th. van der Veer, who is a pastor of the Mennonite congregation of which Franken is a member. Franken would come into this country under the Dutch quota. He is not a refugee. Any Mennonite farmer, who would be interested in signing an affidavit promising him work, would be doing a genuine service to Mr. Franken by helping him realize the same kind of cherished dreams that our own forefathers cherished.

QUAKERTOWN, PA. January 15, 1948.—Through cooperation some things can be done that one organization can not do alone.

This is the case of the sending of Rev. G. G. Neufeld, Whitewater, Manitoba, to South Ameria for a period of six months. The Executive Committee of the Canadian District Conference, remembering some of their experiences of twenty years ago, felt keenly that someone should go to South America, representing the General Conference, to help in the consideration and discussion of the problems connected with Mennonite pioneer work in Brazil and particularly in Paraguay, where within the past year 2,300 refugees landed.

The Board had felt that anyone going should stay a longer period of time. The Canadian brethren offered to assume a good portion of the expense involved, and so on January 20, Rev. Neufeld took a plane from New York for South America.

The first important meeting that he is to attend is the ordination of Rev. David Koop, Curityba, Brazil, as Elder. Rev. J. E. Kaufman, who is in Brazil, under MCC direction, is to have charge of the ordination, but Neufeld is to assist.

The second assignment for him is to attend the ministers' conference of all South America Mennonites, in Friesland, Paraguay, early in February.

At this Conference Rev. Neufeld will have opportunity to make contacts with every colony and field. Later on he is to visit each settlement. While there, he is to check on the value of the Der Bote subscriptions that are being sent to hundreds of families as well as the 1,000 German Hymn books and 400 Kinderlieder books that have been sent.

Since Brother Neufeld was a school-mate of a number of the present leaders in South America, he will be able to bring the greetings of hundreds of Canadian Mennonites who came from the same background in southern Russia many years ago.

With the plans going forward to make preparations for the expected ship-load of Mennonites to come to Paraguay in 1948. Brother Neufeld shares in completing arrangements.

Let us remember our representative while he is on this long trip and engages in many conferences, that the Lord might work through it all for His glory and the good of our brethren in South America. Let us also remember the Neufeld family in Whitewater in our prayers.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions of the General Conference.

Bundesbote Kalender Under New Name

The BUNDESBOTE KALENDER which came out a little bit too late to suit most of our friends last year, is now almost ready for printing and should appear some time during January.

Have you placed your order for this book?

The price of the BUNDSBOTE KALENDER is 25 cents. The price is the same, but the name will be different.

The name "KALENDER," was quite appropriate when it was, for the most part, truly a KALENDER. This year the Board of Publication has decided to make it something more of a literary venture, and we have included some of the finest writings which have appeared in the field Mennonite literature during the year of 1947. So, in effect, the KALENDER is no more, but the MENNONITISCHES JAHRBUCH will probably fill its place—even more than fill its place! It is, as it were, a new publication in a new dress, slighty smaller in dimension, but greatly enriched in content. We send it forth with our best wishes, and trust that it will be a genuine blessing in many a home. We suggest that you send your orders direct to the Mennonite Publication Office, or to your nearest book store—Rosthern, Saskatchewan, Newton, Kansas; or Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Indiana.

Klapper Kasten or Typewriters

Do you have a good, used portable typewriter that you could spare for an evangelist working under the Home Mission Board in Paraguay?

We say "typewriter," and not "klapper kasten."

Peter Klassen, working in Brazil, writes that he is considerably handicapped by not having good writing facilities, and would like very much to receive, if possible, something better than the "Klapper Kasten" which he is now using and which handicaps him considerably in his work. If you have one that you could donate right soon, before new workers are sent to South America, please write directly to the Home Mission Board, Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander 724 Juniper, Quakertown, Pennsylvania.

DEER CREEK CHURCH DEDICATES PARSONAGE

On June 8, 1947, the congregation of Geary, Oklahoma, unanimously voted to sell the old parsonage, which was bought September 4, 1938. They voted to build a new parsonage on the same lots as those of the church building. On August 19 several farmers came to town with their tractors and bull-dozers and began moving the dirt for a full basement.

The house measures thirty by forty feet. The outside walls of the building are of cement blocks, built upon a twelve-inch basement wall, and then stuccoed and finished in white. It is a three bedroom house. The majority of the labor was donated by the members of the church. It was built under the general direction of a local contractor.

The virtual completion of the $10,000 parsonage was celebrated by more than fifty members of the church in a brief dedicatory service held in the house on Tuesday evening, January 6. Open house was observed in connection with the dedication service.

The dedication service was opened by singing of hymns. Then the 121st Psalm was read, followed by prayer. Those church members who had contributed a great deal of their time in the building of the house were singled out for special praise, and many of them spoke briefly on the six months of cooperative effort. The pastor closed the meeting with a dedicatory scripture and a special dedicatory prayer, asking the Lord to grant that the house might truly be a part of the church, and for particular strength for all who would occupy the house in the years to come.

The congregation of Geary now has a church and parsonage which gives honor to the General Conference Mennonites. The group is not very large nevertheless they believe in maintaining their organization and plant, an undertaking which is commendable and which should be a challenge and inspiration to other Mennonite congregations.—A. H. Peters, Pastor.

Loyalty

From an analysis of the orders received from three hundred Sunday schools for whom the Mennonite Publication Office now orders the Sunday school supplies, it was learned that one hundred and forty use only material put out by the General Conference Board of Publication.

The Price of Meat

"The price of meat!" is on the tongue of everyone these days with the price of meat soaring to unprecedented heights.

In this connection we cannot help but think about another type of meat, of which Jesus spoke when he said, "I have meat that ye know not of." And when, at wide intervals, people question the price of THE MENNONITE or DER BOTE as being too high, we think of that saying. Coming into the homes of 7,377 readers (THE MENNONITE) and something like 4,500 for DER BOTE—or approximately 12,000 Mennonite homes every week!—they bring "meat, indeed," for our people. Here is food for the inner man. Here is something to chew on. Here is something that gets into the spiritual sinews and fibres and strengthens us as a people of God for the great tasks and the great opportunities which lie before us.

And what is a fair price for such meat? Good, clean, wholesome, nourishing, strength-giving meat! Filled with spiritual vitamins, and proteins and carbohydrates of the living Word of God.

Too high? How do we know it's too high? When is the price of meat too high, and who shall set a value upon the price of such spiritual meat?

Under the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN 68 churches have said that the price is not too high, but that the price of not putting out THE MENNONITE and DER BOTE and THE JUNIOR MESSENGER and our other church publications is far higher than what it costs to put it out. As we look at it, it is something like this: It costs a lot to put them out, but it costs a lot more not to put them out.

And, to complete the analogy we put fifty copies of THE MENNONITE on our postal scales. This is what we found. They weighed 2 pounds and 15 ounces. At the price of $1.80 per reader on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN, an average cost of 60 cents per pound. What other meat did you find on the meat counter last Saturday comparable to that, in price and in quality!

Let's say it in different language. That means that you get a good meal—spiritual meal—out of every issue of THE MENNONITE (not allowing for the fact that maybe each member of the family gets a good meal) for 3½ cents per meal.

And what is the cost of the meat which you serve at the table in your home?

Mennonite Historical Committee Makes Plans

Recently the Historical Committee of the General Conference met in North Newton, Kansas, to make important plans both for the immediate future and with the long-range view.

One of the items on the agenda was the assignment, which the Committee received at the Conference session at Berne, to work out a plan by which the future of the oldest Mennonite meeting house in America will be safe-guarded and maintained as a historical monument. This is the Germantown Mennonite church building.

In this connection it was agreed that the Committee should be willing to serve in an advisory capacity in matters pertaining to markers and monuments of Mennonite cultural value. For example, there are some church structures and other buildings which are to be replaced, which have a unique cultural background. The Committee will be glad to investigate such places and help to advise whether such buildings should be preserved rather than torn down. In the same way the Committee is glad to give any assistance it can, in case markers or monuments are to be erected. This is especially important in view of the fact that the seventy-fifth anniversary of a number of Mennonite settlements and congregations of the prairie states will be commemorated in the near future.

The collection of the former Mennonite Historical Association has now been turned over to this Committee. Plans are to make most of this material available for use in the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago. This collection consists mainly of periodicals, some books, and a few documents. Outstanding among the collectors that gathered and preserved these materials were H. R. Voth and H. P. Krehbiel.

Your Historical Committee continues to collect historical material such as books, documents, periodicals, and other items that are or will be of cultural value. In these and other matters please contact any member of the Historical Committee: S. F. Pannabecker, chairman; Cornelius Krahn, secretary; C. Henry Smith, A. J. Dyck, J. H. Janzen, E. E. Leisy, J. Herbert Fretz, and J. D. Unruh.

—Paraguayan Mennonites may be helped in their buying and selling abroad if plans made by the M.C.C. for an export-import corporation materialize, according to a statement by William T. Snyder. "The total M.C.C. budget for refugee migration and resettlement needs in Paraguay is approximately $535,000 for the next fiscal year."

—The Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, with Rev. Andrew R. Shelly as pastor, has adopted the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan for this coming year.

—Rev. A. W. Friesen of Henderson, Nebraska, writes: "Mrs. Friesen and I have been asked by the Home Mission Board of the General Conference to serve for two years in Paraguay, South America. My time of service as elder of the Bethesda Church terminates on February 1, 1948. All correspondence concerning the church or conference should be sent to Rev. J. F. Epp, temporary leader. We have had our physical examinations, and, the Lord willing, will be getting ready in earnest for our long trip to South America."

—Eicher Emmanuel Church, Wayland, Iowa: Our church was one of the three Mennonite churches of this community to secure the use of the portable canner owned by the Middle District. We contributed eleven hogs, which were processed into 1,136 cans of meat. In addition an offering of $314 was taken for the purchase of CARE packages. We were privileged to have the Men's Gospel Team of Bluffton College in our church on January 2.—Mrs. W. J. Graber, Corr.

—Mennonite Bible Mission, 4221 South Rockwell Street, Chicago 32, Illinois: Mrs. Ethel Ball, aged fifty-one, a member of this church, was accidentally killed when she was pushed off a safety island while waiting for a street car. Her husband died five weeks ago of a heart attack. There are four children, the youngest of which is thirteen. Ernest Neufeld, son of Rev. John T. Neufeld, won a decision in a debate against Universal Military Training, in his public speaking class at Kelly High School, Chicago. His partner deserted him the last minute, saying that she was for it. He won the decision single-handed against three speakers on the affirmative side. Miss Evelyn Triebe, a faithful member and teacher of the Bible Mission, graduated from the Moody Bible Institute on December 18.

—A Christian Life Conference, in which the Carlock, Congerville, Normal, and North Danvers churches of the Middle District took part, was held on January 10, 11, 1948. "The Christian Home" was the theme of the conference, which was led by faculty members of Bluffton College. Two messages were featured on Saturday evening, one on "Issues in the Present-Day Home" by Edna Ramseyer and another one on "Christian Growth in the Home" by J. S. Schultz. On Sunday morning each of the faculty members brought a message in one of the cooperating churches. The joint service on Sunday afternoon opened with a message on "Religion in the Home' 'by Harry Yoder, and one on "Family Worship in the Home" by Paul R. Shelly. Those attending then divided into discussion groups for children through the ninth grade, young people, young married couples, and adults. The discussion was lively, and it was agreed that the forty-five minute period was hardly long enough. The discussion of each group was summarized by one member of the group. The meeting closed with the singing of a consecration hymn during which each person was asked to make a personal consecration along the line of the thing which impressed him most during the conference. In the words of one of the pastors, "It was a most worth while institute and brought out many thought-provoking and challenging discussions."

—First Church, Colfax, Washington: The program committee of the Pacific District Conference met at the Rev. P. D. Unruh home recently. Present were

FANNY WAS BLIND

Fanny Crosby may be just a name, and then again it may mean a lot more than just a name.

We have often sung hymns written by Fanny Crosby and at one time or another were even impressed by the fact that there were so many songs in the MENNONITE HYMNARY written by Fanny Crosby. It remained, however, for us to be told that Fanny Crosby was blind for us to really sing the song with renewed appreciation. Our pastor told us how, when Fanny Crosby was a little child and had some illness, her mother through a misunderstanding applied a hot poultice on her eyes and caused a blindness in early childhood which never left her all through her life. This suffering through the years did not keep her from writing some of the most beautiful poems which have come down to us in some of the most beautiful hymns in our MENNONITE HYMNARY.

This is just one illustration to show how much more a hymn means to a person when you know who wrote it and the circumstances under which it was written. That is the purpose of the HANDBOOK FOR THE MENNONITE HYMNARY, which is now being printed and which is due for publication approximately June 1. It tells the stories of practically every hymn in the MENNONITE HYMNARY and because you know the story, you sing it with new appreciation. Psalm 47:7 says: "That they may sing with the understanding also." Some people sing only with the mouth. Some do not sing with the mouth at all, but they sing with the understanding. And then there are those who sing both ways, and we cannot help but believe that they are the people who get the profoundest appreciation out of the singing of the great songs in the MENNONITE HYMNARY.

Peter B. Jantz, Odessa; Mr. Lehrman of Aberdeen, Idaho; and Rev. Unruh. Sunday school offerings for the past year totalled $1,143.30. The total attendance was 5,586. The young people enjoyed the Youth for Christ Rally in Spokane.—Mrs. Horace D. Rogers, Corr.

—Grace Church, Albany, Oregon: On New Year's evening our group had a carry-in-fellowship dinner in the basement of the church, which was enjoyed by all. Rev. Kliewer gave us some spiritual points for a good new year. Nine hundred pounds of clothing for relief have again been sent on their way to Europe. Our pastor, Rev. Kliewer, is recovering from an operation. He has not missed any pulpit appointments and is improving daily. On February 1, Rev. Archie McNeal will be with us for one week.—Mrs. Ivan Emmert, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Rev. and Mrs. Orlando Waltner showed more of the pictures which they brought with them from India. These colored moving pictures portray their work much more vividly than any mere verbal description and have proved very interesting to this and surrounding communities. Plans are being made for the meat canning project. The canner is to be in this community the latter part of the month. We are looking forward with keen anticipation to the visit of the men's chorus from Henderson, Nebraska, next Sunday. Musical programs of this sort are always welcomed.—Corr.

—Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: The New Year was begun by observing prayer week the first three evenings. Mr. Gerhard Neufeld, a refugee who recently came from Europe with his family, gave a report of his refugee experiences. The Mountain Lake Bible School is sponsoring a Bible Conference, January 14-16 with Rev. Prince of Minneapolis, Rev. John Boehr of Omaha, and Rev. H. H. Janzen of Winnipeg as speakers. Because of the lack of room for Primary classes, a number of rooms are being built in the basement of the church.—Helen Penner, Corr.

—Wayland Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: Our church has just completed a meat canning project for relief, with the aid of the portable canner, making a total of 1,192 cans. The Sugar Creek and Eicher Mennonite churches of this community have also joined the project, and altogether 6,600 cans of meat were canned, all of which was taken to Kalona, Iowa, the food center for this area. Some donated hogs, some money and many cheerfully offered their help. It was a joy to see how much could be accomplished working together.—Mrs. E. S. Mullett, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: "You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you," were the keynote words of the message brought to us by Rev. B. H. Janzen, field worker of the Western District Conference. Speaking in our church from Sunday through Tuesday night, he urged that we become better acquainted with the work of the conference. In fear and trembling he is laboring with sixty-six churches, totalling 17,000 souls.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kansas: Although our church building has been dedicated some finish work remains to be done. A group of men has decided to work at the church two or three days a week until the work is completed. Brother Gerhard Peters of Bethel College gave us a very fine sermon on January 19.—Mrs. Fred Gehring, Corr.

—Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: On February 16, 1947, nearly a year ago, our congregation had the joy of welcoming Sister Elisabeth Goertz home from China on furlough. This morning friends and relatives gathered in church for a mission festival and farewell service for Miss Goertz, who is to sail for China on or about February 7. Rev. A. E. Funk and Miss Goertz spoke at the service. In the afternoon a community service was held in the Hillsboro school auditorium. On the program were: Rev. A. E. Funk, Rev. Peter Goering, Rev. S. J. Goering, Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, Rev. W. C. Voth. Miss Elisabeth Goertz, and Rev. D. J. Unruh. The Bethel College Student Volunteer Quartet sang. An offering for foreign missions was taken at both services. It is about twenty-seven years since Miss Goertz was first ordained as missionary. She is going back to China for the fourth time. Several members from our church helped Miss Goertz pack for her voyage.—Katherine E. Nickel, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: We began the New Year with a good German sermon and singing of the beautiful German hymns on New Year's morning. On January 7 a full church deeply appreciated the messages in song and word given by the Seminary Quartet.—Mrs. Dan J. Hein, Corr.

—Deer Creek (Oklahoma) Church: Brother Richard Ratzlaff of Bethel College had charge of our Sunday morning services, January 11. January 16 marked the fiftieth wedding anniversary of our only remaing charter members, Mr. and Mrs. John Stauffer. The congregation was saddened by the passing of one of its faithful members, Mrs. Ferd Reusser, January 14. —Mrs. Harold Bechtel, Corr.

—"The Ministry in the World-Wide Church" was the title of the paper given by Rev. Wesley Ewert, of First Church, Philadelphia, at the Third Quarterly Conference of the Eastern District, January 26. Dr. George A. Greiss spoke in the evening.

—First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas: The Men's Chorus sang at an evangelistic service in the Old Mennonite mission of this city on January 18 the same chorus supplied the music for the entire program of "The Voice of Victory" broadcast over station KWHK, Hutchinson. Our average attendance at Sunday morning services in 1947 was 165 as compared to an average of 145 in 1946.—Mrs. V. Sawatzky, Corr.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: This congregation donated a carload of flour to the "Christmas Ship," the Northwest equivalent of the Friendship Train. This flour has been consigned to the M.C.C. in Europe. During the morning worship service of January 18 Mr. Alvie R. Schrag was installed in the office of deacon.—Mrs. Willard Wiebe, Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kansas: In our mid-week Bible classes the adult class is studying Matthew, the young people the Scripture Truth Course from the Moody Bible Institute, and the children's classes are also studying various Bible truths and stories. We are now having joint services with the Walton Methodist church the first and third Sunday evenings of each month.—Ella Voth, Corr.

—Salem Zion Church, Marion, South Dakota: The Missionary Orlando Waltner family left for Mountain Lake, Minnesota where his family will stay in the home of Mrs. Waltner's mother. Orlando has enrolled for the second semester in The Biblical Seminary, 235 East 49th Street, New York 17, New York, Rev. John C. Kaufman of Whitewater, Kansas, brought our Sunday morning message on January 18. He has been visiting his children and friends of this, his home community.—Corr.

—Rev. Abraham Albrecht, Newton, Kansas, underwent a major operation recently. At the time of this

HUNDRED PER CENT DIVIDENDS

In business there is a pretty strong suspicion that when any business organization pays dividends higher—much higher—than the usual six or ten per cent, there must be something wrong with the business. It must be risky!

There is one business in which that generalization does not hold true, and that is in the Kingdom of God.

Take, for instance, the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN of Conference publications. A hundred per cent investment here means a hundred per cent dividend every year without fail and every member on the list of your church will receive a dividend, and the dividend, we feel confident, will be far in excess of even one hundred per cent. Who shall say that the renewed loyalties, the new insights, the increased understanding, the renewed vitality, and the new dynamics which come about in the church through the HUNDRED PER CENT SUBSCRIPTION PLAN does not exceed $1.80 per member. Certainly not we, for we believe that the benefits under the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN can never be estimated fully.

And that, too, is perhaps the reason that each year new churches are added to the list of those who are already on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN. Is your church getting its share of the dividends—its share of the hundred per cent dividends?

writing, January 20, he is reported to be doing very well.

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: Mrs. Dirk P. Tiezen, wife of the late Rev. Dirk P. Tiezen, died January 12. The funeral was held January 16. The canner is moving into the Freeman community on January 19 and will be set up in the basement of the City Cafe in Freeman. It is planned that approximately 30,000 pounds of beef besides pork and poultry will be canned for relief.—Corr.

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pa. Zion Church gave $9,476.35 in goods and cash for world relief during 1947.

—West Zion, Moundridge, Kansas: On the evening of November 19 an informative and helpful panel discussion on universal training was held in the church basement. On the panel were Dr. Burton Metzler, Bible Instructor in McPherson College, Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, sociologist of Bethel College, and Mrs. Arnold Miller, a mother. The Christmas Eve program was very impressive. An interesting fact about the program was that the pageantry and the reading that went with it were original and local productions. Mrs. Omer Rupp, superintendent and Mrs. Raymond Unruh, vice-superintendent planned the scenes and worked out the reading. On December 28 a church fellowship dinner was served immediately following the morning worship service. The annual church business meeting was held in connection with this meal while the members sat about the tables. A Sunday school teachers meeting is held each Saturday evening when the Sunday school teachers study and discuss the lesson they are to teach the next morning.—Mrs. Ernest Miller, Corr.

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pa. The children of our church, as well as adults have a better concept of the life of children who contract leprosy and are sent to the community for the healing of lepers in Africa since having seen the movie film, "The Healing of M'Vondo" which was sponsored by the Service Guild of our church on January 16.—Henry Burkhard, Corr.

—First Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio: The Rev. Ed. Miller of the Chicago Seminary will be with us January 25. He will bring the morning sermon, and in the evening service he will show pictures of Seminary life. Twelve of our number are attending a teachers training school which holds weekly sessions through January and February in nearby Dover, Ohio.—Wiley McDowell, Corr.

—Garden Township Church, Halstead, Kansas: Reverend Milton Vogt, has charge of Sunday services during the absence of Reverend A. J. Dirks who is participating in the two weeks Bible Conference at the Oklahoma Bible Academy, January 19 to 30.—Corr.

—First Church McPherson, Kansas: Families attending the church enjoyed "Family Night" as the Christmas program of the Christian Endeavor. On New Year's Eve a group from the church enjoyed a period of recreation and refreshments and a worship service at the watch night service. The Ladies Friendship Circle sent a box of Christmas toys and other necessary articles to Gulfport, Mississippi, where Miss Mary Ann Kaufman, a member of this church is working. For the mid-week church service the class in Mennonite history has proved to be very interesting. An hour of crafts, especially for the young folks, follows the study class and is directed by Rev. Roland Goering, assisted by Mr. Walter Stucky of Moundridge. On January 18 friends and members of the church enjoyed a fellowship dinner in the church basement. The average attendance for the past few months has been from seventy-five to eighty-five. The present membership is sixty-four.—Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: The church has graciously accepted the gift of 80 acres of land given by Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Stucky. This grant was given with the condition that all church dues be equal, and any member not able to pay his dues be considered by the treasurer and his dues paid from the proceeds of this land. All other proceeds shall go for church maintenance.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

PETER DYCK'S FILM NOW AVAILABLE

A copy of the film which Peter Dyck showed to illustrate the resettlement of the Russian Mennonite refugees from Berlin to South America has been secured by Bethel College. The message which he gave in connection with the film was recorded and is now also available in type written form. The primary aim of securing this film was to preserve it as a historical document of a great event in our day, for the future. We are, however, willing to show this film in a limited number of churches under certain conditions. In order to give it the greatest possible protection we would like to show it for the time being only with our own projector operated by one of our own men. This limits the service to churches within driving distance. For information regarding availability, dates, and expenses in connection with the showing of this film write to Mennonite Life, North Newton, Kansas.

The Story of Christian Endeavor in the Central District Conference

by Mildred Sommer

[It is almost two years since the Central Conference officially united with the General Conference. As yet, there is much that the two conferences need to learn about each other before they are united in spirit and understanding. The following story of the C. E. work among Central Conference young people will serve to make the two know each other better. Ed.]

Ten year after the first Christian Endeavor Society was organized, this enterprise was introduced into the Central Conference of Mennonites, the first society being founded in the North Danvers Church, in 1891 by Mr. Eli Sharp. He came in touch with Christian Endeavor work after being converted in a Presbyterian Church in Fulda, Minnesota in December, 1889, where he became a member of that society at that time. He returned to Illinois in 1890 and was instrumental in organizing this work among the Mennonites. Mr. Sharp was active in Christian Endeavor over thirty years.

A few years later other societies were formed in the surrounding churches, and in 1909 there was a total of nine. In 1912 a motion was made and seconded that a field worker be appointed to visit each society once a year and that the societies meet the expenses of that worker. Miss Elizabeth Streid was chosen for that office and an Advisory Committee was appointed with whom she could consult. In 1911 she visited the Indiana churches and was instrumental in starting Christian Endeavors there. The societies then numbered eleven; in 1912 there were thirteen; in 1932 there were nineteen with a total of 620 members. The following churches had Senior Societies: Bethel, Boynton, Calvary, Carlock, 62nd Street Chicago, Comins, Michigan, Congerville, Danvers, East White Oak, Eighth St., Goshen Indiana, Flanagan, Meadows, Normal, North Danvers, Peoria, Pleasant View, Silver Street, Topeka, Indiana, and Warren St. In 1927 when the Lookout Committee was appointed, of which the field secretary is chairman, there were two helpers appointed for Illinois and one for the Indiana Churches. This committee visited all the societies and at that time paid their own expenses in the furthering of Chrisitan Endeavor.

Plan A Rally

In 1913, largely through the efforts of Elizabeth Streid, it was decided that the Christian Endeavor Societies have a rally. The first one was held at the East White Oak Church. Illinois, July 19, 1913. These rallies have been held yearly, either in the month of May or June. The third and one of the most outstanding of these meetings was held on a week day, May 23, 1915, at Carlock. Besides having an all-day program there was a sacred concert consisting of band and vocal numbers held at five-thirty and at seven a parade, numbering over five hundred Endeavorers, who marched through the town and held two street meetings for shut-ins.

The next year the rally was held on a Sunday and a few years later the ministers suggested that it be held during the week again. Since then, they have again changed it to a meeting on Sunday, except for one year, 1930, when it was on a Friday preceding the Young People's Retreat.

The Conference is divided into two groups for their rallies, namely Illinois and Indiana. The first Christian Endeavor Rally in Indiana was held July 16, 1916, at the Silver Street Church.

All the programs were very well planned to stress the importance of Christian Endeavor and its possibilities. At the first four rallies Mr. C. A. Lehman, of Chicago, was present and had charge of all praise services and talked on different phases of Endeavor work, as he is greatly interested in it. He has been at a number of meetings since that time and has always added a great deal to the meetings.

Another feature of one of the rallies was a twilight service which was held between the afternoon and evening services. In 1919 there were sectional meetings planned for the Junior and Intermediates by their respective superintendents and this plan was used for many years.

C. E. Has Program at Annual Conference

In the Conference programs, from year to year, there was always one session devoted to Christian Endeavor. There was not any delegate meeting until 1913 as the business was always taken care of during the program; in that year it was decided to make a Christian Endeavor Constitution. The following committee was appointed for that work: Elizabeth Streid, Harry Heiser, and Edward Vercler. They asked the Conference to be allowed to make their own programs for that session. The requests were granted in 1914, and the constitution was approved by the Adjustment Committee of the Conference, February 1, 1915. The Executive Committee of the Union, 1932, consisted of President, Vice President, Secretary, Field Secretary, Junior and Intermediate Superientendents.

Junior Work Develops

In 1916 when the Lookout Committee was appointed a superintendent was appointed for the Junior Work. Miss Pearl Ramseyer was selected for that position. In that year a society was organized in the Flanagan Church and in 1917 she visited many churches in the interest of Junior work and by Conference time there was a total of eight societies, as follows: Fifth Street Goshen, Danvers, North Danvers, Carlock, East White Oak, Peoria, Flanagan, and Meadows with a membership of 224. In September 1917 a society was organized in Washington and 62nd Street reorganized.

Standards were arranged in 1919 for the Juniors' with the aid of the President of the C. E. Union. This required that the Juniors be Christians before becoming active members and to memorize the string of Bible Pearls before being promoted to Intermediate or Senior Societies. In 1922 a three-fold program was worked out: first, personal relationship with Christ on the part of the Junior; second, Bible study; third, mission work. Bible study and Mission work have been strongly emphasized from the beginning in Junior work; the same emphasis was placed in Dr. Clark's orginal C. E. society. By 1925 there were fourteen active Junior Societies with a membership of 432.

At the Conference in 1926 the Junior workers held a meeting at which time the work was discussed and a committee chosen to make definite plans for the societies. It was felt that there would be more co-operation and more interest if some program were outlined that would help the societies to do the same thing at the same time. Nothing was planned for the winter months as nearly all the societies were rural and work difficult while the roads were bad.

For several years they have had a Junior Conference at the annual C. E. Rally, and an afternoon of children's meetings at Conference is given over to the Juniors. In 1932 there were sixteen societies in the Conference, although not all were organized along regular Junior Christian Endeavor lines.

Start Intermediate Work

The Intermediates have also had their line of work and it has been a little harder to get Intermediate Societies in all the churches due to the fact that they have a Junior and Senior Society and some do not have room for a third group. Nevertheless this is the age which needs the greatest chance to go on with the work that they have been doing in the Junior Society.

In the 1918 Conference C. E. program there was held an Intermediate Conference and that year one on the Rally program and in 1920 an Intermediate Superintendent was appointed. Permission was given in 1922 to have officers chosen among the Intermediates to take charge of their own conventions. In 1927 the Superintendent had two other people help in visiting the churches and organizing societies. In 1932 Mrs. Roy Yoder received space in the "Evangel" for notes, and she chose two helpers to help work out a standard for this group.

In 1920 the proposition of helping a student in school was brought before the Endeavor Union and it was accepted. In 1921 it was decided that a dollar a member be required for this work and later it was decided that the Advisory Committee of Christian Endeavor Educational Committee of Conference and the Ministerial Board pass on the student to be aided before money was given.

Emphasize Missionary Work

One of the chief objects of Christian Endeavor was to create greater interest in missionary work. Most of the members of that first society in Dr. Clark's church came into it from a missionary band.

This same interest is found in the Mennonite societies, and there are two types of missionary work done: home and foreign. The home work consisted of helping the home missionaries financially, and this in turn was used to help the poor and needy. Calls were made to those who were sick and flowers were also sent. Some societies conducted services on the freight boats in Chicago Harbor, and services were held on Sunday for the sailors at the dock. Food, flowers, and reading material was distributed to the Cook County Hospital. Thanksgiving baskets were distributed and Christmas treats were given to the Forrest Home Poor House. Money was given to help buy an invalid chair for a Junior. Money was also given to State C. E. work, and the "Christian Endeavor World" was sent to the camps. Communities were solicited for new members.

In the foreign mission work, during the year 1912, money was given to support a native guide and interpreter for Brother Haigh and Stevenson while they were investigating the Congo District in Africa. The next year money was sent to Mr. and Mrs. Haigh. After this many societies sent money year after year to support native students on the mission field and also native teachers. Later the societies furnished money for a building in Africa.

Sponsor a Medical Missionary

So far back as 1914 the need was felt among the societies for a medical missionary on the African field and some of the societies decided to save their collections for the purpose of educating some one for the special work. This was mentioned several times during the years and kept before the minds of the Endeavorers. It was not until 1931 that this ambition was attained; at this time the Missionary Board presented the project to the Christian Endeavor Executive Committee and Advisory Committee of the Christian Endeavor Union of supporting a medical missionary on the field as they had some one who was ready to go immediately. This was presented to the Societies who were in favor of supporting Dr. Unruh. They have taken a great interest in this work and have received a great deal of joy out of this. Dr. Unruh left that same fall stopping in England to take a course in tropical diseases; from there he went to Belgium where he took a required short course in French; he reached the field in December, 1932.

Besides the missionary work done in Africa, money was sent in 1900 for the support of three girls in India and for missionary work in China. In 1915 money was sent to the Henry Ummel's Orphanage in Belgium and money and clothing was sent to Armenians.

Develop Standards for C. E.

In 1916 there was an efficiency chart which was used by the Societies, and in 1928 a motion was made and seconded that a committee be appointed to work out a Standard for the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Conference. The following persons were appointed: Lloyd Ramseyer, Frieda Steird, and Ben Bohn. In 1931 it was felt that the Standard could probably be brought a little nearer to the societies if it was graded; so the Executive committee of that year with the aid of the former committee on making the Standard undertook the task of rating it. At the end of the year they were able to present it to the societies to see if it would be workable in their group. This Standard was worked out not for the purpose of competition between societies but to help each individual group to attain a higher mark of perfection each year, and this can only be done by having a goal for which to strive.

Begin Peace Declamation Contest

A new project had its beginning in 1932— the Peace Declamation Contests which were held as a part of the Young People's Retreat that was held each year in June. Judges were appointed and prizes of five and three dollars were awarded. A keen interest was shown so that the following year it was decided to have contests for two groups—high school age and above high school age. The orations were learned from material obtained from Peace Books. In 1936 the contest was enlarged to three groups, the third giving original speeches. The prize for this group was a $100 scholarship to Bluffton College. Perhaps, interest in the contests began to wane, for the following year the prize money was increased, and in 1938 the contests were eliminated entirely. A new type of Peace Program was planned. Since the nations seemed on the verge of war, it was decided to have Russel Lantz a conscientious objector of World War I, tell of his camp experiences and to have Carl Landis tell of the Work Camp at Chicago. The War was beginning to paralyze the peace program, and although the C. E. Organization moved to push for peace, there was no record of any particular peace program after 1939 when a peace questionnaire was sent out to the different churches.

The organization was expanding. In 1935 it became necessary to create two offices in place of one secretary-treasurer. It might be mentioned that although official personnel changes much throughout the years, Mrs. Letta McCowan held the above stated office since 1928, and to date she still holds the position of treasurer. The organization owes much to her untiring help and ability. That same year it was necessary to make an appointment to the Publication Board for the "Senior Notes" in the Evangel. In 1941 the C. E. absorbed the full responsibility of the retreat programs. A special retreat committee was no longer needed. The war had its effect here also, for these meetings were cut from two-day study courses to one-day inspirational meetings. This was a combination of Rally Day and the Retreat. The Rally Day had been dropped the previous year. In 1947 the Retreat was dropped in favor of Youth Rally Day; two of these were held, one in the spring and one in the fall.

In 1937 the educational fund was depleted, but the project was not abandoned. In 1938 it was asked that the fund be continued with help from the churches. The following year aid was again given to a worthy student. In 1942 the problem of the educational project was brought before the Ministerial Committee who saw to the distribution of the funds for the next year. For a time the Ministerial Committee and the C. E. Executive Committee worked together on a plan for promoting this project. Meanwhile money kept coming in to the C. E. fund. Finally last year it was decided that the C. E. inform the Ministerial Association that the fund was still in existence and if in our Conference they knew of a worthy young person who is preparing for full time Christian Service, the C. E. would stand ready to lend such assistance as they are able. Possibly the difficulty of the educational funds was due in part to the rapid growth of interest in a larger missionary project.

Help Educate and Sent Medical Missionary

The support of a medical missionary in Africa has been a large and important project over many years. In 1934 the Organization supported Dr. Unruh on the field. In order to accumulate enough money for this purpose share certificates were sold in 1935. That year it was learned that possibly the doctor would come home the following June. There was a little difficulty here as he came home sooner than expected. On account of ill health he was unable to return to the field. In 1937 a committee made a trip to Chicago to ask Merle Schwartz if he would be willing to receive help from the C. E. toward his medical education. The need of a medical missionary was so great that it was felt that if aid were given, Merle might be able to go sooner. He accepted the help which was accordingly given. From that time on the Missionary funds were kept for the time that they would be needed to send Dr. Merle Schwartz to the Congo. In 1939 the funds were placed into Federal Savings and Loan to draw interest. The next year the C. E. assured responsibility paying the Doctor's allowance, in field and school, pay clothing allowance, passage, and tuition. The $300 bequeathed by Mrs. Swartz was used to buy instruments for the doctor's use in school and on the field.

The Schwartz's sailed in 1941. Their ship was captured by the Germans. Funds had to be secured for passage back home and then for the second trip abroad later. This was accomplished and still the missionary fund grew. Now the Schwartz's are at home on furlough, and the C. E. presented them with a new car to be taken to the mission field when they return.

From time to time minor projects were sponsored such as the music festivals held in the fall of 1937 and of 1938. In 1934 a five-week institute was held beginning the fourth week in October. The churches were grouped and leaders appointed acordingly. The next book "Expert Endeavor" was used.

In 1946 the president, Jerrold Rocke, and the Illinois Field Secretary, Irvin Nofsinger attended the Young People's Union of the General Conference at Newton, Kansas.

C. E. Officers

The officers of the Executive Committee for 1947 include: President, Jerrold Rocke; vice-president, Melvin Norquist; treasurer, Mrs. Letta McCowan; secretary, Mrs. Mildred Sommer; Illinois field secretary, Irvin Nofsinger; Indiana field secretary, Rev. Robert Hartzler; Junior superintendent, Helen Grove; Intermediate superintendent, Rev. Maynard Shelly; Advisory committee, Rev. Harry Yoder, Rev. William Weaver, Rev. Ben Esch, and Rev. Lotus Troyer.

Just now, as always, there is a need for greater interest in Christian work. There is a real need for full time Christian service. This was the keynote of the last youth Rally held in November. Rev. Don Smucker presented the need particularly in Central Conference very forcibly and called for more full time workers from the young people. There is still a need for the educational fund; there is still the need for missionary work; there is still a need for greater Christian Endeavor.

Are You an Unbeliever?

Last November a cartoon in the Chicago Sun and Times pictured a gigantic statue of Mars, the god of war. On his shield was emblazoned these words, "War is inevitable." Before the stature hundreds of people prostrated themselves—all except one, a "peacemonger," who stood up straight before the idol as if to challenge its sweeping claim. The title of the picture called this one who refused to bow down "the unbeliever."

Are you an unbeliever in the god of violence and slaughter? When everyone around you, including some of your best friends, assume that there is nothing else to expect but war with Russia, do you nod in agreement, or do you try to point out that there is another way, the way of Christ? Will you go along with every form of worship at the shrine of militarism, or do you stand up squarely on your principles and say, "Not by might, nor by power, but by God's Spirit"?

It is unfortunately true that the more we talk about war with Russia, the more we make it likely—that the oftener we bow down before the idols of Mars, the stronger that force becomes. So it is the time now—as it has always been since the days of Jesus—to make a clean break with war and preparations for it, remembering that all war is sin. It is time to decide whether you will serve God or Mars, to make your choice of masters.

To be an unbeliever in the way of war, you must become a more convinced believer in the way of Jesus Christ. Let his mind and his heart be in you, that you may help to bring his healing touch to a war-scarred and an aching world.—Kenneth Morse

PEOPLE WALKING

(Erna J. Fast M.C.C. relief worker in Hamburg, Germany, wrote the following descriptive paragraph in a recent Christmas letter:)

Everywhere one sees people walking, in city and on country road. Trams are terribly overcrowded and cars unavailable, so they walk. Along the road they walk carrying heavy bundles of turnips or potatoes gleaned in a farmer's field, or pulling high loads of twigs and straw in their little wooden carts, or carefully bringing home the precious little bucket of milk as the week's ration. In sunshine and in rain they walk, and now that the snow has come they still walk. It is as we note their shoes that the dull impact of all this becomes real and meaningful. The common shoe of Germany today is a heavy wooden sole to which old bits of leather or cloth have been fastened so that the shoe will stay on the foot. Children stumble along with these sandals fastened to their feet with bits of string or leather strips. One might well say that shoes are the measure of a man's wealth in Germany today. What all this will mean when the bitter cold and snow becomes a daily problem I cannot grasp. The distress and needs about us are tremendous and sometimes seem insurmountable.

Young People's Union Council

The annual meeting of the Young People's Union Council is to be held at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois, February 13, 14, and 15. Representatives from each district of the Conference, the colleges, and the Y. P. U. executive committee compose the Y. P. U. Council. A program discussing vital youth problems has been planned as well as discussion of and action on the developing conference youth program.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTION NEEDED FOR RESETTLEMENT OF MENNONITE REFUGEES

A year ago everybody in our Mennonite constituency was glad that the MCC had succeeded in moving 2,000 Mennonite refugees from Europe to Paraguay. We are happy that during the month of February it will again be possible to move Mennonite refugees, this time in two shiploads, each carrying about 800 persons who are destined for Paraguay. Other boatloads will later carry Mennonite internees from Denmark to the same country. Larger groups of refugees will also be assisted in getting to Canada and other countries.

We are extremely grateful that the International Refugee Organization has offered free ocean transportation for displaced Mennonites as it also does for other displaced people in its attempt to help these unfortunate folks to a new home. This will be a tremendous help in lightening the financial burden of the MCC resettlement program. But the task of helping these new settlers get a start will still involve a large expense. They will need food and clothing for months. Tools and machinery must be made available to them. Houses will have to be built and simple furnishings added, etc.

These refugees arrive in their new home utterly without funds. The task of equipping family units and of helping them to a new start, therefore, is difficult, especially when we keep in mind that in so many family circles the father and breadwinner is missing and that the burden of providing a home for her small children will fall upon the mother. To give adequate assistance under circumstances will require a considerable sum of money.

At its last annual meeting, January 9-10, the MCC carefully reviewed the needs of this resettlement program and then approved a budget of $550,000 for 1948. The Emergency Relief Board of the General Conference estimates that our share of this total task would certainly require over $100,000 from our churches. As in the previous movement to Paraguay it is suggested that about 75 per cent of this sum be raised by outright gifts and that 25 per cent be secured as loans. These loans are to mature in ten years bearing 2¼ per cent interest.

The contributions to this resettlement program can be spread over a number of months. The Emergency Relief Board would, however, like to urge our General Conference members and churches to give this great and urgent need their immediate, earnest and prayerful consideration and then contribute gifts in cash or in loans to this resettlement fund. Please send such contributions as soon as possible to our Conference Treasurer, General Conference Headquarters, Newton, Kansas, indicating in your letter what the contribution is for and also stating definitely whether it is a gift or a loan.

The Emergency Relief Board hopes that these contributions for the resettlement program will not diminish the regular contributions to relief because the general relief needs in certain areas of the world are still very great. It is our prayer that God may continue to bless our people materially so we can help effectively in alleviating human suffering in the Name of Christ and that He may give us that depth of Christian concern and love that will lead us to respond in a worthy manner and in Christlike compassion to the cry of human need.—Emergency Relief Board, Henry A. Fast, chairman; R. C. Kauffman, Financial Secretary.

"The task of helping these new settlers get a start will involve a large expense."

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

AS WE SEE IT:

AN AMISHMAN, according to an associated press story, was arrested and held in jail at Goshen, Indiana, on the charge of having kept his daughter roped or chained for nearly twenty years because she refused to become Amish at the age of twenty-one. We cannot vouch for the truth of the story, but it had enough news value to make the front page of at least one midwest metropolitan daily paper. Thousands of readers will no doubt accept the story at face value and allow their judgment of bearded Amishmen to be colored by it. If the story is true, it is a very rare case, probably the only one in the long history of the church. The Amish are desirous to keep their young people within the household of faith and use every perusasion, as they have a right, and as other groups do too, to keep them within the fold. Some of their young people become rebellious and leave the church, which may cause anguish and tears but not violence such as the story implies. Newspapers rejoice in iniquity. They are more interested in a morsel of scandal than in telling the truth about a devout religious people like the Amish.—Lester Hostetler

IS UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING DEAD? A note in Newsweek says it is; that it has now only a minority support in Congress and that the chance for passing the bill during this session is negligible. The cost of UMT, which the Administration concedes would amount to $2,000,000,000 a year, was one factor for the sharp drop in sentiment. This is not the basic argument aganist it from the point of view of the peace churches. We oppose millitary training for the same reasons that we oppose war. But the question of cost cannot be ignored. The Christian conscience has something to say about the stewardship of money, and in this case it is saying that the huge amount of $2,000,000,000, if spent for this purpose, would constitute a misuse of funds sorely needed for relief, education, hospitals, missions,and a thousand other good Christian causes. In the meantime it is probably best to take nothing for granted and to continue the flood of letters to Congressmen, voicing opposition to universal military training.—Lester Hostetler

The "BOOK NOTES," which are beginning in this issue, are to be a weekly feature. They are to be kept short, and the books mentioned are to be of interest to the great majority of readers. The aim is to have a democratic selection of the books. Members of Conference boards and committees will be asked for nominations. The "BOOK NOTES" will draw your attention to great thinkers and their products of heart and mind.—Editor

"THE WAY OF TRANSGRESSORS IS HARD"

One single atomic attack could destroy about one-half of the population of America and could wipe out its basic industrial setup. The man-of-the-street in America needs to awaken to this fact. According to Professor George T. Renner and Harold F. Clark of Teachers College, Columbia University, there are in the United States thirteen cities with a population of 1,000,000 or over and eighty cities with a population of 100,000 or more. "Thus 93 well placed missiles could subject nearly one half the American people to atomic bombing in a single attack." (The Bomb Secret Is Out!," by Robert M. Hutchins in the American Magazine, December, 1947). According to the article just cited, ten bombs could wreck the steel industry, five could put an end to much of the oil refining in this country, another five could put a stop to anthracite coal production, five could wreck the automobile industry, seven could stop copper refining, and twenty more could destroy a large part of such strategic "industries as rubber, optical instruments, magnesium, airplane engine,locomotive, radio, radar, and chemical roduction." "Thus 50 atomic explosions could paralyze this nation's defensive war-making powers."

Robert M. Hutchins, Chancellor of the University of Chicago and a man who was in on the ground floor of making the atomic bomb, tells us that the bomb secret is out. He says in the article already quoted, "If we told the Russians all we know at this moment . . . . this knowledge would not shorten their work more than 6 months." He suggests that we would be foolish if we did not assume that Russia was making atomic bombs.

Furthermore, there is no defense against the bomb. The Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists states, "There is no military defense against atomic bombs, and none is to be expected." The atomic bomb puts everyone in the "front lines."

This dark picture is one in which the stars can and should come out. It is essential that the people of America, who have long relied upon war as a means of settling problems, stop long enough in the push of the daily round to read in the structure of the atom that the Bible has been trying to tell them for a long time: "Blessed are the peacemakers . . ." It seems that man rather generally must first find out by suffering what will not work before he finds and accept God's Way. To quit fighting because of fear may not seem like a very high motive. Nevertheless, a realization of how the human race could destroy itself can lead to repentance and more positive attempts at settling the world's problems. The Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists is working hard to acquaint the American people with this picture. Mennonites may find in this approach one way of working towards peace-making. The threat of the atomic bomb is a powerful illustration of the fact that ". . . . the way of transgressors is hard." This needs to be made plain.—Editor

Thy People Shall Be My People

by Leland Harder

A petition signed by some Mennonites from Russia was read in the United States Senate on a day in December, 1873. A minority group of some forty thousand Mennonites were looking for a place where they could enjoy civil, social, and religious liberty. They asked the American Congress for one large section of land on which they desired to live together in colonies. "Justice exalts a nation," they wrote, "and if you will use your great influence to promote this mission, and assist the emigration of those who are persecuted for conscience sake, you will have the deepest thanks of the sorrow-stricken Mennonites of Russia and, what is more, the blessings of Him who said that even a drink of cold water shall not be without reward."

That petition was rejected. The result was that only one-fourth of the Mennonites came to America. The leader of the opposition to this movement spoke for his element in Congress when he said:

> "Let us have no exclusion; let us know no boundaries; let us be a nation and a people where every man stands on an equality with his fellow man, where there are no boundaries like Chinese walls to separate one sect or one opinion of politics, or one calling from another; but an equal citizenship and an equal freedom."

That same day another minority group was asking for certain privileges. They were Negroes and their spokesmen were Negro members of Congress. They were fighting for the Civil Rights Bill which was designed to give them equal privileges in all the public chartered places of accommodation such as restaurants, hotels, and public conveyances.

"Gentlemen," said one of them, a minister by profession, "you say that colored men should not come here begging at the doors of Congress for their rights. I wish to say that we do not come here begging for our rights. We come here clothed in the garb of American citizenship. We come here demanding our rights in the name of justice. We come, with no arrogance on our part, asking that this nation, which laid the foundation of civilization and progress more deeply and more securely than any other nation on the face of the earth, guarantee us protection from outrage. We come here, five millions of people—more than composed this great nation when it had its tea party in the Boston Harbor and demanded its rights at the point of a bayonet—asking that unjust discriminations against us be forbidden."

The response to this petition was very different from that experienced by the Mennonites. "You may pass this bill," declared a gentleman from Georgia, "but you cannot change color by legislation. The Southern people may languish in prisons, the remnant of their substance may be exhausted in fines, but they will perish before they will submit to the humiliating degradations of social equality with the emancipated negroes."

Let us have no exclusions? Let us know no boundaries? Consistency, thou art a jewel!

The Civil Rights Bill of 1873 was the last of the great measures of justice for the colored people. The Negro minority kept this Bill alive through four sessions of Congress. That great period of Republican administration which had saved the Union, freed the slaves, and added three admendments to the Contsitution, was coming to a close. The colored statesmen were making their last fight in the final week of the 43rd Congress in 1875 when nothing short of a miracle happened. An influential gentlemen from Ohio by the name of James A. Garfield made a speech in support of the Bill. "I have lived long enough," Garfield said, "to learn that it is safest for a nation, a political party, or an individual man, to dare to do right, and let consequences take care of themselves. For he that loseth his life for the truth's sake shall find it. God has taught us that the fate of our race is indissolubly linked with that of the black man on this continent." The Civil Rights Bill became law. Racial discrimination in public places was abolished by legislation. But when the Southern Democrats came into the majority, it was declared unconstitutional.

A famous sculptor once left his studio in charge of his servant. The servant, conceiving his genius superior to that of his master, attempted an improvement in a favorite statue. The master returned to find his idol—the labor of years—converted into a torso.

For seventy-five years the Negro class of citizens in this country have been discriminated against in public places because a work of genius in 1875 was converted into a torso. A few months ago, President Truman appointed a Special Committee on Civil Rights to investigate the problems of minority discrimination in this country. Their report will become a classic on the subject, to be referred to for years to come. They saw that the 19th Century Civil Rights Bill should be reenacted as part of the solution to a grave problem.

WHY? "I'll tell you why," said one of the colored Congressmen in 1873, a barber by trade and a former slave, "We have been identified with the interests of this country from its very foundation. The cotton crop of this country has been raised and its rice-fields have been tilled by the hands of our race. All along as the march of progress, as the march of commerce, as the development of your resources has been widening and expanding and spreading, as your vessels have gone on every sea, with the stars and stripes waving over them, and carried your commerce everywhere, there the black man's labor has gone to enrich your country and to augment the grandeur of your nationality. This was done in the time of slavery. If we have been hewers of wood and drawers of water; if we have made your cotton-fields blossom as the rose; if we have made your rice-fields wave with luxuriant harvests; if we have made your corn-fields rejoice; if we have sweated and toiled to build up the prosperity of the whole country by the production of our labor, I submit to you now that the war has made a change and we are free, is it not fair and right that we should come in and enjoy to the fullest extent our freedom and liberty?"

It was apparent that prejudice was the first obstacle in the way of the Civil Rights Bill of 1873. "Admitting that it is prejudice," said a Congressman from Virginia, "you as members of Congress are bound to respect that prejudice. It is a prejudice that God himself placed in the hearts of Southern children and the Southern people."

The Negroe barber interrupted him by saying, "I deny that!"

"Sit down!" the Virginian retorted. "I am speaking to the white men of this House. I am talking to gentlemen." Addressing the Chair, he said, "Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be interrupted by him again."

James A. Garfield called the gentleman to order. His point was that when a member ceases to address the whole House, he ceases to have a right to the floor.

A few days later a distinguished Negro lawyer Congressman, who had studied in famous London schools for nine years, made a speech that held the attention of men on both sides of the House. He spoke brilliantly refuting the arguments against the bill. He didn't hesitate to bring the ax down on his opponents. When he came to the Virginian, he said, "To the gentleman from Virginia who spoke on yesterday, and so far transcended the limits of decency and propriety as to announce upon this floor that his remarks were addressed to white men alone, I shall have no word of reply. Let him feel that a Negro was not only too magnanimous to smite him in his weakness, but was even charitable enough to grant him the mercy of his silence." The reporter of the proceedings found this statment so singular as to include in paranthesis in the Congressional Record, the notation, "Great laughter and applause on the floor and in the galleries."

Would a Civil Rights Bill of 1948 meet another disastrous fate? The President's Committee states that "The action of the Supreme Court in declaring parts of the 19th century civil rights legislation unconstitutional does not prove that a well conceived present-day attempt to strengthen the federal civil rights program would meet a similar fate. A powerful public opinion remains a living force in constitutional law and is bound to be thoughtfully considered by any later Supreme Court when the validity of new civil rights laws comes before it for decision."

The Negro lawyer, speaking for his race whom he represented, concluded, "The Holy Scriptures tells us of an humble handmaiden who long, faithfully, and patiently gleaned in the rich fields of her wealthy kinsman. We are told further that at last, in spite of her humble antecedents, she found complete favor in his sight. For over two centuries our race has 'reaped down your fields.' The cries and woes which we have uttered have 'entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth,' and we are at last politically free. The last vestiture only is needed—civil rights. Having gained this, we may with hearts overflowing with gratitude, and thankful that our prayer has been granted, repeat the prayer of Ruth, 'Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God, my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried; the Lord do so to me and more also if ought but death part thee and me.'"

(Leland Harder, Bethel College senior who is majoring in social science, dug through a lot of old issues of the Congressional Record to get the story of the Civil Rights Bill which was the foerunner of legislation proposed today for the elimination of racial discrimination in restaurants, etc. We present the article as relevant to Race Relations Day, February 8.)

Our
Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Girls' Gospel Team planned a trip to Northern Indiana for January 25. Programs were arranged for the Middlebury, Goshen, and Topeka churches. The new semester opened January 26. The enrollment is approximately the same as the first semester. Rev. Harry Yoder is working in the Eastern District Conference territory in the interests of the building fund. Dr. Ramseyer will also work in that area during the first two weeks of February. The DePaur Negro Men's Chorus will give a concert in Bluffton sponsored by the college February 4. The February Vesper service will be held February 22, with Dr. Charles Wesley, President of Wilberforce State School, as the speaker. The marriage of Alice Locher and Gordon Neuenschwander was solemnized in the college chapel Saturday afternoon, January 24. The annual faculty reception for students was held in the Musselman Library January 30.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Menno Schrag, Editor of the Mennonite Weekly Review, delivered two addresses in Chicago over the week-end of the eighteenth. The first of these was given to the Seminary Vesper Service in which he portrayed the amazing influence which the little country of Palestine has had on religious and political affairs for hundreds of years and the strange mixture of the natural and supernatural in the Holy Land. He suggested that the present disturbances there would make visitation virtually impossible at this time. In the evening he presented his pictures to the Mennonite Bible Mission. The McKinley Park Methodist Church of which Harley Stucky is pastor dismissed its evening service to attend the illustrated message.

The Seminary Board held its annual meeting here on Wednesday, January 21. A number of very important decisions were facing the Board in connection with seminary officials, faculty appointment, housing finances, and fieldwork. A fuller report of this meeting will be made at a later date. President A. S. Rosenberger of Dalton, Ohio, presided at these meetings. In general the plans for the coming year are based on the expectation of a considerable increase in enrollment.

On January 12 the College Board of Directors held its first official meeting since the opening of the school year. It was an occasion of praise and thanksgiving. Members present were: Rev. William Martens, of British Columbia, Rev. Daniel Janzen and Rev. P. W. Dick of Alberta, Rev. J. A. Dyck, of Ontario, Rev. J. J. Thiessen and Jacob J. Gerbrandt of Saskatoon, and Rev. J. N. Hoeppner, Rev. P. A. Rempel, Rev. P. Schaeffer and Rev. I. I. Friesen from Manitoba.

A committee was appointed at this session to study further the problems relative to accreditation and the study course schedule. It is hoped that a plan can be established that will meet the needs of the Conference and at the same time be recognized by other accrediting agencies. Rev. Arnold J. Regier was appointed to be the chairman of this Committee.

Rev. J. A. Dyck of Niagara on the Lake, Ontario, spoke at the Sunday evening service on January 11. Rev. J. A. Dyck has been a leader in the educational activities in Ontario and was largely instrumental in the establishment of the Academy at Leamington. He was recently ordained as an elder in the Mennonite church at Niagara on the Lake.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Dr. Clarence Lee Furrow, representing the North Central Association, spent Friday, January 23, on the campus, discussing educational problems with the faculty and its various administrative committees. Recent visiting chapel speakers have included: John T. Kenna and T. H. MacDowell, Associate and Regional Directors, respectively, of the National Conference of Christians and Jews; Delmar Wedel, recently returned from relief work in Europe; Dr. Delbert Preheim, Rev. Homer Leisy; and Dean N. E. Byers. At the mid-year elections of Cheminar, Widick Schroeder was elected president, to succeed Sam Schmidt. The names of six Seniors have been chosen by the faculty and student body to appear in the 1947-48 edtion of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges: Gladys Dester, Deer Creek, Oklahoma; Norma Mae Tieszen, Marion, South Dakota; Elmer Buhler, Deer Creek, Oklahoma; Henry Claassen, Beatrice, Nebraska; Willard Linscheid, North Newton, Kansas; and Delbert Schrag, Parker, South Dakota.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Paul Tieszen, recently returned from several years relief work in Puerto Rico, showed pictures of the work there to the Christian Youth Volunteers last Monday. With him was Eugene van der Smissen, also recently returned from relief work in Puerto Rico. Mr. Oswald Krehbiel of Hutchinson, Kansas, visited on the campus and was a chapel guest on Friday. Mr. Krehbiel was head of the Commerical department here some thirty years ago. The Senior Home Economics girls have been studying child care. To make the work more practical they set aside a day last week when each girl adopted a youngster for the day. They supervised the activities of the children as they played together and partook of the lunch which the girls prepared for them. The children ranged from two to five years. There were eleven of them in all, and they all seemed to have enjoyed the day very much. Chapel speakers this week were Mr. Graber and Rev. Floyd Breaw, pastor of the Evangelical United Brethren church at Olivet. A spelling class was started for all academy students with spelling difficulties.

Process Refugees for Migration to Paraguay

Russian Mennonite refugees now located in Europe are being interviewed by the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization and by the MCC workers, to determine which of them should be included in the next movement of 1,600 to Paraguay. Those in the British Zone of Germany are being interviewed beginning January 20. This work will continue until the time when the first of the two vessels leaves, which may be about the end of the first week in February.

Raymond Schlichting To Describe Mennonite Life in Paraguay.

A number of Mennonite churches in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, and Kansas will be visited in the near future by Raymond Schlichting, of the MCC Staff, who will speak and show slides to describe the conditions prevailing in the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay. These slides were taken quite recently and include the new colonies at Volendam and in the Chaco. Also of interest are the pictures showing the hospitals, schools, homes, industries which have been established by the older colonies.

This particular itinerary has been planned in view of Brother Schlichting's availability for a short time, and the desire of these churches to have this message presented. There may be similar occasion in the future when a speaker is available to visit churches in various communities to bring messages on the theme of refugee migration or relief work. Any congregations interested in such speakers under the sponsorship of the MCC, should write to Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Workers in China Evacuate from Kaifeng

For some time the MCC work at Kaifeng has been difficult because of the interference occasioned by the civil conflict in that area. The officials of both the Communist and Nationalist forces have said that our workers would not be molested. Nevertheless, there has been increasing irresponsible looting and plundering by soldiers, to the extent of losing much essential equipment and jeopardizing the safety of the workers. Under such conditions of chaos the service that the workers try to give is also often misconstrued by the various forces, thus limiting the witness that can be given.

After considering the problem from various angles, the group of workers was evacuated to Shanghai on December 30 to January 4 by air. Plans are being made for work to be opened in another area of China where the energy of the workers can be utilized.

Community Makes Shoes for Relief Drive

A unique Shoes for Relief drive was sponsored on January 10 by the Mennonite congregation at Scottdale, Pennsylvania. This appeal was made to all the people of the community with the actual house-to-house collection of shoes done by the young people of this church. Money contributions were also encouraged for the purchase of additional shoes for relief. The shipment and distribution of the shoes is to be by the MCC.

This certainly is a commendable project for a congregation to carry out. Possibly churches in other communities will wish to sponsor similar projects of collecting some particular relief commodity. Anyone desiring information or suggestion on such projects, write to Material Aid Office, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Need Continues for Mending and Shoe Repair Kits

There has been a very hearty response to this program of supplying mending and shoe repair kits for relief. Since these kits are filling such a vital place in the relief program overseas, we are continuing to encourage participation in this work indefinitely. These kits will give the people in the needy areas the wherewithal to help themselves in repairing their clothing that has worn thin by long usage.

Distribute Over 1,000 Christmas Toys

At Christmas over 1,000 donated toys were distributed to poor children of Gulfport, Mississippi, through the local colored schools and in the community about the camp.

Another group of volunteers are needed for service at the Skillman State Village for Epileptics, New Jersey, by February 15. The minimum period of service is ten weeks. The work consists of attendant service in the cottages. Inquiries should be sent to Voluntary Services, Mennonite Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

COUNCIL OF BOARDS TO MEET

The Annual General Conference Council of Boards sessions are being planned for Tuesday to Thursday, February 17 to 19, 1948, at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Headquarters, 4614 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Members of our congregations are requested to pray that the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit may be felt during these days of intensive planning for the coming year.—Walter H. Dyck. Executive Secretary

A New Summer Bible School Course May Be Ours for 1949!

by Joanna S. Andres

(Pastors and Sunday school workers will soon be making plans for their summer Bible school activities. The Board of Education, through its Curriculum Committee, has been actively engaged in finding materials it may recommend for use in our churches. Joanna S. Andres was asked by the Board to write the following article for the benefit of those interested.)

It was my privilege to sit as a visitor at the work table of the Curriculum Committee of our conference in their three-day session this past December.

As most of us know, this committee works under the Board of Education with two board members represented on it. Its chief task is to be ever alert to the needs of the churches as to good materials for its teaching and nurturing ministry in the various departments. The committee sifts and proves available material for suggestion and — when necessary — even creates materials to meet a definite need.

It stands to reason that such a task involves much work. Being keenly interested, myself, in this portion of Kingdom work and having been burdened often with the need that exists among us, it was with deep satisfaction that I followed the plans and project discussion of the Curriculum Committee and saw the consecration of its members to the task.

We met in the large upper room over the library of our seminary in Chicago. My thoughts traveled back to that Upper Room of more than 1900 years ago. Here we were again—disciples surrounding the Master, waiting for revelation of truth and guidance from Him. Unlike those disciples on that night, our was the heritage of the Cross, the Risen Lord, the great commission because of which we had assembled—"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

One of the main items under discussion was material for the summer Bible school. Concerning this project, I would like to say the following:

1. Through the past five years the Old Mennonite Conference has concentrated time, effort, and finances to produce a new course for the summer Bible school curriculum. Mr. A. J. Metzler of the Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pennsylvania, presented this new course to the Curriculum Committee at the session in Chicago.

2. Upon closer study of this series, we found it to be a very well prepared Bible course. Besides this Bible material, it contains also brief doctrinal and conference activity studies of a few minutes daily. It is natural and right that these brief studies should center in the mission, educational, and benevolent activities of the Old Mennonite conference.

3. In view of this fact, it was decided that before this new course is suggested to our churches, it should first be adapted to our conference use, substituting our own conference activities in the brief studies presented in the course.

4. We are, therefore, now working on the suggestion of changes to be made in the series. These changes are then to be submitted to the Scottdale publishers for their estimate of cost involved.

5. The Curriculum Committee hopes to submit these cost estimates to the Boards of Education and Publication for consideration at their February meeting in Chicago.

We feel that this new Bible course, with an adaptation for our own conference use, would serve our churches well for many years to come.

Because we have needed a real good summer Bible school course for so many years, I have been free to share the above with you, knowing that it shall receive your interest, even unto prayer.

Mennonites the World Over

By Cornelius Krahn

The Story of the Hutterites. The Hutterites, cousins of the Mennonites, have a unique story to tell and they tell it in a unique way. Ever since their founding more than 400 years ago they have been keeping what may be called an official diary written in beautiful, ornate long-hand, which tells the story of their hardships sufferings, and migration because of their beliefs and principles. These documents are cherished almost more than the Bible itself by the present-day Hutterites. The story consists of two volumes: Die aelteste Chronik (The Oldest Chronicle) and Das Klein Geschichtsbuch (The Little Chronicle). The first was printed in this country in 1943 and the second came off the press recently for the first time. These books have been printed with scholarly annotations in the original German language prepared by Dr. A. J. F. Zieglschmid of Northwestern University and published by The Carl Schurz Memorial Foundation, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa. from whom the books may be obtained.

The first volume tells the story of the Hutterites from the time of their origin up to 1665. The second volume briefly reviews the first and continues the story to the present time. It includes the newest development among the Hutterites in the United States, Canada, Germany, England and South America. Manifestos, statistics, maps, and especially the extensive bibliography enrich the research value and information of these volumes. The editor and the publisher should be congratulated for the excellent work which represents a momument to paintaking research and diligent labor for many years. It is fortunate that this huge task has been completed, but we are a little ashamed that the Mennonites have contributed so little toward it.

Dutch Brethren Report on Visits to America. The Dutch friends that visited us last summer have returned and related their reports and observations to their churches and conference. All have expressed their gratefulness for the opportunity of seeing the "new world," and of meeting and fellowshiping with the Mennonites of America.

Naturally such an exchange of experience, thought, and fellowship can be considered only a beginning of a long range program that should follow. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that one of the Dutch ministers, after listening to the reports of those that had returned, stated that he was more confused than ever about the American Mennonite situation. According to him one of the returned men had pictured American Mennonitism as an ideal which the Dutch Mennonites ought to imitate or follow while the other had left the impression that the American Mennonites were confronting difficulties which the Dutch had long since solved. This may seem a contradiction and yet it may contain as much truth as can be expressed in so few words. In other words the American Mennonites, no doubt, can learn from their brethren in Holland, who confronted the problems arising from the modern relationship of Christianity and state, such as, conscription, holding of public offices, etc., what choices will lead where. On the other hand the Dutch Mennonites need some of the vigor and vision that characterizes the American Mennonites in their evangelistic, missionary, and relief activities.

It is to be hoped that the planned World Conference for 1948 and many other occasions for fellowship will result in mutual benefit.

BOARD OF EDUCATION TO DISCUSS EXTENSIVE PROGRAM

The meeting of the Board of Education of the General Conference is called for February 17-20 at Chicago. Various problems concerning our schools, Sunday school work, Foreign Student Exchange Program, C.P.S. Rehabilitation Program, young people's retreats, Young People's Voluntary Summer Service, general lay leadership training along various phases of Christian endeavor, as well as other problems, will be discussed, and it is hoped that some rather far-reaching decisions can be made. We trust that the church membership throughout the Conference will remember the Board and its work in their prayers that in all things the will of our Father may be known and accomplished.—In behalf of the Board of Education, Ed. G. Kaufman, Chairman.

APPOINT GEORGE G. DICK TO BOARD OF EDUCATION

The General Conference Officers herewith announce the appointment of Rev. George G. Dick, Bloomfield, Montana, to membership of the Board of Education, replacing Dr. J. D. Unruh, Freeman, South Dakota, resigned.—Walter H. Dyck, Eexecutive Secretary

MODERN VERSION OF THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM

Chas. R. Goff

Science is my Shepherd, I shall not want. It maketh me to lie down in an in-a-door bed that will fold away in the daytime, creating the illusion that we have a large apartment.

It sweepeth my wife's floors, washeth her dishes, orderth her groceries, maintaineth 70° F' inside the house, 45° inside the iceless icebox, and 212° on top of the gas stove. It furnisheth her with radio music, salad recipes and the President's message while she watcheth the scientific things hum and buzz. It restoreth her school-girl complexion, waveth her hair, and maketh her seem altogether youthful.

Meanwhile it leadeth me into strange paths of ethical conduct, where, under the guise of "service" I can continue to fleece my fellow man and make 27% on my money, which money I need in order to meet the bills on the 1st of the month.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for I have my tonsils, adenoids and vermiform appendix removed.

For Science is with me, its test tube and lab findings they comfort me. It prepareth a a well-filled table before me in the presence of those who are less fortunate in the scramble for place and power; it anointeth my head with staycomb; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I shall dwell . . . . I . . . shall . . . . dwell on earth as long as I possibly can, and come to the end with an overwhelming sense of the emptiness of life, and I shall be filled with regrets forever.

BROWNS MAY GO TO SHANGHAI

(H. J. Brown, in a letter written January 13 from Shanghai, tell how Kaifeng is becoming such a dangerous place that they may have to evacuate to Shanghai.)

I am to leave Shanghai by plane on January 19 for Kaifeng. Shanghai is known for its rumors, but at any rate things are not too encouraging. I came here on business (banking) and must go back with provided funds for the work.

Should the situation get worse Maria and I may come to Shanghai. So far Kaifeng was our place. It is much easier and better to live and work amongst our Chinese Christians. However, if need be we could live here and work that way. The American Consul here seems to be concerned about the situation in Honan and may call us out any time. The fact that several missionaries are reported to have been killed by bandits seventy-five miles north of Hankow strengthens the idea of a necessary evacuation. The M.C.C. lost about $75,000 in their hurried evacuations two weeks ago. In case all missionaries in Kaifeng should be evacuated they too would lose greatly. Maria and I have nothing but personal effects and a year's provision to lose. In case the matter should get serious and we do come here, not only would that be lost but also our stay here would have to be figured at $5.00 a day for us two. Our salary would not allow this. Thus we should become an extra expense to the Mission Board. But as long as we can keep contact with the church and the work it would be worth while. Then too, we would remain the link between the Foreign Mission Board and the new mission field. This would hardly be possible as long as we stay in Kaifeng under present disrupted communications. When you write send a duplicate copy of the letter to Kaifeng and the other copy here to: % Assembly of God, 2023 Szechuen Road, Shanghai, China, so that in case I fail to get the Kaifeng letter I can get a copy here.

Now as to the Kansu project. We are in close communication with Brother and Sister Boehr, and over there everything is peaceful and airmail service prompt. Rev. and Mrs. Wuthrich and Miss Fast are still trying to get their freight through customs. They are to go on the Lutheran plane to Si'an and then by train to Paoki, but so far we have not made definite arrangements because they are not certain what day they will be through customs. Unless the situation in all China changes much we still favor having our missionaries come out and go to the new mission field.

Please don't worry too much about us and the work, but we do covet your earnest prayers in behalf of our dear Chinese Christians.

To Address Bluffton Students

Rev. Andrew R. Shelly, pastor of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, Canada, will be the leader for the third annual Christian Life Week, to be held on the campus of Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio, February 10-13.

His overall theme will be: "The Christian Life—the Abundant Life." This will be divided into two parts. In the mornings he will speak on the theme: Four Key Words: Jesus Christ, The Bible, The Church, and Love. In the evenings he will speak on: The Biography of the Christian Life: Its Inception, Its Development, Its Application, and Its Culmination.

—Der Mennonit is the name of a German paper which the Mennonite Central Committee plans to publish for 20,000 Mennonite refugees who are in need of Mennonite literature. Harold S. Bender is to be the editor of the periodical which is to be mailed out from Basel, Switzerland.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: Rev. Henry Thiessen of the Fredonia Church was our guest on January 18. The Hillsboro Gospel Quartet, which broadcasts over the Hutchinson station every Sunday at 3:30 P.M., gave a program of gospel songs at our regular C. E., January 25.—D. S. Thiesen, Corr.

—Correction: We apologize for the slip in our thinking which caused us to use the heading "Deer Creek Church Dedicates Parsonage," in the last issue of the paper. This should have read, "Geary Church Dedicates Parsonage," for it is the Geary, Oklahoma, church which has built a new parsonage and dedicated it. Continuing the corrections we might say that the heading on the front page should have read, "Our 'Christian' Funerals" instead of "Our Christian Funerals."

78 CHURCHES RESPOND

78 churches and Sunday schools have taken up the challenge for a planned program of Conference publications, to the tune of $4,022.27, in six months.

At the General Conference at Berne, the Board of Publications presented its budget to the delegates of 240 churches, explaining that the program as projected for the coming year would require a total of about $21,000 in gifts, over and above the amounts normally received from subscriptions and sale of Sunday school supplies. This budget was presented with some concern whether our people might consider that too large an undertaking, but evidently they do not.

78 churches and Sunday schools have responded. Some have sent their contributions directly to the General Conference Headquarters, and others have sent it in care of the Mennonite Publication Office, and to all we give our sincere thanks.

78 churches represents 32 per cent of all churches. Assuming that the churches all share equally in the budget of the Board of Publications, these 78 churches, have assumed $6,720 of that budget, and in half a year they have oversubscribed their portion.

So once more, these 78 churches have "gone over the top" in love, understanding, and in vision.

Will the remaining 162 churches do likewise?

Until our churches adopt a budgeted plan of support for Conference work—all Conference work—such specific requests, appeals, and reports such as these will be in place, and will doubtless continue to be made not only by this Board but by every board attempting to do the work which our churches, at our General Conference and district conference assigned to them.

—Bethel Church, Winton, California: After a potluck dinner we gathered in the afternoon of January 12 for the ordination of Rev. Myron D. Hilty as pastor of this church. Rev. Harley King, a member of the Home Mission Board of the General Conference, gave the ordination message and Rev. Harold Burkholder presided. Rev. Burkholder, who is President of the Pacific District Conference, held meetings here from January 12 to 18. His subjects were: "How To Have a Revival," "A Consecrated Choice," "O Satisfied Soul," "Where Are the Dead?," "Unconditional Surrender," "The Power of Pentecost," and "The Lake of Fire." —Lorraine Heppner, Corr.

—Saucon Mennonite Church, near Coopersburg, Pa. Forty to seventy people attend every week. Rev. A. C. Rosenberger has been leading us in studies of the Book of Genesis.—Corr.

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Word has come that the Willard Unruhs have safely crossed the Atlantic, and were to change from the Queen Elizabeth to the Strassmore at Southampton, England, January 15. We have now organized a Junior Sunday school Department with Adeline Quiring as superintendent. The Sunday school receipts for 1947 were $4,695, or a per capita of $15. The greatest part of this was given to missions, relief, and education. A catechism class of twenty meets at the parsonage on Sunday mornings. The parsonage was dedicated November 30. Two of our young men, Albert Neufeld and Milton Harder, spoke to us January 4. The two choirs had a business and social meeting January 14. The older mission society has packed thirty-seven layettes and sixty-two aprons for refugees since New Year's.—Mary Bargen, reporter.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: Rev. Floyd Nunley of the Colored Methodist Church, Newton, and Rev. J. W. Nickel, our pastor, are exchanging pulpits January 25. Last Sunday night John and Norma Ruth Enns, children of Missionary Frank Enns', told us about the Congo Inland Mission work. This program was sponsored by the "Helping Hands." Mr. D. V. Unrau was elected chairman of the new organization of the laymen of our church. These men sponsored the collection of tools for the Paraguay Mennonite refugees. Three men helped at the Food Warehouse, in Newton, one day. The ladies are collecting utensils for the same project.—Mrs. Sam Regier, Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: During winter we have two Sunday evening services each month. On one we feature outside speakers and talent. The other consists of an informal family gathering in the basement with a varied program followed by a social hour and refreshments. A recital on our new Wurlitzer organ was given on January 1. The newly organized Men's Brotherhood has gotten off to a good start.—Mrs. A. J. Krabill, Corr.

—North Star Church, Drake, Saskatchewan: At our annual Sunday School Christmas eve program an offering was taken for five C.A.R.E. packages and M.C.C. work totaling $96.32. Leonard Ewert, student at Grace Bible Institute, brought the English message on Christmas Day. At the annual meeting of the church a resolution was adopted to raise the annual church levy from $3.00 per member and $1.00 per quarter section of land for owners or renters to $5.00 per church member and no levy on property. Total contributions for the year 1947 amounted to $11,433.32 or $46.66 per church member. The annual prayer week was observed from January 4-9 with a very good attendance every night. February 16-19 are set aside for the year's Bible week with Rev. H. T. Klaassen, Laird, Saskatchewan and Rev. D. D. Klassen, Homewood, Manitoba as our speakers. At the business meeting of the church Jakob Driediger was elected as correspondent for "The Mennonite." —P. Schroeder, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Milton Harder of Bethel College brought us the morning message on January 18, while Rev. J. M. Regier is convalescing. Rev. Regier expects to be with us again by next Sunday.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

—Correction: Mrs. J. E. Entz is a member of the Pension and Minister's Aid Committee and not Rev. J. E. Entz, as stated in the issue of January 6, page 12.

—Grace Church, Enid, Oklahoma: The parsonage is being remodeled and enlarged. The congregation purchased a new piano at Christmas-time. Rev. J. H. Epp of Kingman, Kansas, serves us every second Sunday. On the other Sundays, Rev. Albert Unruh of Meno serves us. Rev. J. J. Esau, one of the main speakers at the O.B.A. Bible Week, will hold two evening services in our church.—Corr.

—The West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pa., has a percentage system for dividing its benevolences, so that all General Conference causes receive a part without holding separate or special collections.

—The "Swamp Mennonite Charge" in Pennsylvania is no more since West Swamp Church last year decided to become an independent congregation. The other two churches, Bethany and Flatland have combined into the Bethany-Flatland Charge with Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander as pastor. Rev. Neuenschwander had served the three-church Swamp Charge since 1934.

—The Mennonite Central Committee shipped $2,136,153. 59 worth of food and clothing and other relief materials abroad during 1947. This figure, plus the cash that came in to operate the program, plus the cash for refugees, brings the total to $3,763,761.73. —Figures from Wayne Henard, Director of Material Aid.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS FROM CANADA TO THE STATES

As our Canadian churches and Sunday schools are experiencing considerable difficulty in getting Canadian funds across the border to the United States for payments of Sunday school accounts, HUNDRED PER CENT subscriptions, and contributions for the work of the Conference, the following plan is suggested until more permanent arrangements can be made by the Executive Committee of the General Conference.

The Mennonite Book Store, Mr. John R. Dyck, Manager, Rosthern, Saskatchewan, will act as the agent for the Mennonite Publication Office to receive all such items and will report such receipts to the Newton office. This money, of course, will remain in Canada, and will be off-set by money which would otherwise be sent to Rosthern, in any event, from Newton.

This will save the trouble of having to make application for special permits to send money out of Canada.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: Our program last Sunday evening was on the subject, "A Gospel in Silhouette." The first part of the program was a quiz on the Gospel of Mark and the latter part consisted of eight silhouettes depicting the Gospel of Mark. This program was presented by the young people. Three of our young people attended the two-day conference at Bluffton, January 2 and 3. This conference was planned by the Middle District Education Committee to encourage youth to enter full time Christian service.—Mrs. Loyal Corwin, Corr.

JACOB H. JANZEN EXPRESSES THANKS

Referring to the recent Christmas period, Jacob H. Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, writes for the columns of The Mennonite:

"Greeting cards began to arrive. Since I had withdrawn already from many of my former official functions, I did not expect too many of such cards and bought a few five-cent cards to reply at least individually to every card received. But I soon saw that I did not have enough of them. I replenished my stock by buying a batch of one-cent cards. I thought I could not afford more expensive ones, times being what they are. Soon the cards came in such numbers that I would still be sitting at my desk writing answers to all of them if I would have stuck to my original proposal. I had to give up. Anonymous gifts of flowers and other good things began to arrive, proving to us that even such of whom we did not know thought of us and loved us. All this gave us the feeling of lovingkindness and warmth. Our Christmas turned out to be an exceptionally bright and happy one, and my wife and I wish hereby to thank everybody from the bottom of our heart for the tokens of love and appreciation which were sent to us."

On January 5 the Mennonite Seminary Quartet gave a program of testimony and gospel songs. This we shared with the West Zion and Immanuel Mennonite Churches. The offering, which was held for the Seminary on the last Sunday on which Rev. Miller spoke, amounted to $282. Our church and the West Zion Church are again jointly sponsoring a school of missions. At our first meeting Rev. and Mrs. Frank J. Enns spoke of their labors in the Belgian Congo, Africa, and showed pictures of their work. A mission film, "We've a Story To Tell" was also shown. The C. At our annual meeting it was voted to have a nursery in the church basement during the services for pre-school children. It will be started February 1 with Mrs. P. W. Goering in charge, assisted by one of the young mother. The children will be taught stories, songs and prayers—Mrs. I. H. Balzer, Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kansas: On January 25 during the worship service a short service of installation and consecration was held for the new church officers elected at our annual church meeting a few weeks ago.—Ella Voth, Corr.

A new rug gives the babies a warm floor. Pictures of world relief and a talk by Joseph N. Byler, Director of M.C.C. Relief will be the feature of the evening service of February 8.

A PLAIN MAN LOOKS AT THE CROSS. By Leslie D. Weatherhead. (Abingdon Cokesbury; 1945; $1.50.)

"But to be honest, I did not know what the sentence, 'Christ died for our sins,' really meant." That is the confession of the author, one of the world's best known ministers; he is talking about his experience at the time he started to India as a missionary. He confesses that he could preach much on the life of Jesus, but he had never been able to come to grips with the message that really turned the world up side down—the death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ. These are the author's confession in the first five pages.

But note this quotation from the close of the book. " . . . if because we scorn old-fashioned phrases we miss the truth behind them, then our loss is indeed grievous. . . . . for the heart of the Gospel is the saving power of Jesus Christ. No anemic watered-down presentation of Christ as Hero, Influence, Example, or even Friend, is a satisfactory substitute for that rich, full-blooded gospel of salvation."

Weatherhead, leading contemporary British pulpit voice, ministering alike to cabinet ministers and slum-dwellers, may well be followed through this book in this coming Lenten season back to a gripping yet intelligent concern with the cross, the empty tomb, and the ascension.—Jacob J. Enz.

Mennonites Participate in North American Christian Frontiers Conference

orium. Bottom: After days of travelling, waiting to regiser.

Just Another Conference?

Mennonites comprised a very small percentage of the delegates at the North American Frontiers Conference of 1947 at the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas, December 27—January 1. However, with some initiative on the part of a few who were curious to know who of the Mennonites had ventured to the Midwest, a place was arranged and announcement made for a meeting of Mennonites during the time alloted for denominational meetings. There were eleven who eagerly and quickly got acquainted when all had appeared. The three Mennonites from Canada and eight from the States found much to discuss, shared common interests and expressed an unanimous concern that the impact of this conference was so vital that somehow we must convey its importance and its message to the Mennonite Church. One result—THIS ISSUE OF THE "YOUTH SECTION" in which we have tried to share what was one of the greatest experiences of our lives and of such a nature that we are returning to our campuses a little different than when we went to Lawrence—with a greater vision, a more complete commitment to Christ, and a more encompassing zeal to serve, we hope!

Was it just another conference that brought over 1,800 students together for five days during Christmas vacation? Many had traveled a great distance, given up Christmas at home, encountered snowstorms to attend. Just another Conference? I think not. Perhaps for a few this was true, but by far the majority of students came with serious purposes, sincere intentions, and seeking questions, representatives of thinking Christian youth of all races and denominations finding loyalty to Christ as Master of life a common denominator.

"Christian Frontiers in the World" was the theme of the first part of the conference with challenging presentations in all parts of the world and in all areas of life. Finally, the conference in general converged no one crucial point, the discovery of an inner frontier of self, which must be realized and dealt with before outward frontiers in the world can be won for the Kingdom of God. Typical of our North American activism we thought to claim the unoccupied frontiers of the world, and We Must, but we found that Christ was seeking to claim the unoccupied frontiers of our hearts and wills. Looking back, this conference has been a towering event. In the present it can have a potent influence, and in the future it must make itself felt in "Christian Frontiers" in the world and in personal lives!—Myrtle Wasser Secretary-treasurer of the Young People's Union, Bluffton College

Late to Bed; Early to Rise

On a high hill overlooking the rolling plains of eastern Kansas stand the impressive buildings of the University of Kansas. Early morning found sleepy delegates coming out of dormitories, fraternity and sorority houses, climbing the steep hill and entering the Student Union Building to begin a busy day with breakfast in the cafeteria. As the student munched his toast, conversed with his table partners, and later mingled with the large crowds in the main later mingled with the large crowds in the main lounge he became more and more aware of the cosmopolitan atmosphere.

Here were students from the Deep South, from New England, from the Midwest and Far West, from Canada; leaders from Europe, South America, Africa and Asia, including American and African Negroes, Chinese, Indians, and Polynesians. Gathered together were Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Lutherans, and a host of other denominations, yet all seemingly bound together by a great common denominator.

The student delegate was kept busy from morning till late at night attending mass meetings, panels, seminars and discussion groups. Meditations led by K. H. Ting of Shanghai and a panel discussion on various phases of Church work began each day's program. A unique feature of the conference was the arbitrary division of the delegates into 100 or more small conference groups, discussing frankly vital problems brought up in the meetings.

Afternoon activities at "Froncon" included denominational meetings and seminars discussing the unique problems and opportunities of Christian service in each major geographic area of the world. Seminars were held discussing specific vocations such as evangelism, medicine, education, social work, etc. Lively participation and stimulating discussions, characterized these meetings.

The evening schedule included a song service, main speaker, and meditation period. In the late evening a number of recreational activities were available, such as plays, films, and international parties. Also scheduled were "fireside chats" with conference leaders, a chance to bring out questions arising from previous meetings.

Throughout the day those looking for a place for meditation and prayer found their way to beautiful little Dansforth Chapel, where all was quiet and restful.

The weather played an important part throughout. The conference began with ideal springlike weather, but ended with blinding snow and howling winds which sent bewildered Southerners running to clothing stores, and made even Canadians scurry for shelter. Snow also caused the late arrival of a special delegate train which was stalled just outside New York City for twenty-four hours.

The general atmosphere at Froncon was that of tolerance, congeniality, and an eagerness to learn from others—a cross-section of the people of the world all bound together by common ideals and purposes. —Harold Moyer, Bethel College.

Leaders Discuss in Panel

The most enlightening and thought-provoking discussions of the day were stimulated by panels composed of outstanding workers of the church. Such men as Dr. Roswell Barnes of the Federal Council Of Churches, Dr. Kenneth Latourette of Yale, Mrs. Jean Harbison better known to our relief unit in Puerto Rico, and Congressman Walter H. Judd forcefully weighed such topics as "What the Church Is Doing On The Frontiers," "Should the Church Save Civilization," "Here Am I." A special feature, "My Vocation," was presented by Student Missionary Appointees.

As regarding "saving civilization?"such trends in thinking were expressed as correlated to Christianity. And what did they say? Barnes: "Some aspects of civilization really aren't worth saying." Harbison: "I'm not sure I'm working in Puerto Rico to save civilization. I'm concerned to change it so people can find life." Flint: "We're not concerned to save the status quo, but the best concepts of human life are indeed worth saving." Barnes: "We are not indifferent to civilization, however." Latourette: "Christianity is still young, and it has shown a capacity to survive civilizations. It is more widely distributed than ever before, and more deeply rooted, exerting a deeper effect on mankind as a whole—and now 'tis getting together as never before. All in all, these great leaders in expressing "saving civilization?" presented a heart inspiring picture of how the Church is fulfilling it's mission in frontiers the world over.

Demonstrating the unique purpose of the panels, was the climaxing stress laid on "Here Am I." Dr. Judd simply and clearly expressed what the experience is which brings a man into the accomplishment of God's purpose for his life. Dr. Judd said, that the injunction of Paul "forgetting those things which are behind, and pressing on . . ." means that if we choose to be Christian we must find His vocation for us, and more than that it means reaching out to new goals of life and action. His personal expression of devotion was that he was a "missionary" in Washington—and will be until his Minnesota constituents 'Send me back to China."—John Enns, Bethel College.

Ask, Seek, Find

"Questions answered!" was one of the pre-conference promises. During the conference itself, in no place was this more true than in our small discussion groups. These small groups, consisting of ten to fifteen people who met each day, were called "Mincon" groups. The word "Mincon" means miniature conference and for many this was the most vital part of the conference. A capable adult leader and a student chairman were in charge.

In these discussions, questions from other speakers of the conference were discussed. Personal problems were given serious attention. There was a frank, friendly, tolerant attitude throughout all the discussions, and the members of each group learned to know each other well. All sides of a problem were aired because in a group, containing people from all over the world, there are certain to be different views. Just a few of the typical questions were something like this: How does Christianity apply to politics, economics, and society? What is the nature and content of faith? Prayer? What is a missionary call? What is our Christian responsibility to others? What does God want of me?—Howard Shelly, Bluffton College

Outstanding Evening Speakers

Minnesota Congressman, and former missionary to China, Walter H. Judd, stated on the opening night that we are living in two worlds of strain and stress which cannot abide that way; the solution is either conquest with dictatorship or agreement by federation—he championed the latter. In order to obtain peace, we must not only hope for but also seek the Kingdom of God and His righteousness by helping Germany, Greece, other European countries, China and other nations in need and by making our own America strong in moral and spiritual purpose. "There is no peace without order; no order without justice; no justice without the machinery of justice; no effective machinery without Christian men and women of good will."

Dr. John R. Mott, Noble Peace Prize winner of 1947, told how his life has been one of unceasing effort "to weave together all nations, races and communities around the central figure of our Lord Jesus Christ." He has traveled in and "sat at the feet of" over eighty nations in order to learn of them and serve them. In his sixty years of service he has helped lay the foundations and carry on five world wide associations: Student Volunteer Movement, World Student Christian Federation now embodying over 300,000 Christian students from over forty countries, International Missionary Council which now includes 300 world wide missionary societies, YMCA (he has worked with it for sixty years instead of the one agreed to and has raised 300 million dollars instead of none agreed to), and the World Council of Churches which is a council to counsel to unite churches — 130 religious bodies have voted to join so far. Closing with Wilson's words he summed up the whole matter by saying that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually and that only by becoming permeated with the Spirit of the living Christ to make all men free. He added the challenge for us to become Ambassadors for Christ.

On yet another evening Rev. Setareki Tuilovoni and Dr. D. P. Devanandan described "the impact of Christianity" in the Fiji Islands and in India respectively.

The climax came the evening that young Rev. Dave Burgess, working among CIO textile workers in the South, and dynamic young Jim Robinson, pastor of Harlem's Church of the Master, spoke on North American Frontiers." Up to this time we had heard the call of Christian frontiers in foreign lands; here we were told of the desperate need to pioneer in our own country. Moreover, we found that the very fundamental Christian Frontier was that of SELF, needing to be conquered before all else. Robinson suggested among other things: Are American lives any better in God's sight than those Japanese lives lost by the Atomic bomb (isn't that what we have been saying all along?)?; we cannot look in Christ's face and turn away happy and content that we have done all we can, for there is something always higher to be done; unless we change men — self included — we cannot change the world; let's try, in all we do or think, the simple, selfless way of Jesus — LOVE, nothing more, nothing less.—Lois Lohrentz, Kansas University, Graduate of Bethel College.

Once in a Student Generation!

The Student Volunteer Movement, which is the primary organization to sponsor this North American Christian Frontiers Conference (along with other Student Christian organizations had its humble beginning in 1886 at a twenty-eight day conference at Mt. Herman where 100 of those 251 people present saw and accepted the challenge to enter into mission work. It has enlarged through its fifteenth quadrennial to include the 1800 students who attend this conference at Lawrence.—Dave Enns, University of Saskatchewan

Re-Create

At Froncon (short for Frontiers Conference) the evening wasn't over at 10:00 P. M. — it was just beginning!

"Where shall we go tonight?" was a familiar question, for there were various types of entertainment going on in various buildings. In order that there would be a chance for more students to join in them, these were repeated each evening.

My attention was attracted first of all by the Continental parties, which seemed to suggest a spirit of international fellowship. A party was given for each continent, depicting the treasure of folkways and traditions which are peculiar to it. The European party, which was conducted by Tal Hiebert and Leo Beck, included lively folk games and songs, and attracted many of the students. Others, largely from curiosity, attended the African party. Here a demonstration of a typical campfire scene and a thrilling lion hunt with a background of weird tom toms gave to the participants the atmosphere of the jungle. Asiastic and Pan-American parties completed the round-the-world tour.

At the same time, other more serious forms of recreation were being offered. These consisted mainly of religious and missionary movies and "fireside chats" with prominent leaders of the Froncon. In these "chats" we had the privilege of becoming better acquainted with the leaders. From those who were interested in active sports, there was badminton and swimming.

These hours of fun contributed to the success of Froncon, for we learned not only to work together, but to play together in one grand fellowship.—Katharine Enns, Bethel College.

As I See It

One of the first impressions was a feeling of Christian fellowship. This was greatly fostered by the worship services in which all students present, even though from different races, backgrounds or denominations, could worship God as one unified Body of Christ. As the prayers of the 1800 delegates ascended it was evident that the Holy Spirit was in our midst.

I came away from Lawrence with a new insight into the problems of Christianity (the frontiers), and their solution. Only by 100 per cent dedication to Jesus Christ can the Christian youth of today help save men's souls and thus solve the problems which are caused by sin and evil.

I took with me new insights into living a Christlike life. I realized from the conference that the frontier of self must be conquored before outward frontiers can be tackled and won for Christ and His Kingdom. —Rudolph Martens, Waterloo College, Ontario

After the Conference - What?

Now that the conference is over, I'm struck with a realization that we, as Mennonites, have lagged behind, have failed—failed to give our all in the promotion of God's Kingdom. Yes, we have given for overseas relief—but not until it meant sacrifice here at home; and we have backed C.P.S. camps—but now that the "draft' is over, we don't have the real zeal for peace to fight against the universal military training bill. In short, I'm struck with the realization that we Mennonites have refused to come out of our clannish communities; have refused to give of our rich heritage and our rich economic status which we now enjoy; we have refused to go into government and other phases of work because we are afraid we will become tainted with the world and its idea. It is our shame if we are not strong enough in our religious beliefs to stand against the currents of worldly pleasures. Other denominations have surpassed us in many religious fields. No longer can we remain isolated within in a world of atomic energy and restless selfishness which is rapidly approaching an inevitable tragic end—a tragic end unless WE do something about it. The Mennonites must awaken to the fact that they have something to give the world—but unless they get out and give it to the world, the world will never be able to benefit from the rich heritage of our unique culture.

It is well enough to talk—but so what? Action is the keyword. Mennonite adults must realize that they are living in the 20th Century, in a world of progress which waits for no one. They must permit, yes, urge their children to go to college—a Christian college which will give them the training basic in practicing Christianity in a vocation. Young people must be content to go back, then, into their own communities and live a life unchanged from the complacancy which they left. There is no higher calling than farming, homemaking, teaching in the country school, small high school, or college, managing a store, or just an "honest" job to earn a living and work for Christ. All need true Christians. But educated Christian young people must lift their communities out of the valley of "just living" and help build a community which will live for a purpose—God's Kingdom.

It is well for young people to return to their home communities, but some must be willing to sacrifice the ties of kin-folk to pioneer in "Christian frontiers" in the non-Mennonite community in engineering, medicine, government, journalism, social work, teaching in universities, business, and all the other phases of professional life.—Betty van der Smissen, University of Kansas.

General Conference Position in Regard to U.M.T.

The General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America is a body of Christians having its origin in Reformation times in the small province of Friesland in Holland. From the time of its beginning our body has rejected participation in war and violence of all forms, holding to the teachings and practice of Jesus as recorded in the New Testament, and endeavoring to follow them as best we knew how. Assembled recently, as a body in Berne, Indiana, we considered seriously the pending legislation, and resolved "that the General Conference go on record as strongly opposed to any program of universal military training" and decided that our deep concern be expressed to the officials in Washington.

Our forefathers come from several countries in Europe, and through the course of the last four centuries have been compelled to migrate frequently. They have lived in Holland, Germany, Switzerland, France, Poland, Austria, and Russia. Economically they fared well in virtually every country, and each time they were forced to migrate they left behind fertile fields with well improved farms, factories, and industries that were well established; but for the sake of conscience they were forced to leave. Their migrations spell one long "trek for Conscience" throughout the more than four centuries of their existence; each time they left they sought for a new home of freedom from military training and from participation in war. The last of these "treks" took thousands from Russia and placed them in our own country, in Canada, in Paraguay, and in other South American countries. It started in the preceding century, but especially in the nineteen hundreds did this migration take on large proportions, resulting in untold suffering, and leaving in its wake countless broken families with most of the men taken captive and "liquidated," and leaving thousands not only homeless but broken in body and spirit. All this came as the result of the gradual loss of freedom which resulted from the militarization of the state in which they lived.

We speak, therefore, from experience. We have witnessed the coming of militarization into countries, and we have witnessed what evil results it left in its wake. From brutal Prussian militarism, through the crushing Napoleonic conquest, to cruel Czaristic autocracy leading into bloody Communist terror, we have witnessed and suffered under the strong arm of the state which subjected itself to militarization, thereby depriving its populace of freedom of worship, freedom of speech, and finally, the freedom to live according to the dictates of their conscience.

America, the land of freedom, stood as a citadel of hope for crushed peoples more than once. It continues in this succession, and when there is movement toward the adoption of universal military training it fills us with grief, for it focuses our minds on the past where country after country lost itself in this deceitful method. We feel we must now speak, for we fear for all mankind if our nation, which plays such a decisive role in world affairs and is pledged to support a true democracy, should commit itself to the way of militarism. Did not Germany choose to put its hope in this program and go down in utter defeat and destruction? Was not Czarist Russia relying upon the same methods? Is this not the method and the philosophy which has brought chaos to many a land?

Our experience leads us to plead with you that this program of universal military training shall not become a reality in our land. Our experience speaks its own language. The voice of experience would point out specifically three danger areas:

1. The passage of such legislation would give a powerful forward thrust to the growth of the power of the state over that of the individual. Our Constitution

GANDHI is dead but not the things for which he stood. The great hope for peace lives on. How much we need that spirit of peace which Gandhi sought to bring to his people everywhere. How much we need that peace in the family, where now the lack of it makes children orphans and parents bitter antagonists, laying for all of society an unstable basis. Is there a Gandhi who will fast to the death in this area? There is strife in our economic life. We have become so material-centered that we are pitted against each other in ruthless competition, drowning our love and religion. We have lost our imagination and our capacity for faith. Would the life of one Gandhi be enough to lift life from a material centered view? There is the Church. It should embody the spirit of peace, but there are wars and rumors of war. Could a fast unto death of a Christian Gandhi bring peace in the Church? Is there a Mennonite who could fast until our church is one?

DWIGHT L. MOODY, whose birthday was commemorated February 5, was a man characterized by surrender. When he felt himself insufficiently gifted to teach a Sunday school, he made himself chief attendance booster and the first Sunday brought eighteen Chicago "hoodlums" to class. In another case a seminary professor was prejudiced against Moody. Hearing this professor in a Bible study, Moody abruptly called out, "There goes one of my best sermons!" Moody was flexible; he learned; he was honest. This helped him to be a co-worker with God and help in the creation of better and higher life in individuals and communities.

EISENHOWER, in disengaging himself from the presidential race, said something for which we can be thankful. He said, " . . . nothing in the international or domestic situation especially qualifies for the most important office in the world a man whose adult years have been spent in the country's military forces." The military has been taking over civilian government to such an extent that this statement is a cause for rejoicing.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY is the title of a new magazine for ministers, published by the Old Mennonites at Scottdale, Pennsylvania. Its purpose is stated modestly as in no way an attemt to compete with well known preachers' magazines already being published, but to offer help for ministers in rural churches, many of whom have had no seminary training. If the first issue is an omen of what is to follow, then one can expect from this magazine many things that are of help to all ministers, regardless of how much time they have spent in school or the kind of church they serve. The articles, somewhat uneven in quality, deal with such important questions as evangelism, preaching, doctrine, and church life. Though the editorial staff is composed entirely of Old Mennonites, the scope and usefulness of the magazine is evidently conceived in wider terms, for sample copies have been mailed to the ministers of other branches of the church. It is a worthy undertaking and we bespeak success for the new venture.

Gandhi, a Reproof

The man Gandhi was a reproof to much of what goes as "Christianity." He did not believe in war as a practical, even though sinful, necessity. After an intensive study of Tolstoy's books he early realized ". . . the infinite possibilities of universal love." (Mahatma Gandhi—His Own Story by C. F. Andrews) Already as a young lawyer he had come to the conclusion that the ". . . true function of a lawyer was to unite parties driven asunder." (Ibid) During the First World War he told a group of missionaries in South Africa, ". . . the frightful outrage that is now going on in Europe perhaps shows that the message of Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Peace, has been little understood in Europe, and that light may have to be thrown upon it from the east. . ." (Christian Century, June 15, 1932) Even though we may feel that there was too much coercion in Gandhi's non-violence, there can be no question about its desirability in comparison to the war method used by practically all Christians.

Gandhi was against shallow conversions, so much so that he practically seemed opposed to all conversions to Christianity. C. F. Andrews, a close Christian friend of Gandhi, however, reports Gandhi as deliberately stating that he had no objection at all to what he called "true conversion," meaning by that heart conversion. Remembering that many Western Christians today have only a second-hand faith and that some converts on the mission field will seek out the missionary who will let them slip most easily into the Christian fold and that others continue confused and sinful lives even as Christians, it becomes evident that the Christian Church can pay more attention to "true conversion."

Gandhi lost his life in service to others. Christians talk about being a "living sacrifice." Gandhi must have felt like one when once he fasted for twenty-one days. Though the physical pain became nearly unbearable, he accounted the experience one of spiritual joy. Like Jeremiah, Paul, Bunyan, Fox, he knew the inside of a jail.

Gandhi was a man of prayer. He spent much time in prayer and found in it a renewal of strength. In it he sought internal purity, self-realization, and the truth.

Gandhi knew Christianity well enough to learn from it and to remind it of some things in turn. While in South Africa he seriously considered the matter of becoming a Christian. In an address given there he said, "I have endeavored to study the Bible and consider it to be a part of my scriptures. The spirit of the sermon on the mount competes almost on equal terms with the Bhagavad Gita for the donimation of my heart. I yield to no Christian in the strength of devotion with which I sing 'Lead Kindly Light,' and several other inspired hymns of a similar nature. I have come under the influence of noted Christian missionaries belonging to different denominations, and I enjoy to this day the privilege of friendship with some of them. Thus I have offered the above suggestions, not as a biased Hindu, but as a humble and impartial student of religion with great leanings towards Christianity." (Christian Century, June 15, 1932) In a meeting of orthodox Brahmins in 1933 Gandhi was accused "'of reading the Bible far too much and forsaking the teaching of the Bhagavad Gita. It was mentioned that if he had remained in South Africa he would have become a Christian." The Brahmins probably overdid matters, for Gandhi came to the conclusion that a man can serve best in the group and faith in which he is born. That meant Hinduism for him. He never joined a Christian church. Gandhi's life cannot be ignored.

Conversions Must Be Legalized in Central Provinces of India

According to a report from Southern India, given in the Christian Century of February 4, 1948, the Central Provinces have passed a law requiring that conversions must be legalized in the presence of a magistrate. The report states, "The law provides that such conversion shall take place only in the presence of the district magistrate, who must satisfy himself that the person to be converted has voluntarily elected to embrace the new religion." Violation of the law is punishable by a fine and imprisonment up to seven years.

Just why the law was passed is not clear. The report from India repeats a statement to the effect that it was enacted to "deal adequately with cases of abduction of women and forcible religious conversion, both problems having assumed unhappy prominence during the communal disturbances in the Punjab and in certain other parts of the country." It is difficult to say whether this statement should be discounted in face of the fact that the premier of the Central Provinces has not always been too friendly to the Christians.

Such a law as discussed seems much more natural to the Hindus of India than to us. We Americans make a big point out of converting others. With the Christian missionary enterprise it has become a part of our culture. Not so in India. Hinduism is not a proselytizing religion. Conversion is not looked upon as an ideal. C. F. Andrews said of Gandhi in 1932, " . . . there is in Mr. Gandhi's own mind a very strong objection to all proselytizing. Also there is a feeling that it is wrong, except in very rarest instances, for a man to change his religion." (Christian Century, June 15, 1932) Buoyed up by the feeling of independence India may have less taste than ever for conversions which may result in a certain lack of appreciation for the culture of India. Missionaries have not been generally popular throughout India.

How the new law will affect the work of the General Conference missions in the Central Provinces cannot be ascertained at this date. A member of the Foreign Mission Board stated that he knew of no reports on the effect of the law. Puran Banwar, native of the Central Provinces and now a student at Bethel, was unaware of the enactment of the law. He feels that unless influenced by outside pressure the magistrate in charge of the district in which our stations are located would recognize a Christian conversion as such if he could feel that it was genuine. In the same district is a second class magistrate who is a Christian. It is evident that a good deal depends upon the character of these magistrates. Just what would happen if a convert to Christianity were denied recognition and yet persisted in Christian faith is not clear. Puran Banwar believes that such a convert could not be baptized by the mission church.

However, the picture may not be so dark at all. Legislation of conversions may not be difficult. However to make the state the judge as to whether a man has been converted might open the door to persecution. But persecution does not always stop conversion as the history of the Roman Empire makes clear. If conversions are taking place monthly in our missions, we should soon know how this law works out in practice.

School and Farm Spell Opportunity

By John Thiessen

(On the last day of 1947 Missionary John Thiessen wrote a rather complete account of the mission school and farm at Jagdeeshpur, India. Here it is.)

THE work, which we feel our heavenly Father has assigned to us, has been almost unbroken joy. If any missionary is more happy in his work than I am, or enjoys it more than I, he would have to be going some. This dealing with young life and growth day in and day out is a most wonderful opportunity and a constant fresh source of joy. There are, in the first place, our growing boys and girls, some four hundred, among whom I walk and talk and teach and correct and urge and appreciate day after day, the year round. Then in connection with these boys and girls are the animals. And then the school farm with all its growth. Then the product of the shops —things that the boys and girls make. And then to top it all, to observe the spiritual growth of the older boys and girls. In former years, when we had only the middle (grammar) school, the students were much less mature, and one could not judge in how far foundations were really laid for a firm structure of faith in Christ. But now with high school students, we can see more clearly what the results of Christian nurture really are. We are very thankful, on behalf of our church in India, that our American churches and Mission Board have sanctioned this high school in our midst, where our children from Christian homes can get their foundation education in the atmosphere of the Christian church and near their homes. We do believe that in a very few years the spiritual results of our high school will be great in our church area in this part of India. In our own high school we have only Christians on the teaching staff, and the overwhelming majority of the students come from Christian homes. There are not many high schools in India that can have such a record and such an opportunity.

Need Instructor in Agriculture

About the teaching in our school we can give a fairly satisfactory report. The MCC has given us wonderful help in sending us Miss Ada Stulzfuss from near Reading, Pa. Her teaching ability and her influence over the girls in the girls' boarding home are of the highest quality. The subjects, as a whole, are fairly well taken care of; but the agricultural course is far from satisfactory. We could not get a teacher, no matter how we searched. So I had to take over the teaching of this subject. In practical agriculture I have no trouble, but I have never had real, theoretical agricultural training. This has made it very difficult for us. But I have a very able assistant in this subject. He is only high school pass, and hence he does not qualify for teaching high school, yet he and I carry on, and we do reach some sort of a standard which is by no means of the highest quality. However, our efforts have inspired interest and a practical knowledge of agriculture in our students. We still hope and pray that before long a young man can be found in America who is willing to come to India to help our rural Christian church in this very important phase of life. Meanwhile we have to carry on as best we can. Our Scripture classes are all well taken care of, and spiritual progress in knowing Him, whom to know is life eternal, is constantly registered.

Main Building Nearly Finished

While I am speaking about school, I must make mention of the building program as far as the school is concerned. The main building is nearly finished. One unit is just now going up and we expect to finish that in 1948. That we believe is the final unit as far as the main building is concerned, unless growth should come even much faster than we have experienced the last several years. We expect fifty students in the Sophomore, Junior and Senior classes by 1950.

There's Music in the Air

Now in 1947 we already have over fifty in these classes. It may become necessary to erect a small building some distance away from the main building to house the music classes, because they are apt to attract too much attention in the regular class rooms. With the nearing of the completion of the main building, Mrs. Thiessen has also finally been able to equip an art and drawing room, a phase of work which she has carried on for a number of years. This room and the work done therein, is a great inspiration and appreciation for the beautiful.

Need Building for Eighty Boys

The girls' boarding home is finished as a whole. Only the shelves with doors and locks are not yet finished. It may take most of 1948 to finish those. We hope also to finish a small building for about twenty students whose parents are rich enough to supply them with their entire feeding needs. Naturally they would eat better than those students who stay in the boarding home, which is still largely supported by mission funds. In the regular boys' boarding in which there are one hundred and sixty boys, we badly need at least one new unit. In the budget we are asking for funds to build one unit for about eighty boys. This building is planned to be a double story building. The lower floor for a dining hall (we have none now and the boys fill their plates and then go under trees or on various porches and eat—a most unorganized condition) and the upper story shall be living quarters for the eighty boys—one large hall.

I should have mentioned that we have now thirty-one girls in our new girls' boarding home, and there is room for fifty. At one end of this new home there is a suite for the superintendent of the home, which Miss Stulzfuss now occupies, and also a suite of rooms in which two Indian lady teachers live. Nearby this home is also an outside kitchen.

A Dairy Department

In Connection with all the above, I must not overlook to mention the dairy department for which many ladies societies sent funds. We have eight nice cows now, and seven heifers, and a number of male animals for work purposes. We also have a useful cow barn, and feed storing rooms. This cattle department is on fairly high ground, with a well right on the premises. Just below this whole establishment we have several fine rice fields, which already yielded a heavy rice crop for the boarding home this year. All fertilizer washes into these fields during the rainy season when the rice crop grows.

Natives Want Better Layers

In 1947 we also added the poultry department. We have White Leghorn and Rhode Island Red chickens, and also ducks, geese and turkeys. This is a very welcome department for our Christian community. Almost every home has some chickens, and a larger egg and more from one hen is an advantage that the dullest farmer soon sees. So people haul off the eggs from our chicken establishment so persistently that we can hardly propagate the flock.

Human Contacts Can Be Taxing

Besides all these human contacts which I have already mentioned, one is always in the midst of fellow workers in the various professions of life. There are the fellow evangelists, the teachers, the caretakers of boarding homes, the masons, the carpenters and common laborers and farmers and the large number of non-Christians who come to the hospital and then take their chance to look around. And then the idlers and beggars around the place all the time. To keep the high standards of Christ always on top, and to look upon every man, woman and child as a soul for whom Christ died, is often a bit taxing under these conditions.

Persecution

The work in the whole area is under Brother Harold Ratzlaff's supervision and goes on very well in most respects. There have been some shadows though. When independence came many non-Christians thought that there was no room in new India for any other people than Hindus. So there was some definite persecution, and some weak Christians did deny their and our Lord. Yet our evangelists believe that most of those who denied our Lord will repent and come back. Several have already come back and repented. Those who have once tasted how gracious our Saviour is, even if they are overcome by fear and fall, cannot be satisfied in their old ways any more.

The supervision of the field is too much for one missionary. There should be two district missionaries in this Phuljhar field.

Two Retreats

During 1947 we have had two retreats. One was for evangelists and Bible women, and one for students and young people in general. Both retreats were on a high spiritual level and most refreshing. The young peoples' retreat had a unique feature in it in that it was in the jungles and students built their own huts from branches and leaves of the forest. Ten to twelve students in a group built a hut for themselves. In this way ten huts were built. After this young peoples' retreat one student, Chandra-Mohan by name, came to his father one morning before dawn and woke him and said, "Father, at the retreat God gave me a vision and a call and I promised to obey. Now I must and want to prepare definitely for work in His kingdom." Such deep stirrings make youth retreats in India most worth while. And then after the stirrings the commitment.

A Great Deal of Work for the Shepherd

The work in our local Bethel church, of which I am still the pastor, has gone on in a regular pace. Twenty-six people, mostly students, have been baptized and taken into church membership. Thirty-nine babies were blessed. We have had regular services, prayer meetings, Sunday school classes in four departments, and Christian endeavor work. Witnessing by the brotherhood was also carried on. The present membership of this local church is 498. Then there are 447 unbaptized children. Besides this number there is the good sized population of boarding homes. This all makes for very much shepherding work.

The above gives a bird's-eye view of what is going on at this Jagdeeshpur station. I have however not made mention of the medical work and the details of the district work. But with this we wish to ask you and all our churches in the home-land to keep on remembering us and this work before the throne of grace.

Gandhi's Fasting

by W. F. Unruh

Mahatma Gandhi will always be remembered as one of the great men of history. Many will be the eulogies sung to his praise. His recent fast of repentance impresses the world. The inclination will be to hold this fast up as an example of what Christian fasting means. Here we need to think carefully. Gandhi's fast was one of repentance, pledged to continue until the Hindus and Moslems would stop terrorizing each other and would agree to respect each other.

Mahatma Gandhi has repeatedly used the fast as a pressure method. The great veneration which the masses of India accorded him gave him a tremendous leverage. No one would want to be found responsible for his death. He used the fast against the British Government. The Government could not risk allowing him to die in a fast, for then all India would have blamed England for his death. Now, again, neither the Hindus nor the Moslems could afford to allow him to die in a fast of repentance for their atrocities. They came to terms and agreed to respect each other "as if they were brothers." Again his fast proved an effective pressure method.

But this can hardly be called fasting in the sense in which Jesus speaks of it. Fasting as Jesus speaks of it means giving up legitimate things because of a great sorrow for sin or for the sake of a great cause. Jesus says our fasting shall be in secret. We are not to make capital of our devotion for our praise nor for any other purpose. It is to be in secret before the Father. The Mahatma is to be admired for his fasts, but we should not think that he is an example of what Jesus speaks of when he says, "When thou fastest . . . "

Let Us Be Appreciative

By Mrs. J. E. Entz

IN Romans 12:13 we read, "Contribute to the needs of the saints." (R. S. V.)

Perhaps a word such as the above spoke to the heart of him who first made the motion on our General Conference floor that we as a conference give aid to those servants of God in our conference, who, because of health or age, were no longer able to provide for themselves.

Although we realized that such aid would be definitely needed sooner or later by larger numbers, nothing very concrete was done. It is true that at one time a resolution was passed, which provided that an offering of ten cents per member per year should be lifted for this purpose. However that was not followed up as it might have been.

Perhaps this has been so because we as a church have been unusually fortunate in having spiritual leaders, who are very modest in their needs.

Perhaps, the individual churches have provided where, because of age or disability, the servant of God who had shepherded them needed material aid.

Or could it be that we have been blind to needs that we should have seen and provided for? Be that as it may, very little has been done by way of relief grants to date.

Recently I read a report of a large Protestant church concerning ministerial relief. I quote: "The work of Ministerial Relief began in 1717. (we are just now becoming acutely aware of "Ministerial Relief") From that date (1717) to the present our great church has never ceased to care for the aged and disabled ministers, missionaries, their widows and minor orphan children." This church asks for $150,000 annually for such ministerial relief.

The report of the Pension and Minister's Aid Committee to the General Conference in session at Berne, Indiana, this summer began with the words; "One of the growing needs of our Conference is to provide for our ministers as they reach the end of their periods of service."

You will remember that the committee saw that there are two phases of the problem committed to them.

The first, to provide for those ministers who have already arrived at retirement age and are in need of material aid, that is, to provide immediate grants to needy ministers.

The second, to look ahead and formulate a plan providing for an income at retirement, that is, a pension plan.

Much publicity was given to the latter phase of our work, since that was newer and needed to be thoroughly understood by all conference delegates in order that intelligent action could be taken at conference.

Another sentence in this same report reads: "The plan (pension plan) is a forward looking one. It does not meet the demands of the present."

Recommendation No. 5 reads: "We recommend that the Pension Committee be authorized to solicit funds to provide for those not covered by the pension plan."

The Pension and Ministers Aid Committee has become increasingly aware, in the past month, of the first phase of their work. Just recently application was made for regular aid to a man who has served our Conference unusually well and whose health prohibits his further service as pastor. (Others who will be needing help have also been brought to your committee's attention.)

Funds are needed for extending such aid, and we appeal to the churches of our conference to make contributions for this cause.

It is suggested that some churches may desire to set aside the offering taken on Communion Sunday for such ministerial aid. One church (not of our conference) makes a strong appeal for funds for the "Relief Grants for Ministerial Aid" on Mother's Day.

Material gifts can never repay the spiritual blessings received through the ministry of God's servant. We do not doubt that anyone who receives help from the brethren, through The Pension and Minister's Aid Committee, will be able to say with Paul, "It is kind of you to share my trouble, for even in Thessalonica you sent me help once and again." Phil. 4:14,16 (R.S.V.) They can say also with Paul, "Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities and to those who were with me." Acts 20:34 (R. S. V.)

Let us then gladly and whole-heartedly "Contribute to the needs of the saints." Rom. 12:13.

M.C.C. Ships 1,322 Tons

The following shipments left port from December 15, 1947, to January 15, 1948. Also included are two shipments of raisins which left on November 20, 1947, which had not been reported previously.

TO GERMANY: Christenpflicht, American Zone

—137 tons of flour; Mennonite Child Feeding, British Zone—398 tons flour, 30 tons beef from Canada, 29 tons miscellaneous food, 42 tons raisins, and 35 tons dried fruit; Hilfswerks British Zone, 40 tons flour; Mennonite Child Feeding, French Zone, 196 tons flour, and 35 tons raisins. TO AUSTRIA: 30 tons beef from Canada, 35 tons raisins, and 122 tons flour. TO CHINA: 6 tons clothing, bedding, and soap, 65 tons flour, TO ITALY: 13 tons clothing and soap and 30 tons Ralston Cereal. TO POLAND: 2 tons clothing and shoes, 2 tons powdered whole milk, and 45 tons flour. TO HUNGARY: 30 tons flour.

Refugees Headed for Paraguay Are Delayed

It had been expected that the first of two vessels, carrying a total of 1,600 Mennonite refugees to Buenos Aires, would sail from Europe during the first week in February, but recent word from C. F. Klassen indicates that there may be some delay. The sailing dates of the vessels will be spaced so that the first group can be trans-shipped from Buenos Aires to Paraguay before the second group arrives. If present plans carry, the river boats will receive and transfer all the passengers with a minimum of delay in Buenos Aires.

Stirling Avenue Church Joins Hundred Per Cent Plan

The following outline of the recommendation by the church board of the Stirling Avenue Church was mimeographed and was presented before the congregation at their annual meeting, as a result of which that church decided to go on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN.

This outline presents so concisely and so comprehensively the various issues involved that we present it here as a model for those churches which may be considering the PLAN where it has not yet been adopted:

I. Recommended that our congregation adopt the 100% Church Paper Plan of the General Conference.

  A. The Plan briefly stated

    1. Each family unit in the congregation to get the official church paper, THE MENNONITE
    2. The subscriptions to be paid in lump sum by the treasurer.
    3. A 10 per cent reduction in cost.

  B. Some advantages of the Plan

    1. A Christian Magazine In Every Home. Many of our homes receive no Christian paper regularly. The Christian cause in the world is of paramount importance. The MENNONITE covers general news as well as inspirational articles.
    2. Knowledge of General Conference. Under no plan can we become acquainted with the workings of Conference more quickly than this. This Conference can serve us, and we can serve the Conference more effectively.
    3. Aid to Organizations within the Church. For example, there are four pages devoted to youth in each issue. The paper gives news of all activities of the Conference and suggestions for further cooperative effort.
    4. Growing Sense of Belonging. At best this will work rather slowly, but we want to gradually feel a part of this larger body. This will help us spiritually and in a practical sense.
    5. Avoid Effort of Selling Paper Individually. Possibly belonging to the church should entitle the member to the news of that which he joined. At any rate, a great amount of effort is wasted in seeking to sell the paper individually.
    6. Save Expense and Bother. For each subscriber to send a money order and annually renew is both bothersome and expensive. Counting money order fee, stamp, and 10 per cent discount, we save about 40 cents on each subscription.
    7. Achieve the normal pattern. All denominations, and even secular organizations, are agreed that a paper in the home of all members is the normal pattern.
    8. A Ministry to our Shut-Ins. The paper would mean much to them through the year.
    9. A Ministry to our Inactive Members. The paper should stimulate some to greater interest in the work of the church.
    10. A Ministry to our Members Away at School.

  C. The Suggested Plan

    1. That we officially enter the plan. Possibly we would be on the mailing list the middle of February or first issue in March.
    2. That we encourage our members to pay for their subscription through the envelope. Cost is $1.80 per year.

Our

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Bible Week is now in progress. The quiet sincerity and the spirituality which radiates from Rev. Gaeddert is contagious. The meetings which are conducted twice daily are a blessing and a challenge to students and faculty alike. A review of some of the projects being carried on in shop and mechanics classes may be of interest. Here are some of the things being made by the shop classes: wool baler, step ladder, gun cases, oyster shell hoppers, tool cabinets, table lamps, book racks, dog house, fuel box, magazine racks, end table, wall shelves, pin-up lamps, baseball bat, cedar chests, coat hangers, shoe racks, medicine cabinet, and lawn ornaments. The Shop II boys are sharpening screw drivers, chisels, and rip and cross cut saws. In the mechanics courses they have been studying turning lathe operations acetylene-oxygen welding procedures, electric-arc welding and forging. They have also been making objects such as: eye-bolts, U-bolts, clevis, hammers, scriber, punches, cold chisels, cistern covering ring, door latches, trailer, wash line post, mail box posts, wheel puller, basketball goals, and power lawn mower. Mr. Linscheid teaches the shop courses, and Mr. Gerhard Toews the mechanics courses.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Bassey Minso, an African student from the Brethren Mission field, now attending Bethany Biblical Seminary, spoke to the student body at chapel services, Tuesday, January 27. He challenged the group with the words of Jesus, "I tell you, lift up your eyes and see how the fields are already white for the harvest."

The seminary family enjoyed a social on Friday evening, January 30. It was sponsored by the social committee consisting of Mrs. Esko Loewen, (chairman) Mrs. Jacob Goering, and Leonard Metzker. The evening's entertainment began with a fellowship dinner. Rev. L. R. Mitchell, graduate of the Witmarsum Seminary, now Dean of the Chicago Baptist training school for Negro ministers and Christian workers, was a welcome guest. Following the dinner the group participated in various games, and later gathered around the piano for a "singspiration." At the close of the evening Dr. S. F. Pannabecker showed several slides of the late Dr. Warkentin, and Esko Loewen showed pictures on the summer service units last summer.

The Seminary Quartet drove to Washington, Illinois, on Sunday, January 25. They presented a program at the Central Conference Church there.

Rev. Marvin Dirks, instructor in voice, spoke at the Vesper Services on Sunday, February 1. His sermon subject was "The Philippine Internment in Retrospect."

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

On February 22 Dr. Charles H. Wesley, President of the College of Education and Industrial Arts, Wilberforce, Ohio, will speak on the topic, "The Frontier in Race Relations." Dr. Wesley is a very capable negro speaker. Christian Life Week will be observed February 10-13 with Rev. Andrew Shelly, pastor of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, as the speaker. Rev. Shelly is an alumnus of Bluffton College. Students took up an offering to assist Mr. and Mrs. Don Crites whose home was destroyed by fire recently. The offering amounted to $117. On January 31 students sponsored a relief clothing drive, collecting used clothing throughout the entire town of Bluffton. Rev. J. N. Smucker led a discussion in College Church January 25 on the topic "Christianity as a Solution to World Problems." Richard Alderfer and William Keeney also presented their views on the subject.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Junior Class will present as their class play "The Man Who Came to Dinner," by Kaufman and Hart, on Saturday, February 28 at 8:00 P. M. in Memorial Hall, under the direction of Ellen Waltner. A new scoreboard has been added to the gymnasium equipment by the children of R. A. Goerz, one of the first Graymaroon coaches and a loyal supporter through the years. Formal presentation was made to the school on January 30, preceding the basketball game with Friends University. The intercollegiate team is standing fourth place in the Kansas Conference at the midpoint of a season of good games. The preliminary game on February 7 will be played with Freeman Junior College. As basketball is also the leading sport for this quarter in the varied recreational program, an additional 127 men are playing on fifteen intramural teams, with tournaments now in progress among both men and women.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

On Saturday evening the students gathered at the home of C. C. Neufelds in honor of John Siemens, a student who recently underwent a surgery. The evening was spent in fellowship and discussions on various phases of school life. Later a business meeting followed in which Dave Schroeder was elected to represent our College at the Y.P.U. Committee meeting in Chicago. It was also decided that the students would endeavor to put into effect the Conference 100 Per Cent Subscription Plan for our College in which all students will subscribe to one or the other of the Conference papers.

It is the plan of the Student Council to inaugurate a Craft's Night one evening per week. It is felt by many students that the learning of various hand crafts will become a very interesting phase of our College activities and at the same time will be helpful for future work with children and young people. Such crafts as leather work, basketry, shellcraft, bookbinding and needlecrafts are being considered by a committee composed of Henry Wiens, Lois Bartel, Dave Schroeder, Mrs. Helen Regier, and Mr. H. Wall.

is founded upon certain fundamental basic freedoms which must be kept intact if a country, yea, a civilization, is to live. These basic freedoms are especially three: freedom of worship, freedom of speech, and freedom of conscience; we feel that not any of these can be brought under the domination of the state without irreparable loss to a country or a civilization. May this, our country—this great citadel of freedom—never surrender a single one of these precepts which its founders regarded as the very foundation stones of a nation!

2. We fear that this growing encoachment of the State upon the personal life and upon the individual conscience will eventually make it impossible for conscientious individuals and groups to live and to promote their way of life which their conscience and faith in God requires. Again we bring to light our experience. Nor do we speak only for our own preservation—; rather, we speak for the preservation of those fundamental priviliges which no state or body may usurp, lest the torch of freedom be extinguished.

3. We speak also expressing our concern for teen-aged youth. Rarely is a teen-age person sufficiently mature spiritually and morally to be subjected to the influences of military training. Such training periods would lead to docile submission to state control and the decay of independent thought and conscience. Rather than docile submission to state control, we need today young people who through proper guidance and training in well-established institutions of learning and in our churches learn to develop strong consciences on matters of right and wrong, so that when their time comes to assume responsibility, they may then be prepared to carry forward the torch of freedom and democracy.

We repeat that we speak from experience, having witnessed the effects of military training upon a country, and the inevitable militarization that it brings with it. It is not our intention to dictate state policies, but rather to present this statement as an expression of our deep concern regarding this significant issue.—(Statement prepared jointly by Albert M. Gaeddert, Secretary of the General Conference Peace Committee, and Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America)

THE COMPLEX LIFE--NINE PIECES OF SILVERWARE

FROM THE "QUEEN ELIZABETH" approaching Southampton, January 14, 1948.—As I begin this letter we are still several hours out of Southampton. The ship is expected to dock about 1:00 A. M., and in the morning at about 9:00 o'clock we will begin getting off the ship and getting on the Strathmore. Baggage has been taken from our cabins already and will be unloaded during the night so that we have only to claim it, go through the customs line to have our bags checked off—we will not have to pay any duty here—and make our way to the other ship.

This has certainly been a speedy and pleasant trip. The sea has been somewhat rough so that the ship rolled a good deal and many were sick, but none of us were bothered that way. The children, especially Carol, had to fight a cold. She had to have several penicillin shots, but otherwise we have been in good health.

Accommodations are really very good. We would feel out of place traveling in a more expensive class. Our cabin is plenty large, and the food good and there is enough of it. Our worst trouble in the beginning was to find our way with nine pieces of silverware in a six-course dinner.

We have certainly enjoyed the fellowship of the many other missionaries on the boat. Almost all of them are in tourist class, and so we see them often. We heard in New York that there were 54 in all. Many will be on the Strathmore with us, and we want to meet oftener there and possibly organize discussion groups, Bible study, or something of that sort. Of course, we have met some that are going to other fields too—Burma, Africa, etc.

UMT will not provide defense. If there is another war, it will be fought with atomic bombs and germs, carried by guided missiles and pilotless aircraft. Atom-scientists testify an atom-bomb attack could kill 40,000,000 people the first night. UMT-mobilizations, six months or a year later, at best would enable generals to bring empty victory back to devastated, plague-ridden America.

UMT will increase the suspicion and ill-will between nations that leads to war. To add UMT to America's already enormous superiority in armed might (atom-bombs, most powerful air force and navy, unrivalled industrial capacity, 8,000,000 trained reserves) would speed up the race for power and arms, and would be another heavy blow to the United Nations and the hope for world government.

Time has gone so quickly that I really didn't have time to set down those questions I promised for your missionary handbook. But since we will be on the Stratmore a long time I maybe can get it done.

We can say that there was a real tug at our heart strings as we pulled away from America, but we are still looking forward to our field of service.—Willard and Selma Unruh (The Unruhs have gone to India for their first term of service.)

[Editorial Comment: We do not begrudge the Unruhs one morsel of food they ate. They did as they should have done—whether they did with the nine pieces of silverware, we are not quite sure. But our point is that those people who give "for missions" with the demand that " all of it go for missions" and that none of it be used for overhead expense, such as that involved in the maintenance of the General Conference Headquarters, etc., give a little bit of thought to the "nine pieces of silverware" and the "six-course dinner."]

"By Plane"-Declared Safer and Cheaper in China

SHANGHAI, CHINA, January 17.—We were happy to step on the shores of our beloved China, after a five-week trip, on December 31. After two weeks of steady work we are about to finish our work with customs. Duty was quite high ranging from 20 to 35 per cent on some articles. However we are happy to have the things here.

Due to the fact that the Hankow Language School teaches only a local dialect and that Rev. Brown advised strongly that we study language directly on the field, we have decided to go to Paochi. We expect to go in by plane as this is the safer and cheaper way to travel these days. Yesterday's paper announced Communist plans to take Sian which is the airbase on which we would land, but unless we are denied landing, we expect to go, feeling this is the leading of the Lord. We hope to leave Shanghai in a week if possible. It is somewhat difficult to secure a plane as they are quite busy evacuating missionaries from Communist controlled areas.—Yours for souls in China, Lester Wuthrich

TAKE NOTICE

The Lord willing, I shall leave home Thursday, February 26, 1948, and from then until March 24, my address will be c/o CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE 103 Furby Street, Winnipeg Manitoba CANADA.

It everything turns out according to schedule I will be able to preach or lecture, as the case may be, for churches and communities not too far away from the College. The necessary arrangements for this will have to be made with Rev. Arnold Regier, Principal of the College, who knows best what, and how much can be crammed into my time at Winnipeg on top of my regular duties in the College.

I had proposed to celebrate our silver wedding February 25, 1948, the exact anniversary of our wedding. That particular day, however, is out for us as a day of festivities. But if our friends would and could come to our church in Waterloo Saturday, February 21, at 3 P. M., to worship and to thank the Lord with us, they would be very welcome. As we have no fatted calf and lack also those other things which are indispensable to big celebrations, we will send out no special invitations for the occasion.—Eliese and Jacob H. Janzen.

The general theme of the school this year is "World Evangelism," with one Sunday evening devoted to each of the following subjects: World Missions, Missionary Opportunities in Europe, The Africa Mission Field, Missions in Latin America, and Home Missions. A number of missionaries and relief workers have served as discussion leaders. Each evening opened with a fellowship supper at 5:30, followed by study periods for six different age groups. For the third hour, the entire group came together for a film appropriate to the missionary theme. Interest and attendance at the school has been good. The committee in charge included Winfield Fretz, Mrs. Selma Platt, and C. Krahn. Eldon W. Graber was in charge of securing and showing the films.—Richard Blosser, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Lustre, Montana: Open roads and nice weather have made very good attendance possible. The men are doing work on the inside of the church building, where it is quite comfortable. Tools have been gathered and sent to the M.C.C. for use in Paraguay. We are studying Hebrews in our Friday night Bible study. The group meets in homes. On January 11 Rev. Write the Rules Committee

A number of Representatives are circulating a petition to discharge the Towe Bill for universal military training, H. R. 4278, from the Rules Committee so as to get it out on the floor of Congress for a vote. The Rules Committee must make a decision whether to permit it to be considered. If they decide not to have it considered by the House, only a discharge petition can bring it to a vote.

We recommend that you ask your own Congressman not to sign any discharge petition for consideration of U.M.T. Ask him instead to recommit the bill so that national organizations which were denied a hearing might be heard.

We recommend that members of the Rules Committee be asked either to postpone indefinitely any action on compulsory training or to recommit the bill (H. R. 4287) to committee for fair hearings.

—Inman Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas: The Senior Christian Endeavor Society, in collaboration with the church, sponsored a social at which all the young couples recently married were recognized in a special way. Since in all these marriages only one party was a member of our church, this event was used for becoming better acquainted with them and helping them feel more at home. One of the businessmen of Inman donated a gift of $500 to be placed in our church building fund.—Mrs. Aaron J. Epp, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: January marked the fortieth anniversary of this congregation. The first service was conducted in the new building on January 12, 1908, with Rev. C. Mueller preaching. The church was dedicated on May 28 of that year. It is of interest to note that the original building was incorporated into the present church building. Miss Marilyn Preheim, one of the student group who went to Europe last summer, showed the pictures she had taken of this trip to the combined C. E. group. The canning project for this community has been completed. The twelve churches participating in the project here donated a total of around $13,000. For this sum 30,000 pounds of beef were purchased and processed into a total of over 14,000 cans of beef, poultry and lard. The monetary share contributed by our church amounted to $3,140.—Corr.

RESTORED BY MUSIC

Rev. J. J. Thiessen, pastor of the First Mennonite Church at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, in a recent sermon pointed out that many a person, bogged down in the mires of confusion and despair, has been brought back to mental and spiritual soundness through the power of music.

How true! Running through the stories of our great hymns as presented in the HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY, which is to appear early this summer, you will realize again and again how it was not argument, but the music of the Christian church which has been the strength and stay of some of our greatest saints.

General Conference Voluntary and Summer Service Units for 1948

The General Conference Service Committee plans to administer nine projects this summer. Two of these are to be located in the Arizona and Montana mission fields; three to serve as Youth teams in Illinois-Indiana, Kansas-Oklahoma, and Canada; two with migrants in the Illinois-Minnesota, and Michigan areas; one in the Chicago Home Mission; and one at the Canadian Youth Farm. These units will be under the sponsorship of the various boards and committees responsible for that area of work, such as; Board of Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Education, Peace, Young People's Union, and Woman's Missionary Association, and the Canadian Youth Organzation.

SUMMER SERVICE PROJECTS

Arizona and Montana Missions

These Indian missions are desirous of volunteers for services such as; daily vacation Bible school teaching, repair work, sewing, secretarial work, and visitations.

Youth Teams

These teams are to travel to designated churches which have solicited their assistance in working with young people to help build up a well-rounded youth program, be of service to the whole church as much as possible to study, and to promote the principles of peace.

Migrant — Summer Service Project

It is desired that two individuals work as a team in this type of work, and if possible have some Spanish-speaking ability. Visitation is a basic technique. Vacation school program, including Bible study, craft work, supervised recreation, all with a Sunday school and worship emphasis would be a part of the work.

Chicago Home Missions

These volunteers would be asked to teach daily vacation Bible schools, supervise recreation, do slum visitation, take field trips, and do some studying.

Canadian Youth Farm

This farm, located in Rosthern, Saskatchewan, provides opportunity for work in the Invalid Home, Children's Home, taking part in Young People's Retreats, teaching DVBS, as well as, some good strong physical work for which we need some masculine support.

This project affords a fine opportunity to work together with our Canadian brothers.

Erna Friesen, Director of Summer Service

Erna Friesen, of Henderson, Nebraska, has accepted the appointment to serve as director of the nine Voluntary Summer Service Units being established for the coming summer. She succeeds Bertha Fast of Mt. Lake, Minnesota, who pioneer in this work last summer.

At present Erna is a member of the staff at Henderson High School. This is her home community. She graduated from Bethel College after which she has been engaged in high school teaching. Last summer, Erna was a member of the team of four which composed the first Voluntary Youth Team to go from church to church of the Conference serving in whatever capacity they could best aid each church. The team served in Indiana and Illinois churches.

Miss Friesen serves as Director of Summer Service under appointment by the conference Service Committee selected by the Peace Committee and the Young People's Union.

Miss Erna Friesen

Slides Available for Local Programs or Voluntary Service

Since voluntary service units are new, churches may wish to arrange for programs to explain them, to make known the opportunity to young people. We have available a set of colored slides of the work done last summer. These together with a talk by a former volunteer would provide an interesting program. Erna Friesen, Henderson, Nebraska, will be glad to help locate former volunteers who might serve as speakers. A list of last year's volunteers and their addresses follows this article. The slide set on the G. C. units is available from Erna Friesen. Slides on the Gulfport, Mississippi, unit and a hospital service unit are available from the MCC, Akron, Pa. The publicity folder for this summer's projects will be sent to the churches about March 1.

How Last Year's Volunteers Feel About It

I have learned very vaguely how great the need is for full-time service. It has changed my entire future.

* * * *

To me it has been an experience money could not buy, and has thus created in my heart a new and greater vision to go out in His service in mission work. Christ has truly become a greater reality in all this than ever before. It has been a great spiritual lift in my life.

* * * *

I'm sure it has made me a better Christian. It has made me more sure of myself in my beliefs and convictions. Being with a group which was interested in the same purpose helped me build up more confidence.

A Thousand Toys to Children Call for Volunteers

At Christmas over 1,000 donated toys were distributed to poor children of Gulfport, Mississippi, through the local colored schools and in this community about the camp.

Another group of volunteers are needed for service at the Skillman State Village for Epileptics, New Jersey, by February 15. The minimum period of service is ten weeks. The work consists of attendant service in the cottages. Inquiries should be sent to Voluntary Services, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron.

A Day Off at Gulfport

On Saturday, December 27, about twelve of the campees went on a deep sea fishing trip. The day was beautiful, the water was calm, and all were enthused. The boat left the pier at eight in the morning and got back at 4:30 in the evening. Almost eight hours of fishing on the beach, and numerous other sults??? You guessed it—no fish. Since there were no fish we had to look to other areas for entertainment. Eating raw oysters, exploring Cat Island, playing on the beach, and nurerous other incidents made the day enjoyable for all. Alvin Yoder's unpremeditated swim also added to the hilarity.

M. C. C. Offers Voluntary Service Opportunities for the Summer

Young men and women will again serve in needed places under the sponsorship of the Voluntary Service Section of the Mennonite Central Committee. Opening dates for the units will vary between June 7 and 14. Institutional units will be ten weeks in length. The period of service for other units on this continent will be eight to ten weeks. The following channels of service are being planned for the coming summer:

Gulfport, Mississippi. Contacts will be with both colored and white in the area. Volunteers will serve in summer Bible schools, a recreation program for children, family welfare, and home repair.

Cuauhtemoc, Mexico. Although speaking knowledge of German and Spanish are not a requirement, they will be a very definite asset to anyone wishing to serve in Mexico. Work will consist of teaching summer Bible school, playground work, and helping out in the hospital program. Both Mexicans and Mennonites will be served.

Akron, Pennsylvania. This summer a small unit is again invited to the MCC Headquarters in Akron. Two members will give part time to a recreational project for the children of the town, several will do secretarial and clerical work in the offices, and one will serve in the housekeeping department.

Institutional Service Units. The mental hospitals of our land are still a needy field. This is especially true during the summer when regular employees take their vacations. Members will generally serve as regular attendants. One hospital unit will be located in the Ohio-Indiana area, another in the Kansas-Nebraska area. The third will be a continuation of the year-around unit at the Skillman State Village for Epileptics in New Jersey. Volunteers for Skillman are also needed for the months between February 15 and June. Ten weeks is a minimum period of service.

Assignment to summer service units will be made beginning April 20.

European Service Unit. Plans are progressing for the the European service program. The Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges is sponsoring eight weeks in Europe for a group of twenty to thirty college students. Individuals not in colleges interested in a month service program in Europe under the Mennonite Central Committee and a tour with Menno Travel Service should submit applications before March 1 to the Mennonite Central Committee.

For further details on any of the above, a descriptive folder, and application blanks, write to Voluntary Service, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

HUNGER FOR MENNONITE LITERATURE

As to Hungary, Saturday, May 10, we met a selected group of the clergymen of Budapest, both to get acquainted and to have them present their material needs. One of the first requests was for a brief history of the Mennonites. Some never heard of the Mennonites. One man, a professor in a certain university, knew about the Mennonites in Russia, but knew nothing of the Mennonites of America. Another desires to place books by Mennonite authors in a lending library. Here is a rare opportunity.

Europe's literature supply of every kind has been greatly depleted during the five years of war. There is and will be a very gradual turn to normality, but I fear the religious type of literature will be considered as secondary or omitted entirely. Everywhere one finds stale news. Notwithstanding, it is apparent that the people are reading. Is this not an unprecedented golden opportunity for those who know the value of good sound Mennonite literature?

If our publishing interests are sufficiently prosperous, could not our publications also be placed before the world for spiritual benefit? The English language is desired everywhere; thus no translations are necessary. Dr. David L. Cooper of the Biblical Research Society, Los Angeles, California, in the past few years has placed where permitted his volumes in libraries all over the world. Should not we be similarly active?

We find English literature in many places. Will we respond to this need? We know our brethren always respond when needs are evident. I am sure they will respond, when sufficiently informed, in this also.—Isaac Baer, Budapest Hungary.

Giving Wings To Ideas

More than 500 years ago, Leonardo Da Vinci was haunted by the inevitability of men flying.

Printing and paper preserved his studies of flight possibilities. His sketches stirred men's imagination. His printed words kept alive for centuries men's hope of flying.

Oddly enough the modern function of printing is to give wings to ideas. To stir the imagination. To achieve fulfillment in realities.

In the field of church publication the great message is the gospel itself and the experience of those who have been caught by it. Your church publications —whether they be periodicals or books or Sunday school quarterlies—start within you a flight of new ideas, new inspirations, new impulses to prayer, and incite you to new experiences in Christian fellowship. They spur us all on to new summits of greater spiritual accomplishments.

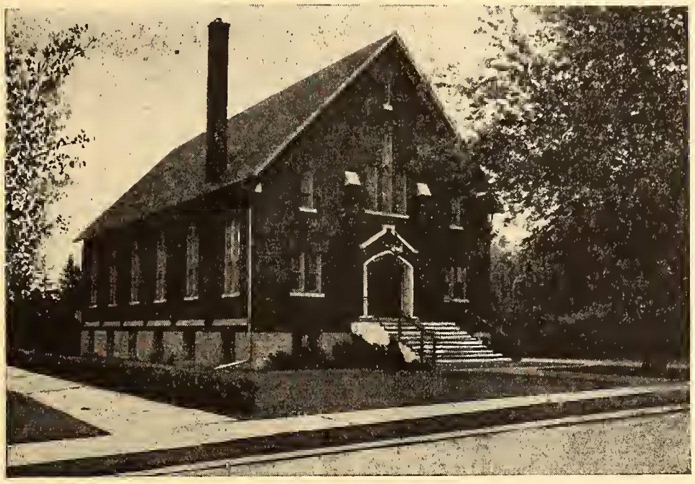
The Stirling Avenue Church Has a High Goal

(The Stirling Avenue Church, Kitchener, Ontario, which joined the General Conference last fall, recently adopted the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan in order that it might become more adequately informed of the Conference program and enter into it more fully. Readers of this paper, in turn, can become better acquainted with the Stirling Avenue Church by reading the following article written by the pastor, Rev. Shelly, upon the editor's request.—Editor)

"HOW much can God accomplish in and through a congregation completely dedicated to Him and His Kingdom?" That is the question which appeared under the caption "A Stimulating Question," in our twenty-six page Missionary Challenge Booklet released last November. It is our earnest desire to work towards this goal to the highest possible degree. Through spiritual fervor and practical planning we seek to lead our members to this dedication, realizing that God's full will is our highest duty and joy. The work of a Church must be described on at least a five-fold level:



Stirling Avenue Church, Kitchener, Ontario

The Local Church

The primary, and distinctive, work of the church is to win individuals to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and to a growth in grace to the acknowledgement of Him as Lord and King. Through the services, work of the organizations, special efforts, prayer meetings and personal contacts we seek to achieve this. Also, this year we have adopted the Scripture Prayer Plan. Another task is leadership training and talent development. Ideally, that vast area of talent ought to be developed and dedicated. The regular work of the church, plus three Y.P.S. groups, S.S., W.M.S., ten musical groups and cooperation with groups in the city tend towards this goal. Another area of local work is service outlet. We are "saved to serve." The goal is every member fitting into the work of the Kingdom to the maximum. Over 200 individuals held specific duties last year. The Crusader effort, embracing more than six months, gave service opportunities to over 200. Other areas are: visiting of sick, hospital, relief drives, clerical work, camp program, etc.

It is our aim to take our full responsibility in the community. Obviously this falls into two areas—spiritual (evangelistic, etc.) and a building up of the community on the principles of righteousness. We cooperate fully with the House of Friendship, a mission dedicated to the reaching of the unreached. Also we cooperate fully with the Fireside, a young people's spiritual effort, the Ministerial Association, Christian Education Council, Goodwill Recreation Hall, W.C.T.U., Social Workers Council, and many community ventures. Through these channels we can help mould united efforts and give our full cooperation in witness.

Larger Witness In Canada

The Bible unmistakably declares our responsibilities here. We are admonished to pray for those who have the rule over us. We have felt that there are three general, basic organizations which should have our financial and active support. These cover areas of work which if effectively carried out must be cooperative. One is the Ontario Religious Education Council with its overall program of Christian Education. Another is the Lord's Day Alliance with its constant vigilance to promote the observance of the Lord's Day. The third is the Ontario Temperance Federation with a program of effort in this important field. In addition to these three we seek to support organizations whose aim is to reach certain needy areas in our Dominion, such as the Gideons and Shantyman's Mission.

Conference Relations

Last August we joined General Conference. Previously we had joined the Eastern District Conference.

MENNONITES are being criticized for being too withdrawn. It is noteworthy that a student who recently attended the large Christian Frontier's Conference at Lawrence, Kansas, and another student who attended the large World Student Christian Federation Conference, both afterwards declared that they felt that Mennonites were too withdrawn from the rest of society. Evidently the students were convinced that Mennonites can learn from others and that at the same time they have something to contribute. Relief workers writing from Europe tell of people's hunger for information about the Mennonites. A Mennonite, who has worked for the Christian Rural Overseas Program of relief, relates how non-Mennonites responded when they became aware of a trustworthy organizational set-up for relief. So far the Mennonite Central Committee has not been sending news releases to Religion in the News. Publicity is prepared only for Mennonites. Meanwhile Mennonites are publicized for their oddities. They could be known for their uniqueness. Their experiences with nonresistance needs to be made known. They need to mix more and give and take more.

A STRONG AMERICA is the sentiment of the American Legion which has posts in many communities. But how can we make America "strong"? Preparation for an atomic and biological war can hardly make America strong if most of America would be destroyed in such a war. Right relationships with others would make America strong. Goodwill and sacrifice are usually necessary to build right relationships. A. J. Muste, oustanding pacifist, recommends in his book, "Not By Might", that, first, the United States give up war-making as a national policy; secondly, use the billions saved by cutting out military expenditures for carrying out rehabilitation work in the world, and thirdly, participate in cultural, economic, and political world organizations, including a federal world government. Is this something like the "foolishness of the Cross" as far as Americans are concerned?

IS THE CHURCH DYING OUT? Dire prophecies to that effect have been heard, lo, these many years. Statistic prove the contrary. Throughout the world the old religious faiths like Confucianism and Hinduism are losing out, but the Christian Church is growing. In the United States, the proportion of population that are members of churches is growing. In 1850 only 15.5 per cent, it is estimated, of Americans were church members. In 1900 this had risen to 43.5 per cent, and at present it is well over 50 per cent. Statistics also show that Protestants are growing more rapidly than Roman Catholics. Best of all are the signs of vigorous religious life in spite of much that can be said to the contrary. The church is extending as never before its interest beyond the borders of our own land. Hundreds of young people are offering themselves for service in the world mission, and millions of dollars are given for overseas relief and for the rebuilding of the fabric of missions.

Needed: The Way of Love

BROTHERHOOD DAY, or Goodwill Day, the Sunday nearest Washington's birthday, has in recent years been added to the Church Calendar and is widely observed throughout Protestantism. It falls this year on February 22. The week following is designated BROTHERHOOD WEEK.

THE PURPOSE of the day is to foster good will between Jews, Catholics, and Protestants. The tension between these groups seems to be increasing and consitutes a real threat of the unity of our country and the religious liberties vouchsafed by the Constitution. The problem cannot be solved in a day or a week, but it is well that we devote one day of our crowded year to a special study of the problem. As a result, all the remaining days of the year should be lived with greater consideration for and a deeper understanding of people whose religious beliefs are radically different from our own.

CHRISTIAN PEOPLE should be known today, as they were in the early centuries of the church, for their LOVE and FAITH. It is a sad day when they are known more for their faith than their love. Yet this characterizes too often the relation between Protestant and Catholic and especially between Christian and Jew. There is a Christ-like way of dealing with people of other religious faith. It is not the way of the Ku Klux Klan with their cross burning, by hooded night riders, or of the Jew baiters who, in Hitler fashion, attribute all the ills of the country to the sons of Abraham. The Christian can travel only one way, if true to his Lord, and that is the way of love.

JEWS, CATHOLICS, AND PROTESTANTS, though differing vitally in their religious beliefs, have many things in common which, if recognized, will help to maintain good will among them. For one thing they have a common citizenship. There are almost five million Jews in our country and between twenty-five and thirty million Roman Catholics. They are American citizens, governed by the same laws and entitled to the same rights as Protestants. A nation cannot be strong when its citizenry is divided. The founders of the country contemplated a land where the peoples of all faiths would live together for the common welfare, free from religious bigotry and respecting each others religious convictions. Again, Jew; Catholic, and Protestant have a common belief in God. They stand unitedly for a spiritual interpretation of the universe and the spiritual meaning of life as against the secularism that is threatening to engulf us. Rabbi, priest, and minister can join hands and repeat the first article of the ancient Creed, "I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth." They have on occasion united to repeat the Lord's Prayer. They have all of the Old Testament in common, Catholics adding the apocryphal books to their canon) and agree largely on moral standards of conduct. Good citizenship as well as good Christianity demand that a spirit of good will be mantained between these three religious groups, except as ill will may arise out of one's loyalty to Christ.

THE JEWS have been persecuted from the days of Pharaoh to the present and often by Christian people. It is certain that a Jew is never won to Christianity by persecution. He is won by deeds of kindness done in the name of Christ, as some have been won through our relief work in Europe. Jesus was born into a Jewish home and our faith is rooted in Judaism. All the prophets were Jews. David, the sweet singer of Israel, was a Jew, and all the books of the Bible, except two, were written by Jews. To the Jews, as a race, we therefore owe everything we treasure most. Let us remember that before indulging in such epithets as "sheeny" and "dirty Jews." To judge them fairly one must think of the best of their people, in the past and present. Living Jews who have made a notable contribution to our country are Albert Einstein, Walter Damrosch, Herbert Lehman, Rabbi Wise. There are scores of others. The Jews we meet today are, after all, not responsible for the tragic deeds that occurred in Jerusalem two thousand years ago. The tragedy of the Jew is that he still looks for a Messiah, failing to recognize that the Saviour has already come. It is the task of Christians to show in their lives the efficacy of the One whom the Jews reject.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS are a continual source of discord. They oppose with every means Protestant mission work at home and abroad, and are continually trying to get public funds for the support of their parochial schools. Much of their religion seem to us to be superstitions. On the other hand, there is much in Catholicism for which we should be profoundly grateful. They reach large masses of peoples in the cities, especially foreigners, from which we wash our hands. We must admire the Catholic's devotion and loyalty to the church and their absolute stand against divorce. Some of our greatest hymns were written by Catholics, for example, "Lead, Kindly Light," "Faith of Our Fathers," "Silent Night," and "Grosser Gott wir Loben Dich." In at least one community the Mennonite relief work is generously supported by a Catholic business man. This same man also spoke openly in defense of our conscientious objectors, showing more courage and good Christianity in the days of war hysteria, than some of our Protestant business men who had less at stake. He is a faithful, devout Catholic, but is tolerant of others. We need more citizens of his spirit. It may be that Brotherhood Day, if widely observed, will make an important contribution towards this end.

Towards an Understanding of the Jews

by Melvin Gingerich

IT IS always difficult to understand minority groups. The Jews are a minority group; so are the Mennonites. Both have been misunderstood and unfairly persecuted. Throughout history majorities have organized themselves into "hate-groups" to take their vengeance upon minority groups in their midst who dared to be different and refused to conform to the culture of the larger groups.

Not only Jews and Mennonites have suffered in this way. It may have been the Poles or the Irish or some other small group which kept some of its earlier characteristics. One historian points out that between 1820 and 1860, in the United States alone, there were thirteen organized "hate groups" circulating their propaganda against "foreigners" and others whom they did not understand and therefore hated.

In our own day we have had many of these organizations in America, of which the Ku Klux Klan is but one. Most of the present-day American "hate" organizations are anti-Jewish, and their propaganda has found its way into many Mennonite homes. Since 1933 several hundred of these organizations have been started in the United States, several on a national scale.

It is therefore essential that we be able to counteract their propaganda, for whatever intolerance is aroused against one minority group will eventually find its expression against other groups. In other words, the civil liberties of Mennonites are not safe in a country that is infested with anti-Semitism. So even from a selfish point of view we must be interested in giving the Jew a fair hearing.

A brief review of history is necessary for an understanding of the problem. In the Roman Empire, for 300 years, Christians were persecuted along with the Jews. Then Christianity became the state religion, but not feeling altogether secure in its new position of power, it now inaugurated a period of persecution, designed especially to keep Jews from persuading Christians to change their faith. Laws were passed making it illegal for a Jew to own a Christian slave, for fear of the influence of the Jew upon him. Then a law was passed that no Jews could hold slaves. In a day when slaves were widely used in agriculture, this had the effect of practically forcing the Jews out of farming.

Still fearing the proselytizing the Jews might be able to do, laws were enacted to protect the weak Christians. There could be no Christian servant in a Jewish home, and no Jewish doctor could call on a Christian patient. They could not eat or sleep in the same house. The next step was to make it impossible for Jews to buy land or join the guilds.

This left to the Jews the hazardous and unattractive jobs in which the Christians were not interested. They became peddlers and dealers in second hand clothes. Being forced to live alone and engage in special businesses, they naturally developed and maintained certain characteristics, and their differences were accentuated in this historic process.

The Christian Church did not allow its members to charge interest on loans of money. They, however, urged the Jews to loan them money and thus encouraged them to enter banking. When after the Reformation, the Church gave up its testimony against interest-taking, Christians took over banking and forced the Jews into the high risk short loan business where they still welcomed the opportunity to borrow from the Jew.

During the days of the Crusades, it was considered a holy act to make war on the infidels of Palestine. The idea occurred to some that it would be much easier to kill infidels at home than to go to the Near East to do it. When the Black Death spread over Europe, the Jews were blamed for having poisoned the wells, and a great slaughter took place in which the Christians destroyed 350 Jewish communities.

It is easy to understand why Jews therefore have been clannish and why they suspect that Christians have no scruples against taking advantage of them. Under such economic discrimination, they have felt justified in resorting to sharp business practices. Seeing how their brothers have been persecuted by many modern, so-called Christian nations, they have become perhaps overly suspicious and have attempted to prepare themselves for the day of trouble by placing their wealth in the form in which it can be moved easily. They know they do not have a nation to plead their cause, and that it is easy for dictators like Hitler to use them as a scape goat for his own and his people's failures.

A few years ago Fortune Magazine, a non-Jewish and highly reliable publication, made a study which disproved many of the common charges brought against the Jews. Other equally trustworthy studies have authenticated its general conclusions. In the first place, the overwhelmingly greater proportion of Jews are not Communists. Less than 2.5 per cent are; 98 per cent are not.

It is not true that the Jews are disproportionately wealthy and yield great power. In America's sixty richest families, there are no Jews among the first ten and only two among the next fifteen. The Jews are prominent only in scrap metal, clothing, textiles, and the movies. The great majority of our Jews are in the poor or lower middle class.

Nor do the Jews control our press. Of some 1,700 newspaper owner-publishers 15 per cent are Jews. These control 6 per cent of the daily output of newspapers. But among them is the New York Times, often conceded to be the best newspaper in the United States. When the study was made, there was not one Jewish director on any of the three great news gathering agencies, the A.P., U.P., and I.N.S. The great chains of newspapers, Hearst's, Patterson's, McCormick's, Scripps-Howard, are all non-Jewish.

Nor are the Jews our international bankers. The seven largest international banks are all gentile. The eighth is partly Jew, Kuhn, Loeb and Co., but it does less than 3 per cent of the international banking business.

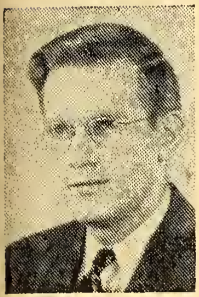
Other countries, too, have found the Jew the most convenient scape goat upon whom the blame for difficulties can be placed and against whom popular anger can be turned. Russia in the days of the Czars very successfully used this kind of program. The false propaganda that was circulated at that time was effective among our brethren in South Russia and has been carried to America where one still finds many traces of it.

Melvin Gingerich is Director of Research for the Mennonite Research Foundation, Goshen, Indiana, and editor of "On My Desk" in the Mennonite Weekly Review. At present he is "on loan" to the M.C.C., where he is writing a "History of Mennonite Civilian Public Service." His article is relevant to the observation of "Brotherhood Week," February 22-29.

WORLD CITIZENSHIP

What world-citizenship can mean is demonstrated in the realm of medicine where the practical benefits of brotherhood are felt by every one of us. An Englishman developed the vaccination for smallpox; a French chemist produced the cure for rabies; the discoveries of a Japanese and a German guard our children from diphtheria; pellagra is being cured today because of the researches of an Austrian. These men —and thousands like them of every race and creed— never thought in terms of national boundaries, religious groupings or racial differences. They were servants of all.—The Gospel Messenger.

A Board of Associate Editors for "The Mennonite"



ASSOCIATE EDITORS
Jacob J. Enz
Lester Hostetler
David C. Wedel
W. F. Unruh

The editorial staff of The Mennonite has been enlarged by a board of Associate Editors, and by a number of contributing editors. The four members of the Board of Associate Editors are: Jacob J. Enz, Nappanee, Indiana; Lester Hostetler, North Newton, Kansas; W. F. Unruh, Moundridge, Kansas; David C. Wedel, North Newton, Kansas.

The four Associate Editors represent the choice of the Conference. They were selected by the following method. A ballot of nominations was sent to all members of General Conference Boards and Committees. Board and Committee members then voted on the names on the ballot. They were also given the opportunity of nominating additional names. After a study of the results, the Board of Publication proceeded to the election of the Associate Editors.

The Associate Editors are to function in the following capacities:

1. To help form an over-all editorial policy for The Mennonite.
2. To accept regular or special assignments in his own particular field of editorial writing, approximately one editorial a month. Instead of an editorial, the assignment might occasionally be a special article on some timely subject within the special field of interest for the individual editor.
3. To confer with the editor by correspondence or at periodic meetings concerning general policies and programs, format, topics, etc.
4. To help evaluate special articles with a view toward publishing or not publishing the same.
5. To assist the editor by way of suggestions as to specific planning and lay-out, contents, emphasis, format; the selection of contributors, etc.
6. To act as a look-out man with a view to making constructive suggestions and criticisms for the improvement of The Mennonite.

The Associate Editors and Editor had their first meeting recently. Some of the results already evident in the paper are editorials by the Associate Editors, the Calendar of Coming Events, and the "Book Notes."

Plans were made for doctrinal articles which will be coordinated with the Christian Year, for vital news reports from Europe, China, India, and other countries, for a systematic report of all deaths in the Conference, for articles discussing such vital issues as co-ops, the kind of funerals to have, etc.

The Board of Editors agreed that the paper should carry five main types of subject matter: 1. Promotional; 2 News; 3. Articles which deal with The Way of Salvation; 4. Doctrinal, based on the Christian Year and applied to social problems; 5. Editorial.

Various matters of policy were discussed, and a tentative statement of editorial policy was drawn up. Part of this statement reads as follows:

"All material should be free from that which breaks fellowship, free from that which shows disrespect of individuals and groups, free from argumentativeness, free from personal grievances and localism, free from hobby-horse riding, and free from poor journalism. It should be true to the Statement of Faith adopted at Souderton, Pennsylvania, in 1941."

The following people have been asked to serve as contributing editors of the paper: Kenneth Bauman, Bluffton, Ohio; Harold Burkholder, Los Angeles, California; Willard Claassen, Freeman, South Dakota; Walter J. Dick, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Elmer Ediger, Akron, Pennsylvania; Walter Gering, Moundridge, Kansas; R. L. Hartzler, Bloomington, Illinois; J. H. Janzen, Waterloo, Ontario; Ed. G. Kaufman, North Newton, Kansas; Mrs. Ed. Miller, Chicago,

A STATEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION

We have within our General Conference various boards and committees. While each such board or committee is charged with a specific task, it must still keep in mind and promote the whole program of our conference. In turn, we, as a conference, must support the full program of the Kingdom of God.

The members of the Board of Publication may be more conscious of this, for it is this board's specific duty to support and promote all of the various activities which are undertaken by the conference, through the conference publications.

It was with this idea in mind that the Board of Publication for some time has thought of the appointment of a Board of Associate Editors for The Mennonite. Now that this group is in existence, we trust that our paper will present to an even greater extent the full needs and activities of our various groups to its many readers. —H. J. Andres, Chairman, Board of Publication.

Illinois; S. T. Moyer, Pandora, Ohio, S. F. Pannabecker, Chicago, Illinois; Paul Roth, Canby, Oregon; Don Smucker, Chicago, Illinois, Clifton Sprunger, Berne, Indiana; William Stauffer, Sugarcreek, Ohio; Freeman H. Swartz, Norristown, Pennsylvania; and Erland Waltner, Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

It is expected that the contributing editors will make occasional contributions to the paper.

Mennonite Groups in Kansas Counties Cut Burial Costs

While the high cost of living has received attention nearly everywhere except in the halls of congress, only a few people seem to be concerned about the high cost of dying. Among the few are a group of farmers out in southwestern Kansas. Through their churches they've organized a mutual burial aid plan that makes dying less expensive.

These people face a universal problem. When death comes, no family is in the mood to shop around for a coffin or an undertaker. Too burdened with grief to care what the complete funeral is likely to cost, the family of the deceased is easily "slickered."

Like Marryin' Sam down in Dogpatch, U. S. A., some commercial undertakers say, in effect, "Will you have the $600 funeral or are you going to try to get one for only $250.?"

So the Mennonite people in Gray, Grant, and Haskell counties have decided to do the job for about $125.

The plan was first started in 1940 by members of the Church of God in Christ (Mennonite) near Montezuma. The head of each family in the congregation was assessed $1 every year and out of the fund thus created the expenses of all were paid.

A commercial embalmer from Dodge City or Garden City was employed to perform the work on the body. Emil Koehn and his wife, members of the congregation, were hired to build the caskets, cover them, and line them tastefully. Lumber and hardware were purchased through local retailers. Friends and members of the immediate family faithfully and lovingly dug out the grave in the cemetery beside their great church.

The nearby undertaker who takes the body, embalms it, and returns next day, charges $75. This cost, says Jesse Koehn, used to be lower before the war—about $50. But like everything else, the price of this, too, has gone up. The churches furnish their casketmaker with lumber, hardware, and fabrics necessary to do the job, adding about another $10 or $15 for the cost of each funeral. The casketmaker and his wife are paid $40 for their work.

That's a total cost of something like $125 or $130 for each funeral—far below the prices which these families would pay were it not for their united efforts and their determination to remove some of the profits that usually go with burying the dead.

Included in the plan are the 360 members of the Montezuma congregation, about 50 at Cimarron, 150 at Copeland, and a half dozen or so Mennonites living near Ulysses. (Abridged article from—The Cooperative Consumer)

A NEW RECOMMENDATION FOR LEAP YEAR

Elgin, Illinois.—M. R. Zigler, secretary of the Brethren service commission, today asked every working member of the Church of the Brethren to give to the Lord his earnings for the day of February 29.

"This amount should be contributed in addition to an individual's regular giving," Zigler said.

The extra funds will be used for relief and rehabilitation overseas.

Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Under the direction of Prof. R. A. Lantz, the Vesper Choir gave a sacred concert in the First Mennonite Church of Bluffton on Sunday evening, February 8. The Little Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra from Chicago will appear on our music series February 23, at 8:15 in the High School Auditorium. The "Marriage Course" is again being offered the second semester of this year for Juniors and Seniors. This course is arranged by the "Y" leaders and faculty advisors. A series of seven lectures will be presented by specialists on pre-marital subjects. Pre-medical examinations were taken on February 2 at Bluffton College by eleven students from Bluffton College and Ohio Northern University. Four students took the Graduate Record Examination on February 3 and 4.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Harris Waltner, a pre-ministerial student, led chapel services on Monday. On Wednesday Rev. Samuel Cushing of the Springfield Congregational Church brought his sister, Mrs. Sigrig to give the chapel message. Mrs. Sigrig is to return to a Borneo Mission field soon. She was interned in a Japanese prison camp for three years. Here her husband died of starvation. The film, "How Green Was My Valley," was shown Tuesday afternoon. The showing of a worthwhile feature film takes place once a quarter as part of the Student Entertainment Course. The film shown the first quarter was based on the life of Franz Schubert. For the last quarter "Heide," based on the story by Johanna Spyre, has been selected. January 30, nine Academy debaters participated in an invitational high school debate meet at Yankton.

CHINESE STUDENT TO MENNONITE SEMINARY

A cable has been received indicating that Miss Liu Kuei-ying of the Mennonite mission at Kai-chow, China, has sailed for the United States on the S. S. General Garden and will arrive in San Francisco February 9. She expects to be a special student at Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Miss Liu Kuei-ying has been personally acquainted with Dean S. F. Pannabecker and family for a number of years and is a member of our Mennonite church. Her mother was a personal helper of the August Ewert family. She went to the Kai-chow high school. When the Japanese came she left and trekked to West China Union Theological Seminary from which she graduated with honors in 1945. Following her graduation she served a year in Chungking as religious director of a mission school. Dr. Pannabecker met her in 1945 during his relief mission to China. The Seminary rejoices in this further manifestation of the sharing of life between America and its fellow Christians of other nations. The last group of Chinese students to attend Mennonite schools were Brethren Stephen Wang and James Liu who spent one year in Bluffton and one year in Bethel College in 1931-32. Both were products of the Mennonite mission work in China.

The Seminary family is awaiting the arrival of the Central Conference ministers for their annual retreat here February 10 and and 11.

Three Bethany students are assisting in Mennonite projects this year. Joseph Mason is singing in our Mennonite quartet. Donald Forbes is temporarily serving the Pulaski, Iowa, church. Philip DeMuth is serving the Central Conference Church in Pekin, Illinois.

Leland Brubaker, Secretary of the Brethren Mission Board, gave a stirring message at the Friday chapel service. He urged the seminary students to launch out on a great crusade of evangelism. He defines evangelism as the winning of men by various methods to accept Jesus Christ as Savior and King and to serve him in the fellowship of his Church to the end that the Kingdom of God shall be realized and strengthened in the hearts of men everywhere. He gave specific examples in China, Africa, and India where men have been won by simple gospel preaching. He declared that the missionary movement has thrown off its connection with imperialism and western civilization and narrow denominationalism and has placed Jesus Christ at the center. Don Snyder, Secretary of Brethren Youth Work, also delivered an address this week on the topic, "My Impressions of American Youth Today." He denied that young people are not saving the world as some had hoped. As a matter of fact, he made some very severe criticisms of modern youth. Yet he referred to a saving minority of young people who are doing a magnificent job of Christian witnessing, and he urged more young people to enter into the zest of Christian living and witnessing.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Members of the Board of Directors of the Newton Chamber of Commerce, the committee chairmen, and their wives were guests at dinner in the dining hall on February 8. This was the third in a series of Sunday dinners arranged by the Department of Public Relations in the desire to become better acquainted with one another and to knit more closely together those with mutual concerns for the welfare of the community. The guests were later taken on campus tours, were conducted through the museum, and were shown one hundred excellent mounted pictures depicting life at Bethel. Guest at previous dinners were the ministers, and the doctors and dentists of Newton; Newton teachers have been invited for February 22. These dinners are served by Louise Duerksen, dietitian, and her regular staff of fifty-four, which includes five full-time cooks, eleven part-time student cooks, sixteen workers in the dish department, and twenty-one waiters and waitresses, headed by Marvin Dyck.

THE STIRLING AVENUE CHURCH

It is our desire to take our full place in the Conference as quickly as possible. For this reason we are now in the 100 per cent Church Paper Plan. Also, the pastor is giving three months to our Seminary, the Congregation graciously continuing his salary and paying all substitutes. We feel the Conference is God's channel for service in His Kingdom.

The World Mission of the Church

All have sinned. Christ died for all. All ought to hear the gospel as soon as possible. "The Gospel to All the World in This Generation" was the reading of a large banner in the front of the church during our missionary convention last November. It is our desire to be faithful first in prayer—real, intelligent, continuous, intercessory prayer. Second, we seek to give. We rose from $1,400 to $6,000. Third, we want our young people to go. In addition to our two members whom we support, we seek to be faithful to the general missionary cause. Because of its very strategic importance we have stressed the work of the Bible Society.

Also, in the world mission, we mention relief and non-resistance. Naturally this could be mentioned in other areas of work of the Church. We have a glorious opportunity to share "in the name of Christ." We have the privilege of holding the torch of peace high—starting in the individual heart, going into the family, church and community, and as much as possible in wider circles. Through sermons, Sunday school use of The Power of Love, camp programs, Y.P.S. programs, etc., we seek to promote this.

Conclusion

The glorious challenge in the work of the Church is that we never reach our peak. Even if every member did his best last year, we can do more because we learned, and as more of God's grace and power is used, more becomes available. But, not every member prays as he ought. Not every member tithes. Not every member did his best in every organization. Not every member responded to God's calls for service. What a gigantic challenge faces us!

We leave it with every Church represented in the reading family of The Mennonite: "How much can God accomplish in and through a congregation completely dedicated to Him and His Kingdom?" Let us all work toward this, which is the only worthy goal.

See Spiritual Growth in Pupils

(If you contribute to foreign missions you may have had a part in bringing about the spiritual growth which Gerald Stucky mentions in the following article. At Cachipay, Colombia, South America, General Conference missionaries are running a school in a large farmhouse. The first year of school was completed around New Year's, and Gerald Stucky wrote the following news on January 1.)

We are almost alone now that we have sent nineteen of our children away for a short "summer vacation." A few are here because they have no family nor relatives with whom they can stay, and one little boy of seven couldn't leave because of a broken leg.

Now that a year of school is completed the time seems to have gone quickly. Already the unpleasant things are fading into the background and we think with joy of the happy times our family had together and of the evidences of growth in the lives of our children. One after another would come with shoes too short or clothes to be handed down. Their faces were rounder and with a good color. The school year closed with a well prepared program and the work books and projects on display would have been a credit to any teacher.

Of course, we are happiest to see the changes that have taken place spiritually. Many have accepted Christ as their Saviour and have grown in grace. Some who knew nothing of the Bible when they came could now probably give as good an explanation of their faith as the average child. One night after several weeks of hard feelings, petty quarrels, and jealousies we called a meeting to get things straightened out. Even in families of two or three children difficulties are bound to arise. But this night the Lord was with us in a special way and opened the hearts of the children and gave them a genuine desire to pardon and to ask for pardon. The atmosphere was cleared remarkably.

Immediately following the close of school we had two weeks of vacation Bible school. As some of you know Christmas here holds very little place in the lives of the people. The merchants have commercialized the day. There are wild parties and firecrackers, but families don't unite nor is there a spirit of goodwill and joy in the birth of our Saviour. For this reason we were particularly anxious that the children be here for Christmas, and their parents were very willing. In the afternoons, preceding Christmas, they made gifts and cards for their families, friends and one another. "Decking the halls with—" greenery and decorating the big Christmas tree was a new and very happy experience for them. We hesitated to introduce too many North American customs, but we tried to incorporate what we could of their own and yet have a merry Christian Christmas. Christmas Eve we had a service, then gave them candy and pop corn and let them stay up until it was time for Santa Claus to come fill the stockings. The next morning they were delighted with their Colgate toothpaste (usually) they use salt and soda), Palmolive soap, balloons, colored pencils, dress goods, shirts, tops, jacks, colored glasses, cologne, and candy. After a full day they were tired but happy youngsters.

With the use of a shortwave amateur station in Bogotá we have had several good talks with friends in the States. The Lord has blessed us richly during this year, and we are looking forward to the coming year with equal anticipation because we now have a year's foundation to build on. We appreciate your prayers and letters more than we can tell you. We hope some of you are thinking of a vacation down in this ideal spot.

Help to German Students

During December and January the relief unit at Kiel, British Zone of Germany, carried on a special project of distributing supplementary rations to university students with active cases of tuberculosis. The packages of meat, fat, raisins, and soya meal were received with much appreciation. The program was interrupted when the school term ended because of lack of coal, but is to be resumed when the school opens again in April.

"Mennonite Refugees—Whose Responsibility?"

This is the name of an eight-page pamphlet describing the background and present conditions of Mennonite refugees in Europe and the steps that have been taken to help them. Much remains to be done for these of our brethren who are homeless, for "if we allow them to remain in their present sorry plight as strangers in a defeated and destroyed country . . . . we have failed . . . . Little do we know the results that God will bring through our efforts to help our needy brethren." Copies of this pamphlet have been mailed to each congregation. Additional copies are available free of charge from the MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania.

1,600 Refugees May Sail February 19

The tentative sailing date of the SS General Heintzleman from Bremerhaven is about February 19. This is the first of two vessels which are to transport approximately 1,600 Mennonite refugees from Europe to South America. It had been thought that this sailing would take place earlier in February, but since the ship required extensive repairing, the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization could not use it as early as planned. No word has been received concerning the sailing date of the second vessel.

NEWS ABOUT DUTCH MENNONITES

[These notes on the Dutch Mennonites were written by Irvin Horst, MCC worker in Holland.]

Reconstruction of Church Buildings

During the first quarter of 1948 the Dutch Mennonite brotherhood will endeavor to raise Fl.500,000 ($185,000) for the purpose of providing help for the congregations which have lost their church buildings during the war. Because of the scarcity of building materials, reconstruction in Holland until 1948 has largely been limited to the repair of damaged buildings. It now appears that the government will permit the Doopsgezinden to rebuild their four churches at the rate of one a year and in the following order—Vlissengen, Wageningen, Rotterdam, Nijmegen.

As a token of mutual aid within the Mennonite world and interest in the welfare of the Dutch brotherhood, the MCC has made a gift of Fl.9,00 ($3,300) to the reconstruction funds. This sum has been taken from funds given as gifts by the Dutch people at the time of our material aid distributions.

Doopsgezinden and Mennonites

The visit of three Dutch Mennonite representatives to United States and Canada during the summer of 1947 has resulted in a good deal of discussion as to the interpretation of the faith and life of the American Mennonites and its significance in the Mennonite world and outside. All three delegates—Craandijk, Hylkema, and van der Zijpp—have reported with some difference of viewpoint. As might be expected much of the difference centers around nonresistance and the peace position. Admiration for our mission work, church schools, and Sunday schools has been expressed, but criticism of our schisms. Varying conclusions have been reached. From the A. D. S. the following has been stated: "In essential matters the differences are not so great. In America there is a greater activity and an impressive willingness to make sacrifices. In spite of all this we must preserve our own individuality. The younger generation in America will likely have to pass through a crisis . . . . Just how far their isolation in regards to the world (smoking, dancing, and drinking are forbidden in a manner similar to participation in military service) will be maintained is difficult to determine. It is certain that a change is taking place. For both them and us contact is much to be desired and will be extremely fruitful."

Doopsgezinden Relief Activities

The historical tradition of relief service which exists among the Dutch Mennonites was revived in March, 1947, when a relief committee was organized. Since its creation this committee has begun a children's home near Utrecht, given financial support for the Russian Mennonites in Holland, and conducted a relief food collection program with 3,000 empty jars received from the MCC. In December it has undertaken the support of a relief project in Vienna. This Austrian work was begun by the Peace Group in July, 1947, as a positive expression of their peace concerns towards former enemies. It consists of the sending of foodstuffs to Vienna where it is distributed by a Dutch Mennonite worker in connection with the MCC program there.

MISSIONARIES MAY HAVE REACHED FIELD BY NOW

According to a report written by Missionary Lester Wuthrich from Shanghai, China, on January 17, he and Mrs. Wuthrich and Aganetha Fast hope to leave by January 24, or so for the new mission field in Kansu Province. The three missionaries hope to go to Sian by airplane. However, on January 17 the Communists announced plans to take Sian. In case the Communists should have taken the town and air base, our missionaries may not have been able to go by plane. However, if the way remained open, then enough time has elapsed by now that the missionaries may be in the new field. To date we have no further news from them.

The missionaries are going by plane because it saves much time and energy, even though it costs a little more. "A few more dollars by you in the next Sunday's offering will make up the difference," writes Rev. H. J. Brown.

Reverend Brown is convinced that there is great work to be done in the new field, for he writes, "The new field presents great opportunities. To utilize these we need our China missionaries back, and we need recruits . . . You can pray, write, and support!"

Jottings

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: Bi-weekly prayer meetings were begun during the month of January. We are studying the Prayer Life of Jesus. The Young People's Group meets the second and fourth Sundays of each month. The remaining Sunday evening services are devoted to worship services or Bible Study led by the pastor.—Mrs. Willard Wiebe, Corr.

—Anyone that walks into Sarepta, the Student Nurses' Dormitory at Bethel Hospital, will detect the aroma of fresh paint. It comes from the North Recreation room, which is getting a new face. With that pretty background, the students feel as though some new furniture for the room would do wonders both for the room and for the morale of all the girls that live there. The Student Nurses have taken this up as a project and they were wondering if any kind-hearted Mennonites would like to help them buy the needed articles, and if so, would they please send their contributions to Miss Marie Ediger, Student Treasurer, Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton, Kansas, as soon as possible. When they have the room all fixed up, you will all be welcome to come and enjoy it.

—Turpin, Oklahoma: During January we were served by the following visiting ministers: Rev. H. B. Schmidt, Newton, Kansas; Rev. Albert Unruh, Meno, Oklahoma, and Rev. Gerbrandt with a group of students from the neighboring church at Meade. On February 1 Rev. and Mrs. John Unruh of Madrid, Nebraska, were with us. They also conducted sevices Monday and Tuesday nights.—Mrs. J. I. Koehn, Corr.

—Einsiedel Church, Hanston, Kansas: Nine members of the Bethel College Student Volunteers presented a mission program here Sunday evening, February 1. On December 28 the Bethel Octet gave a program at a union meeting in the Baptist Church at Hanston. Geo. M. Fleming and Harry Albrecht, ministers of the Baptist and Mennonite Churches respectively, exchanged pulpits during a worship period recently.—Mrs. Agnes E. Schowalter, Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: Delmar Wedel, who has served as relief worker in Europe for twenty-seven months, was home a few weeks. On January 4 he gave an interesting talk on his work, and on January 11 he took us, by means of pictures, on a tour of several countries of Europe in which he had visited and worked. At the regular Brotherhood meeting January 13, Puran Banwar was the special guest. They enjoyed a "Rice and Curry" supper after which Mr. Banwar talked to the congregation. Rev. Harder is again teaching a teacher training class. We are using Unit I Old Testament Law and History by the Evangelical Teacher Training Association as our text book. Beginning January 25 Rev. Harder is bringing a series of Sunday evening messages on the Book of Job.—Arnold E. Bartel, Corr.

—Bethany Church, Kingman, Kansas: Sunday evening, January 4, we very much appreciated the program by the Bethel College Octet. When the pastor was unable to be in church January 25 because of illness, the men's chorus sang a group of songs during the morning service. Missionary and Mrs. Frank Manning, of the Africa Inland Mission, were with us morning and evening, February 1. The Mannings spoke and showed pictures of their work in Africa. Recently our church installed an automatic, regulated fuel oil furnace. It is very efficient in heating the building.—Corr.

—Saron Church, Orienta, Oklahoma: Rev. A. J. Dirks and Rev. J. J. Esau, speakers at the recent O.B.A. Bible Conference, also spoke in our church. A unique event at our Christmas festivities was the presentation of an interesting Bible story book to each of the children in place of the usual treat. The rest of the money was sent for relief. Students home from school were in charge of the morning service on December 26. Our pastor conducted prayer and Bible meetings four evenings before the new year.—Mrs. E. Voth, Corr.

—Bayard Rustin, Negro author of Interracial Primer and director of the Workshop in Intergroup Understanding in Washington, D. C., 1947, addressed Bethel College young people on the evening of Feburary 14, the public at the First Christian Church in Newton on Sunday afternoon, and the public again in the evening at the Bethel College Memorial Hall. Since 1941, Mr. Rustin has served as Field Secretary of the Racial and Industrial Section of the Fellowship of Reconciliation. He has explored the technique of nonviolence for winning freedom and overcoming injustices. Mr. Rustin believes in building bridges of understanding in tension areas.

—Hilda Willms, a Mennonite refugee, is helping the MCC Unit in Vienna, Austria.

—Walter Adrian, MCC relief worker in Vienna, Austria, is engaged in a case work set-up in which considerable attention is given to food and clothing requests which come to the MCC unit. The caloric level in Vienna this winter stands at 1700, which is a starvation diet. A report from one of the workers emphasizes the need to help the old people who are being neglected.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: Dr. Walter H. Hohmann, of Bethel College, conducted a week of meetings in our church early in January. The meetings dealt with church music. They deepened our appreciation for the Mennonite Hymnary. During the last week of January, Rev. Donovan E. Smucker, of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, conducted a series of meetings. A main point stressed by him was that through the MCC we have the opportunity, as various Mennonite branches, of becoming more like-minded. This church has collected 1,500 lbs. of valuable tools for shipment to Paraguay.—Clarence E. Friesen, Corr.

—Stirling Avenue Church, Kitchener, Ontario: The Relief Committee is urging all members to make at least one contribution for relief at least once a month. The church is also collecting tools for Paraguay. It also hopes to do meat canning for relief as soon as possible.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: We have a catechism class of eleven members. They are being instructed by Rev. Waldo Kaufman.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: On January 22 the ladies of the church met at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Dan Toavs and organized a Ladies Mission Circle. Mrs. Herb Dyck is president. The Circle will sew for relief and do handwork which will be sold at a mission sale. The church board is working hard on a new constitution for the church. Last week the members redecorated the interior of the church, and hauled gravel all over the yard.—Mrs. Herb Dyck, Corr.

—Goessel Church, Goessel, Kansas: Rev. J. E. Entz of Newton was in charge of our worship service on January 4. On January 25 Rev. Frank Manning, returned missionary from Africa, delivered the morning message. Sunday evening, January 18, Rev. E. R. Stucky gave us the highlights of his trip to Cuba. Prof. and Mrs. A. R. Ebel of Tabor College presented a message in art at our C. E. program on January 25.—Mrs. Roland Dirksen, Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: In spite of bad weather the Ladies Mission Society of our church met for their annual birthday dinner and program on the evening of February 3. The ladies trio of the church furnished special music and Menno Schrag of Newton showed colored pictures of his recent trip through Europe and the Holy land.—Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Lehigh, Kansas: February 8, being proclaimed as Boy Scout Sunday, the Boy Scouts of Lehigh were guests at the Mennonite church at the Sunday morning services, Rev. Goering gave a special message to the youth. He spoke on, "Remember Thy Creator in Thy Youth."—Mrs. I. H. Balzer, Corr.

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: Our basement is finished now, and we can begin plans for dedication. A joint wedding celebration was held at the C. F. Dick home honoring Mr. and Mrs. Dick and Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Goertzen on their twenty-seventh anniversaries, on January 25. Many friends called to wish them happiness. A house-warming was given Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Schmidt on January 18. A pot luck dinner was enjoyed on January 18.—Mrs. L. Schmidt, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Both the January and February meetings of our Missionary Society were well attended. At the first meeting, Mrs. Olinger, wife of a returned chaplain from Germany, told of her experiences. At the other, our theme was "Prayer and Bible Reading." The high point of interest was the presentation of a friendship comforter top to Mrs. Rosenberger, wife of our pastor. Rev. and Mrs. A. S. Rosenberger will be leaving about April 1 to take up the pastorate at West Swamp Church near Quakertown, Pennsylvania. They have given us nine years of faithful and devoted service.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: On January 31 over a ton of clothing was collected for relief. This was a cooperative enterprise in which the Boy Scouts and College boys collected the clothing; the college girls and women of the church sorted; fifty ladies mended and cleaned, and the Brotherhood packed and sent the clothing. A number of local stores donated new shoes and sweaters, and a total of 1,650 pounds was either in good condition or mended. The remainder of the clothing, which was not satisfactory for relief, was sent to the Goodwill Industries. A series of pre-

A Plea for Military Training

"It is clear to anyone who even stops to think that in case of a coming war the entire nation would have to take up arms, that therefore millions would be driven toward the enemy with bad insufficient or half-finished training. One must nevertheless not forget that the shortage of trained soldiers could easily lead, at the beginning of a war, to losing that war.

"The army educates them only to be reliable, decent members of the community, men who in the hour of need and danger will feel themselves united in loyalty with the nation; and should fate confront them with the sternest ordeal, will defend the freedom of their people with bravery and honor."—Adolf Hitler, in "Mein Kampf."

THE CASE FOR CHRISTIANITY

By C. S. Lewis (Macmillan, 1944)

"When I was an atheist I had to try to persuade myself that the whole human race were pretty good fools until about one hundred years ago; when I became a Christian I was able to take a more liberal view." So writes Oxford's Clive Staples Lewis as he drives home the essential truths of the Christian Faith in the face of modern unbelief and skepticism to which he himself had at one time been a partner.

Writing thus out of a first-hand knowledge of all the questions and objections raised by unbelievers of many stripes to the Christian Faith, Lewis, who is also a writer of the first order, has given the world a truly helpful book. Here is a book that can with assurance be placed into the hands of one who believes that a person cannot be intellectually honest and be Christian at the same time.

To its advantage is the fact that it is a brief book of something over fifty pages. The style is such as to carry the reader along, a characteristic seldom found in a religious book—hence, its real value for young people.

The book is divided into two parts the first of which emphasizes the undeniable cleavage between right and wrong—the basis for the questions which religions try to answer. The second part points out how Christianity alone has a satisfying answer. In this section the author deals in a fresh and vital way with the doctrines of the incarnation, atonement, salvation, repentance, the Church and its mission, the Second Coming, and hell, showing their inter-relationship.

The book is bound to help Christians re-think their faith, so that they will be able to ". . give a reason for the hope that lieth in you."—Jacob J. Enz

World Student Christian Federation Convenes

by Leonard Siemans

Immediately following the North American Student Conference on Christian Frontiers which was held at the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas, from December 27 to January 1, another conference was held to stimulate greater interest and activity in the World Student Christian Federation.

Most Canadian and American Students know little or nothing at all concerning the W.S.C.F. though they themselves may unknowingly be members of the Federation.

In more than forty countries, when students become members of certain local or national Christian organizations in their university or college centers, they enter at the same time the wider fellowship of the World Student Christian Federation. It should therefore be understood that most of the campus Christian organizations, be they denominational or interdenominational, are affiliated with the Federation.

In the constitution of the W.S.C.F., its principle object is defined as that of promoting the following lines of interest: (a) To lead students to accept the Christian Faith in God—Father, Son and Holy Spirit—according to the Scriptures and to live as true disciples of Jesus Christ. (b) To deepen the spiritual life of students and promote earnest study of the Scriptures amongst them. (c) To influence students to devote themselves to the extention of the Kingdom of God in their nation and throughout the world. (d) To bring students of all countries into mutual understanding and sympathy, and to lead them to realize that the principles of Jesus Christ should rule in international relationships and to endeavour by so doing to draw the nations together. (e) To further either directly or indirectly efforts on behalf of the welfare of students, in mind, body and spirit, which are in harmony with Christian purpose.

The conference speakers, most of whom are on the national or international staff on the W.S.C.F., emphasized the crying need throughout the world, as they have seen it, for a fuller reality and extension of the above outlined program. Dr. John Coleman, of the international executive with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, outlined the progress of his Christian work in the German universities during the past two years. In this way the true conditions of our fellow students in the underprivileged sectors of the world were impressed upon us. Before long we felt that it was impossible to exclude them from our concern as fellow students and as Christians.

The next big question then was, "In what ways can we efficiently organize and carry out our program?" Since our aim is to help individual students spiritually and materially, we can simply deduce that we as individual students must help spiritually and materially. The answer to our challenge and duty then lies in the individual student on our campuses.

There are several ways, simple and direct, in which this support can be rendered: (1) To live a fuller and more dedicated life in Christ to become more sensitive to His direction and more responsive to His Will. This being observed, other practical methods of help will follow, such as: (a) Taking an active part in the "Federation Day of Prayer," which is observed in forty countries on the third Sunday of February each year. (b) Sending food parcels or books to foreign student groups, thus making direct contact with Christian students in other countries. Countless other suggestions for practical participation in W.S.C.F. activities are available.

Some help in Christian living for W.S.C.F. members can be found in the message given by Dr. John Oliver Nelson, chairman of the Federal Council of Churches. He spoke on the "Three Major Disciplines for Christians." These he listed as: (1) Anonimity — to remain anonymous in all our Christian service. (2) Frugality — to direct into the most serviceable channel, our spiritual and physical resources, our whole life. (3) Dedication — to surrender the whole self to a Christian cause and then work in that direction.

Dr. Nelson said a change must be wrought within us. He continued by saying, "Blessed are the tamed, not the tame, for they shall inherit the earth." The truly healthy child in a society is one that is accepted, but feels unacceptable. This is the Christian experience of justification. We must "tame" our old self in us to feel more "acceptable." One way in which we can do this is to become active year-round members of the W.S.C.F., continued Dr. Nelson.

As a Mennonite student at this international conference of Christians, I felt that, in the past, we as a people have held ourselves too much apart from the rest of society. We seem to have lived in little worlds of our own. Perhaps, this has been necessary, to a degree, to hold our cherished domestic traditions and religious convictions. But the world is becoming smaller every day in terms of hours of distance. With this smaller world people live closer together, and as a result must learn to understand and appreciate, though not necessarily accept, philosophies and doctrines differing from their own, in order to preserve peace, both within a nation and among nations. As Mennonite students we have much to offer the world about us and much to gain from it. Let us broaden our horizons, abolish national boundaries, and enter into a world wide fellowship of Christian students by prayer, worship and service.—Leonard Siemens, University of Manitoba.

Preaching Christ through Agriculture

by Carl Epp

Among man's basic needs are two: food for his soul and food for his body. For him to have peace of mind and spirit, his soul must nourish on something he can trust and depend upon for comfort, strength and inspiration. His body, too, continues to burn up its energy which must be replenished in order to maintain strength and to stave off the pangs of physical hunger.

When one gives of the first only, one does not relieve the need for the second, but by providing the latter in the right spirit one may also be giving something of the former.

God's first assignment to man was to till the soil, and the world's basic occupation still is agriculture. Everyone is interested in it indirectly if not in a direct way. Much of the nature of God is revealed and expressed in growing plants and seeds. Christ illustrated many characteristics and workings of spiritual things by drawing examples from living, growing things common to the life of a farmer.

The care and management of animals, too, can instill into a person a sense of responsibility and self respect. Frank Sain, for thirteen years warden of Illinois' Cook County Jail, finds that allowing prisoners to care for animals and raise gardens in the prison yards gives a new meaning to their lives; their minds and hands are creating something alive, and it makes them feel they can be of some service.

Even in the small way in which we have been trying to help the farmers in the LaPlata Valley, this help has been received with great appreciation. When the bringing of the gospel is done in conjunction with attempts to help a people materially to raise their standard of living or increase and improve food production from land and animals, then the message of this gospel becomes much more meaningful and is much more readily accepted. One can say to a peasant who must go back to eke a livelihood out of a steep hillside and must face a tired wife and undernourished children, "Accept our way of life, and you shall have peace and joy." But how much more eager he will be to know more about a way of life that also takes an unselfish interest in his hillside and his poor cattle and helps him to improve his lot as a producer and provider for his family!

The struggle for life and the improvement of living conditions is a desperate and earnest one among the country folk of the hills on the island of Puerto Rico. Typical of how tenaciously a chance for improvement is grasped, is the example of Marcos Robert, a "granjero," or farmer of a five-acre plot in LaPlata. When one of the cows shipped to the island in 1945 by the Brethren Service Committee was allotted to him, he lavished so much care and attention on the animal, that his neighbors jokingly accused him of paying more attention to it than he did to his wife! He was determined to have the best cow and feed his family more milk than any one else in the valley. No doubt this act of service by the B.S.C. and the M.C.C. had its effect on Marcos in influencing his interest and attitude toward the philosophy of life our workers are trying to convey through their life and their work in LaPlata.

Yes, the search for ways to solve the problem of food for the body is continual. An unselfish and helpful interest shown towards our fellow men in this often critical problem of theirs is but one means of expressing a life that Christ taught and evemplified

by John Thiessen

"An annual special joy and refreshing," so said several of our young people in India at the end of our 1947 retreat. "This was the best," others commented.

For a number of years our young people, mostly high school students, have had an annual camp in the forest, several miles away from Jagdeespur mission station. The purpose of the retreat is to come closer to God in His open creation. Huts are built of branches, something like the Jews of old must have built for their annual feast of tabernacles. Each group of ten to fifteen young people build one hut and put rice straw on the ground to sleep on. The scent of these huts, when the leaves of the branches start to dry, is the most inviting and calming harvest-smell one can imagine. The whole camping place is in the jungle under fine big spreading trees and short grazed-off grass underneath. It is near a large water reservoir. Not more than a few hundred yards away is dense bush. The sky is clear as crystal, because it is right after the rainy season and there is no dust in the skies. The sun shines clear and warm, yet not too hot, because it's the Indian cold season.

Carl Epp is at present farming at Henderson, Nebraska. He is a graduate of the Agriculture College of the University of Nebraska and was a member of the C.P.S. unit in Puerto Rico about which he writes.

John Thiessen is a missionary to India and has served the Indian field for many years. He at present heads the high school there.

Nights are charming indeed. Cool enough for moderately heavy wraps. The camp fire in the evening is reassuring and warm. The stars twinkle by the thousands.

The daily program is a combination of meditation, challenging messages, nature study, rest, and duties. Food must be cooked in the open, firewood must be gathered from the dense forest, and the camp as a whole must be kept clean. In the evenings around the camp fire there is fun. Stories which invite laughter are told. Stunts are pulled off, and riddles which cause mental gymnastics are told. Then before the close of the campfire a heartsearching message, based on the word of God, is given. Then comes sound and healthful and healthgiving sleep.

A special speaker from our neighboring church area was called for the Bible messages. His name is Rev. M. D. Wany, a fine young pastor. He spoke on "Youth and Opportunity," "Youth and New India," "Youth and the Church of Christ." The last evening around a bright camp fire, he led the group in a fine consecration service using the apostle Paul's words: "I am ready." A large wooden cross was lit up by wax candles which fourteen young people put in place on the cross, one candle by each person, quoting a suitable Bible verse when placing the candle. When all the fourteen candles were placed, the camp fire had gone down to mere glowing embers, and there stood the fiery cross in the dark night, as though wooing every heart to Christ who gave Himself for all on the cross. Indeed, the cross of Christ shines forth in dark India today. This shining, lit-up cross, in the jungle, was a marvelous symbol of the cross of Christ shining forth, showing "the way" to bewildered India and the world today.

The four days retreat came to a close all too soon. It was again "an experience of a lifetime" as Miss Ada Stoltzfus, our MCC worker, remarked. All her lifetime she had yearned for such a camp—and such experience with God in virgin nature; and she had to come all the way to India to have it. Yes, such experiences and such camp life are of the high points in missionary life, and also in the lives of our Christian Indian youth. May God grant more such refreshings to the on-coming Christian generation in India, and to His faithful workers.

Hold Large Youth Rally

Goessel, Kansas: A Young People's Fellowship Rally of the Western District Conference was held at the Alexanderwohl Church on Sunday, February 8 at 5:30 P.M. Rev. Peter Goering, Lehigh, served as chairman at a program which followed the luncheon. After the song service followed devotions and welcome by Rev. P. A. Wedel. The theme of the rally was "For Me To Live Is Christ." The topic, "Incentives or Motives for Christian Service," was given by Mrs. Roland Dirksen of the Goessel Church. "Winning Our Young People to Christian Service" was discussed by Rev. H. B. Schmidt of the Tabor Church. "Improving the Western District Y.P.F. Through the Cooperation of Local Groups" by Rev. Ronald von Riesen, President W.D.Y.P.F Some of the practical ways in which youth may serve, as brought out in these topics, were: 1. Sing for the sick in the hospitals and in the Homes for the Aged. 2. Serve in the Sunday School and C. E. 3. Have exchange programs with other Christian Endeavors. 4. Have some socials, begin with a program followed by an hour of fellowship. 5. Art and crafts for young people give them a chance to work together and to learn to make practical things according to their talents. 6. The great opportunities for service offered our young people through the Voluntary Service Units by the MCC and the General Conference were also stressed.

During the discussion period we heard from some

I am the product of relationship. I am happy or unhappy because of relationship. I am looking forward to relationship. After I have spoken all on happiness, on need, on love, I must live now for true and sublime relationship.

This is little me. But greater than my small entity is that relationship of forces which make the world, which make the universe. It is "the stuff" of relationship which binds the world together, which conditions the harmony of the universe. The harmony of the universe are dependent on relationship.

As man plumbs the depths of mysterious beginnings, as he seeks the reason of harmony, the purpose of relationship . . . he discovers the creative spirit of the universe . . . the creator of relationship. He discovers God.

Man has watched the relationship of his kind to his kind, and he has seen what man has done to man. This history of the world has been the history of that relationship—of one man with other men, of one man against other men, of societies, races, classes, and nations. The happiness or the tragedy of man, his going forward, his going backward, has been the product of his relationship.—Motive

Summer Service

The Youth Team - What It Meant

My purpose in going was to be of service to the church, to witness for Christ, and to share experiences with other Christian young people. I feel my purpose was fulfilled.

The Youth Team offered discipline, inspiration, challenge, and many opportunities for a positive witness.

of the young people who had been out doing Voluntary Service last summer in mental hospitals, teaching Bible Schools, etc. They all seemed to feel that they had gained much through this service and had enjoyed rendering such service. Special music was given by the Bethel College Girl's Trio and by the Ladies' Chorus from the Tabor Church. Rev. C. B. Friesen, Walton, served as chairman of the evening program. Special music was rendered by the Bethel College Girl's Trio; Men's Quartet, West Zion, Moundridge, and the Men's Chorus, Alexanderwohl Church. A picture portraying the "Life of John the Baptist" was shown. The consecration service was led by Rev. Walter H. Dyck.

In spite of the very cold weather the church was filled to capacity. The largest attendance from the greatest distance was from Beatrice, Nebraska. Rev. Elbert Koontz and the group of young people had chartered a bus to take them to this rally.—Katie Wedel, Corr.

Young People's Union Council Meets

The Young People's Union Council of the General Conference, was to hold its annual meeting on the Mennonite Seminary campus February 14 to 16. Expected were two delegates from the Canadian District, one from the Pacific District, five from the Western District, three from the Northern District, one from the Central District, three from the Middle District, and one from the Eastern District. The Executive Committee is composed of: Kenneth Bauman of Bluffton College; Verney Unruh, Biblical Seminary, New York; Myrtle Wasser of Bluffton College; and Esko Loewen of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Ronald von Riesen of Newton, Kansas, was to meet with the group as a representative of the Board of Education. The Voluntary Service Committee, composed of Elmer Ediger, of the MCC, Akron; and Erna Friesen of Henderson, Nebraska, was also to meet with the Council. Arrangements for the Council meeting on the Seminary campus were to be made by Esko Loewen, Seminary student who is editor of the "Youth Section" in The Mennonite.—From a Seminary news release.

Five Workers Arrive at Skillman

Among these are: Helena Banman, Newton, Kansas; Lina Steiner, Apple Creek, Ohio; Lydia Steiner, Apple Creek, Ohio; Zelda Hiebert, Hillsboro, Kansas; and Mabel Greiser, Apple Creek, Ohio. Another term of ten weeks is scheduled to begin about May.

Tobias S. Moyer, 612 South Fifth St., Allentown, Pa., January 24, 1948.—"Thank you for sending out a renewal notice for the Mennonite. I'm so glad to see that at last you are using a business-like procedure for the benefit of forgetful people like myself who need a reminder. I think it's good Christian business to send out orderly renewal notices."

These have brought great blessings. May God reward all of you who still can do this difficult but fine work for the Lord and Master."

Inspired Words

You will think that some of the music in our great hymns was truly inspired when you read how they came to be. For instance, the music for the song, "O love that wilt not let me go," has an interesting incident connected with it.

The composer tells how he wrote the music for that song: "I wrote the music straight off and I may say that the ink of the first note was hardly dry when I finished the tune."

The Challenge of Stewardship

by Don. E. Smucker

I CAME to my study to write this article after reading my son Timmy the story of Joseph—in this case nicely illustrated with pictures. Few stories can surpass it for vigorous presentation of the basic elements in the spiritual life. Here is intrigue and hate; here at the very center is the economic problem of famine; here is the farseeing steward who stored up abundance to be shared with the less fortunate at home and abroad; here is family loyalty and love; here, above all, is the Living God. It would be impossible to live unless good stewards were always available to assist in the Lord's work.

A steward is one who uses to God's glory and man's benefit all resources God places at his disposal. Stewardship constitutes the use of time, talent and money in a way that pleases God. These are simple working definitions.

Extensive studies of the Biblical materials are needed, but I think its position can be summarized something as follows: (1) We receive from God and man in proportion as we give. Proverbs 11:26 gives a simple affirmation of this: "He that withholdeth the corn, the people shall curse him: but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it." Note that the return to the good steward is not necessarily material or financial. It is the blessing, the joy, the inner peace which comes with real generosity of time, talent, money and self. (2) The basis for our giving is God's boundless giving of grace to us. Paul in Romans 8:32 declares that "He that spared not his own Son . . . how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." At the very heart of the Gospel, therefore is the supreme gift of all time and eternity, namely, the love of God n Jesus Christ. Recently I met a widow on the train who said that her whole life was changed by this year's Christmas sermon where the pastor showed that everything, yes, everything comes to us as a gift.

(3) The positive program of stewardship for money s the tithe as a minimum program (Gen. 28: 22) plus xtra-tithe giving as the Lord leads and as economic tatus permits. The latter may sometimes go as far as elling all we have and giving to the poor. The late A. A. Hyde of Wichita gave thousands of dollars far beyond the tithe; the Rockefellers have given millions beyond the tithe; the Musselman family has given Bluffton College many generous gifts beyond the tithe. But the tithe assures the steward of a minimum, systematic, regular program of giving.

Finally the Bible has a negative application of teaching. Christ's parables warn against the corruption of money; Paul even says that the love of money is the root of all evil; Luke's version of the Sermon on the Mount pronounces woes on selfish privilege unsympathetic to the needy. Therefore, the answer to the oft-repeated theme of the abuse of wealth is stewardship.

II

Last November the National Stewardship Conference met at Washington, D. C. President Truman sent a message which pointed out that church contributions have been on an increase but have not kept pace with the increase in national income. Consider it as follows:

1920—Seventy billion dollars national income
1932—Forty billion in typical depression year
1946—One hundred seventy-eight billion—four times the depression year.

Now note: Church giving in the depression was 5.3 per cent of the total. Today it is only 1.6 per cent. Let us illustrate it like this. In 1932 a man with $2,000 income gave $100 to church causes. Today with $5,000 income he is giving $150. The amount has increased numerically but lessened proportionately.

Will God bless us with this relationship to our material goods?

III

The Mennonite church offers more opportunities for witness than anytime in its 400 year history. Young people need not leave the church any more for a vital life of witness and work. Our parish is the entire world. To meet the challenge I am sure we need the following:

First, a concrete stewardship program which completely destroys mere lackadaisical whim in this situation. This stewardship program must start with tithing as a minimum, with proportionate giving as an ideal as the Lord leads. It will operate with equal vitality in relation to time, talent and life vocation.

Second, to sustain an aggressive church program under Biblical standards also calls for a prosperous people. Let us pray that we may be spared economic catastrophe and depression. Let us use our best Christian leadership in the economic area to be the least vulnerable to any economic crisis which may come. This will lead us to mutual aid practices; this will lead away from dangerous speculation of various kinds; this will lead to sharing in many ways. This, above all, will lead to a fearless examination of how we make our Beyond Redemption?

REDEMPTION is a possiblity in which the Christian has faith and hope. He believes that human nature can be changed. Unfortunately, too many Christians hold to this on an individual basis, but not on a national basis. Thus, it is not altogether unusual to read that Senator Joseph H. Ball of Minnesota says, "The disgraceful record of appeasement of dictators by weak democracies in the 1930's, plus Russian Communism's recent ruthless aggressions, should convince all of us that dictators are immune to appeals to reason or justice. They respect only force and strength. We must be strong if we hope to have our voice in world councils respected." Perhaps, if Senator Ball is a member of a Christian church back in Minnesota, he, in the roll of a Christian church member, would very likely maintain that a drunkard or a burglar might possibly be converted through the preaching of the gospel. Very likely Senator Ball would at least give some credit to the effectiveness of Christian love. However, when it comes to the international scene, Mr. Ball speaks of force and strength. Perhaps, the Russians wouldn't feel exactly complimented to be told that they were immune to appeal to reason or justice. Certainly, if at one time citizens of the United States had been told by the natives of Africa, whose fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters were taken for slavery in the United States, that the people of the United States were immune to appeals to reason or justice, the suggestion would not have been appreciated to any extent. If it is answered that a Civil War was necessary to wipe out slavery, it may be replied that there are some who hold that slavery would have died out without a war being fought and that the violent condemnation by the North was one of the factors which created violent reaction in the South which eventually made a Civil War possible. Futhermore, resort to force and strength did not change the hearts of the southerners to the extent that the Negro was accepted on the terms which were envisioned by those who made of the war a holy crusade. Furthermore, there is a big question mark as to whether Russia has to be put in such a selfish and ruthless light when compared with some of our own policies which make us seem aggressive in the matter of near east oil and the establishment of military air bases sufficiently close to Russia to put it under the danger of attack. Certainly there must be the possibility of cooperating with Russia in certain areas of international relations. Certainly Russia will respect us for an understanding of her problems and a good will towards the solution of those problems. Christianity is as true a solution for international problems as it is for the problems of an individual.

Two Copper Coins

Every age has reflected the conflict between God and Mammon. It has always been true that the way a man uses his money is an indication of his spiritual condition. The heart of the individual cannot be separated from his treasure. Where one is the other will be also. No one is really converted until his conversion has also touched his pocketbook. Getting, spending, saving, and giving always indicate where we live.

This matter of putting God first is the truth emphasized in the parable of the widow casting her two mites into the temple treasury. Jesus spoke of her as having given her living. She gave everything to God. The spiritual interests were put first as they should be. Jesus said of her that she had cast in more than all the rest.

Mere giving should never be confused with stewardship. Ordinarily the word steward, or stewardship, is defined as the act of administering wealth, one who is the custodian of possessions. Stewardship does not involve only giving but the whole commitment of life When we make a contribution we may merely give what we have as a matter of surplus. Here the size o the gift is important. But in stewardship it is not the size of the gift but it is the spirit which indicates tha we have made a total commitment to Jesus Chris and his cause. It is for this reason that stewardship and true Christianity are so closely linked with one another. Money is now given not grudgingly or of necessity, but because it involves a relationship between God and man. Always economic advantage is used fo Christian ends, and in the Christian spirit. Perhaps w would express this truth more adequately if we would say that stewardship is the result of our Christian experience. Once having made the commitment of ou life to Christ and the cause of his kingdom there i nothing that can keep us from giving self and all tha we have, even casting in all our living. The old hym expressed this idea in this way, "Jesus paid it all, A to Him I owe."

This means that when we talk of stewardship w are not talking of money and material gifts first. I means that we are going to talk of God and Chris Jesus first. Jesus always indicated that property an money had value only as they were related to the purpose of God. Thirteen of the thirty-two parables whic Jesus spoke, dealing with stewardship make this emphasis. The first question then becomes, what is th purpose of God? If property, money and material blessings are to serve the purpose of God it is obvious that these can never come first in life.

The widow in Jesus' parable did not figure how much she could give. Her giving came as the result of the abundance of her religious experience. She gave so much because in her soul she felt a boundless love and grace had been bestowed upon her. Stewardship is always the highest experience of God, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have, give I thee." Peter did this. Dr. Grenfell of Labrador did this. Albert Sweitzer going to dark Africa did this. He gave so much and gives so much of himself because of the abundance of his religious experience.

Are we then to give away all our money and goods? Obviously not everyone can give everything outright. That would be the end of our society as we know it. We can however support the basic spiritual projects in proportion to the abundance of our Christian experience. Although stewardship comes out of a Christian experience it must be exercised with intelligence and method. The spiritual life reaches its fullest expression through an intelligent use of the opportunities that lie at hand. No stewardship can be slipshod and thoughtless. Unplanned giving is always hard. A little then will look like much. The statement that scripture gives us that it is "required in a steward that he be faithful" may well also mean that giving should be methodical and intelligent.

Two copper coins were given by the widow. What an eloquent story they tell. It is the story of her God experience. What is the story which our giving tells? Is it a story of spiritual bankruptcy or spiritual abundance?

The Churches Must Speak

"The Churches Must Speak to the Nations!" This is the title of a recent statement by Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, Director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs. Dr. Nolde begins his statement with the words, "When the World Council of Churches meets at Amsterdam next August it will find itself under strong pressure to speak unequivocally on problems which are disturbing the world at the International level." Our hearty thanks to the World Council of Churches for such a prospect. If at long last the Christians of all the nations of the world could unite to speak in the voice of Christ on the problems which are disturbing the world on the internatonal level, then at least one might hope that the Christians of all nations would pull together as far as national and international problems are concerned, instead of against each other, as has happened so often under the nationalistic policies of the past. It would seem that if any group of people could speak unitedly upon world problems that Christians ought to constitute that group. Dr. Nolde says, "There seems every reason to believe that Amsterdam will reflect more clearly than ever before what Christian unity, surmounting nation and race, can mean for better international relationships. It is to be hoped that unbridled national sovereignty and exploitation for selfish national interests will come in for merited criticism." Already arrangements have been made that issues which are to appear on the agenda of the Third Session of the United Nations General Assembly shall receive consideration. However, the Commission on International Affairs is not waiting until next August to act. The Commission is already " . . . . sending information about selected issues before the United Nations to a limited number of church leaders in over forty countries, and is submitting the reactions of these leaders to the proper organs of the United Nations." Christians are bound to take one attitude or another toward the problems of the world. The point is will they take the attitude of their own nation, or will they take the attitude of Christ. Which will they make sovereign? Let the churches shed their light on the problems which rack the world.

P. S. One wonders what a Mennonite would propose if he were on the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs.

Chandu and Potaitin, Simple but Sincere Christians

by P. A. Penner

A FEW days ago, we received from Rev. P. W. Penner an air mail letter in which he wrote the following: "Chandu has gone to be with the Lord. As long as speaking was possible he said, 'I am ready to go. Would that the Lord might take me!' "

Who was Chandu? Looking up my diary of 1910 I find this entry on January 9: "This has been an important and blessed day. The prayers of many people found an answer to-day in the baptism of Chandu, our oxendriver, and his wife, Potaitin. They belong to the panika (weaver) caste. I used as my text for the sermon John 4:13,14. How happy we are that these two have finally stepped out of heathendom and given themselves to Christ! May God baptize them with His Holy Spirit so that in the midst of persecution they may remain firm." (They have had their share of persecution from relatives and friends but have remained firm all these years.)

I well remember that ninth day of January many years ago. Miss Anna C. Funk, who went down with the Titanic, and Miss Anna Braun, who died recently in California, were present at the baptismal service. These two, Chandu and his wife, Potaitin, were the first non-Christians besides orphans and a few lepers that I had the great joy of baptizing after my arrival in India.

Brother P. W. Penner writes further: "Chandu's remains were taken into the church out of respect of his old age. (It is not customary to take a corpse into the church, but from the house directly to the cemetery) The attendance was large. I was asked to preach, using John 14:1-3."

Chandu was a simple but consistent Christian. He was punctual at all church services. He was in mission employ all his life, even before he became a Christian. He especially was of great help to Mrs. Penner when she was in charge of the medical work before we had a doctor. He had no medical training, but he was ready to do any work which he was asked to do.

Some time before Chandu and Potaitin were baptized, God blessed them with a number of children. All are Christians.

Potaitin is not a pretty woman. She has a disfigured nose. Here is the story as learned from her. She was married in childhood according to the custom of the Hindus. At the age of about twelve her non-Christian husband suspected her of infidelity. According to Hindu custom, punishment for this sin is disfigurement of the face. Her brutal husband, without waiting for verification of his suspicions, cut off the larger part of her nose with a sickle. Fortunately, this happened in Bilaspur a city thirty miles from Champa where the Civil Surgeon, an English doctor, grafted skin from her forehead on the wound where the nose had been cut off. He made a good job of it, so that she has the semblance of a nose, but it is not perfect; neither can she breathe through it. Her brutal husband received a severe jail sentence. After two years in jail, he died of cholera. Potaitin, now a widow, had to earn her own bread.

After her return to Champa from the hospital she did odd jobs in the village. That is the way I found her upon my arrival in India in 1901. I employed her to cut brushwood on our parcel of ground which is now our mission compound in Champa. She was faithful in this work, and her daily wage was six cents without board. Because of her faithfulness even as a non-Christian, she was promoted from one occupation to another. She became a matron of children. Mariam, now Mrs. Dr. Schmidt of Newton, has been in her care for shorter and longer periods of time.

When we stayed on the hills for a period of rest, Potaitin was put in full charge of our house and property. Much could be written about them as also about the relatives of both Chandu and Potaitin. That would be quite a pamphlet, but I will confine myself to relating just one incident about Chandu's mother.

For some years father and mother were able to support themselves, but when both became so weak that they were unable to do this, the mother became an inmate of the Widows' Home, the father having died meanwhile. She was illiterate. The father had likewise been illiterate. I frequently visited the mother. One morning as I passed by her room she called me. Coming near her bed, the following conversation took place:

"Sahib," said she, "recently, you preached about the resurrection of the dead. Among other points, you said, 'The dead in Christ shall rise first.' "

"Yes," I said, "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

"Then," said she, "I have this request to make of you, when I am dead, don't bury me too deep so that I can hear the trump of God and the voice of the archangel because I belong to the first. I am a Christian."

I can almost see my reader smile at this old saint's naive request. I did too at the time of our conversation. Perhaps it is not so "naive" from one who had only recently accepted Christ. Aren't there perhaps some among so-called Christians who are not sure that they belong to the "First"?

They can have this assurance by appropiating the following: "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life." John 3:36, and "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Rom. 8:1.

Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church Burns

Fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed the 50-year-old Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church near Inman, Kansas, Saturday morning, February 14. The loss is only partially covered by insurance. A fire alarm, broadcast over the local telephone system, brought many people of the community promptly on the scene, and they were able to save the pulpit, pulpit Bible, pews, two pianos, an organ, the Mennonite Hymnaries, and some other equipment. The congregation, numbering nearly 400 members, decided at a recent meeting to rebuild and members promptly subscribed over $30,000 in cash towards a new church. In the meantime the worship services will be held in a nearby school house. Rev. Albert Gaeddert is the pastor of the church. Rev. A. J. Dyck, recently retired, was for many years its elder.

Testimonials by Readers

Mrs. Mildred Baumgarner, Richland, Kansas, February 3, 1948.—"Indeed, I do not wish to discontinue THE MENNONITE. It certainly is an inspiration to read and I am still a Mennonite at heart even if not in name anymore. Keep up the fine work, and the Mennonite Life is certainly an asset to the church, too."

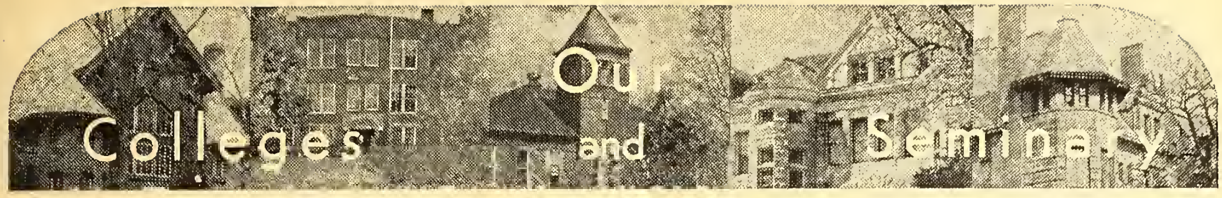
living: whether it is in accord with New Testament standards.

Third, it will include an active program against luxury and waste. There are differing conceptions of minimum standards for fruitful living. But I see no reason to waste money on tobacco, liquor, over-size wardrobes and other forms of "conspicuous consumption." The simple life is a basic part of the Christian life. A voice from Europe recently said, "the world cannot remain half gorged and half starved!"

Finally, the full-time workers employed by the church should have an adequate living wage inside a mutual aid brotherhood. This is a delicate matter, but it must be faced. These salaries can never equal those in larger denominations. But real needs must be met by real wages.

"Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than receive." Acts 20:35



BETHEL COLLEGE

Through the generosity of Julius and Olga L. Stucky, Moundridge, Kansas, an annual cash award of fifty dollars has been provided to Bethel College students offering the most significant contribution to Mennonitism. The entry may take various forms, the purpose of the award being "to stimulate the collection of significant Mennonite historical material, constructive study, original research and to develop practical ideas for Mennonite contributions to human welfare." Baynard Rustin, outstanding young negro singer, speaker, and leader in interracial work, visited the campus from February 14 to 16. His series of talks dealing with many phases of inter-group understanding were unusually well received. Twenty members of the Bethel Future Teachers Association were among the guests on February 4 of the Newton chapter of the national honorary organization for women teachers. Evelyne Sawatsky, F.T.A president, spoke in behalf of the Bethel group. On February 8 the faculty women who are members of the local branch of the American Association of University Women were hostesses to the organization in the Student Union Room. Miss Lena Waltner was the speaker of the evening in connection with an exhibit from the Texas Art Guild. The A.A.U.W. voted to buy one of the etchings for Bethel College, to be hung eventually in the new girls' dormitory.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

On Monday Rev. Duerksen of Avon brought Missionary Winstanley from South America to conduct the chapel services. On Wednesday Rev. Orlando Goering was the speaker. Rev. Jacob Schmidt, pastor of a church in Vermillion, was a campus visitor last week. Rev. Schmidt originally came from Avon. Announcement has been made that Miss Adeline Quiring of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, has been secured to head the Commercial department. Miss Quiring is a graduate of Bethel College and has taught commercial subjects the past two years at Lamberton, Minnesota. She will begin her work at Freeman next September. To complete the improvements in the Foods Room an asphalt tile floor covering is being added. When this work is completed the school will have one of the finest modern Foods Rooms in the state.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

On February 14, Rev. Andrew Shelly started his second intensive period of field work for the Mennonite Biblical Seminary. He will be doing this work until March 2.

The Central Conference ministers have concluded their retreat held on the seminary campus. The chairman of this retreat was Rev. H. E. Nunnemaker of the Silver Street Church in Goshen. Bible study of II Timothy was guided by Ben Esch of Washington, Illinois, Maynard Shelly of Hopedale, George Gundy of Meadows, Illinois, and Don. Smucker of the Seminary.

The session on my most heart-warming experience in the ministry was led by Rev. Frank Mitchell, Director of the Home for the Aged at Meadows, Illinois. A discussion of military training and non-resistance was led by Rev. Robert Hartzler of the Eighth Street Church in Goshen, Indiana. The nurture and enlistment of young people was analyzed by Rev. R. L. Hartzler of Bloomington, Illinois, Executive Secretary of the Conference, and Jerrold Rocke of Meadows, Illinois. There were three missionaries from the Congo Inland Mission present at the sessions, Dr. Merle Schwartz, Archie Graber and Russell Schnell. The prayer service on behalf of various needs and individuals in the Congo field was led by Russell Schnell. Special addresses were given by S. F. Pannabecker, Acting President of the Seminary, on the book of Hosea, and J. E. Hartzler on the challenge to the Mennonite church today. Dr. Hartzler also addressed the chapel of Bethany Biblical Seminary. The address to the Seminary was entitled "A World Without Headlights" while the message to the ministers was called "The Message of Our Church for This Generation." In the latter address he declared that Christianity is invasion and not evasion, Christianity is a program of aggression rather than a program of defense, Christianity is a head-on collision with the world in the power of the cross.

Don. E. Smucker addressed the student body this week on the subject "The Riddle of Russia." In this address he said that the key to the whole understanding of the Russian mind is its apocalyptic nature whereby the Russians throughout their history have not believed in gradual growth. On the other hand, the Russian mind has always expected the great events of life to come through catastrophe and crisis and misery. He cited examples from Russian literature and history to confirm this point. Following the address there was a special period of intercessory prayer for the conversion of Joseph Stalin and other Soviet leaders. The prayer also included penitence for the militarism and materialism of our own nation.

Mrs. P. K. Regier of Reedley, California, has informed us that Miss Liu Kuei-ying has arrived in San Francisco. We are now awaiting her arrival here in Chicago.

M.C.C. News Notes

Accept Applications for Service in Mental Hospitals

Applications are now being accepted for employee service at this first MCC mental hospital, located near Hagerstown, Maryland. Service may be on a regular employment or volunteer basis. The hospital should be ready for operation this summer.

There will be need for various types of workers—married and single: psychiatric aids (attendants and nurses), kitchen and laundry personnel, and a qualified farm manager. Experience with mentally ill is preferred, although not required. Short periods of internship with pay in other first class hospitals will be arranged for various workers. For more information write immediately to Mental Health Service, MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania. It will be helpful to know of your interest in this field of service even though you may not be available within the next year. Announcements regarding patient applications will be made latter.

U. S. Immigration Developments

The Senate Sub-committee on Immigration has reported to the Judiciary Committee regarding its recommendation on legislation to admit displaced persons to the United States. The full Judiciary Committee will report to the Senate about March 1 and it is expected that debate on the bill may begin soon thereafter. The terms of the Sub-committee report have not been made public, but it is believed that its recommendations are not as broad as those embodied in the Stratton or Ferguson bills, which are the best known D. P. bills before Congress. The D. P. legislation which is passed will determine whether a sizable number of Mennonite refugees can enter the United States. The present immigration quota is very restricted, particularly on persons of Russian birth, which includes Russian Mennonite refugees.

Tools and Equipment for Paraguay

The response to the need of tools for the Mennonite colonists in Paraguay has been quite good so far. The MCC collection centers in the various communities report receiving a considerable variety of tools and household articles. In view of plans to bring additional Mennonite refugees to Paraguay, the need for such tools is correspondingly greater. Any items listed on the folder (these have been distributed to each congregation) which our people may be able to contribute will be very useful to the colonists in Paraguay.

A few persons who have no tools to contribute have inquired whether they should buy new tools to give. We would suggest that in such cases the money be contributed instead. After a summary is made to determine the number of items contributed, it will be possible to purchase more carefully the articles most urgently needed. It is felt also that such purchases can be made more economically in large quantity.

An order has been placed with the International Harvester Company for two ¾ ton trucks and two tractors with attachments, to be used in the development of the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay. Other ways to help the colonies industrially are also being investigated.

Community Center Project in Heilbronn

Work is under way to construct a church for the Mennonite community in Heilbronn, in the American Zone of Germany. Joe Schrock and Melvin Lehrman are supervising the construction, with local workers assisting. Special contributions from a number of interested individuals have made this building possible. This church is to serve also as a community center, from which will be carried on various types of rehabilitation activity as a supplement and continuation of direct relief assistance. Frank and Marie Wiens are to direct this work.

Irvin Horst and P. S. Goertz Attend Peace Conference

In January Irvin Horst and P. S. Goertz attended the conference of the Dutch Mennonite Peace Group at Fredesheim. Also at the conference were Mennonite conscientious objectors from a nearby camp. This afforded a splendid opportunity to speak with the men and learn their problems. The Mennonite men are in the minority in the camp, and seem to have in general the problems which existed in U. S. A. Government C.P.S. camps. There are about 150 Mennonite C. O.'s in Holland to date. This conference was designed to help many young men to understand and better present the Biblical basis for their peace position.

Mrs. Rodolphe Petter Very Active

"En route to Billings last Friday from Lame Deer was Mrs. Rodolphe Petter, Mrs. Petter has lived among the Cheyenne Indians for half a century carrying on her work as a missionary of the Mennonite church. Although she recently passed her 75th milestone in life, she embodies a spirit of vigor and enthusiasm in her work that would be still outstanding in a person half her age."—From a Montana paper

Senators Introduce Bill Which Would Make U. S. Surplus Materials Available to Relief Agencies Free of Cost

Washington, D. C., February 6.—A measure, to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act, to permit American Citizens and charitable, religious and other non-profit organizations to make donations for use in the repair of war damage in any area of Germany occupied by or under control of the United States, was introduced this week in the United States Senate by Senators William Langer (Rep. North Dakota) and James O. Eastland (Dem. Mississippi).

The Act provides for making gifts of money, materials, technical or other services to any individuals, non-profit organization, or governmental authority in Germany for purposes of assisting in repairing or rebuilding housing or community facilities destroyed by military action during World War II.

Military and civilian authorities of the United States within the area of occupation are authorized and directed to permit the transfer of funds to Germany and to furnish all facilities in order to aid in effectuating this plan.

Any governmental agency having Government-owned surplus materials suitable for repairing or rebuilding housing and community facilties in Germany is authorized under this Act to transfer such property to any such organization or authority for such use without cost.

The measure was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee for hearing. Citizens are urged to write or wire the authors of this bill, Senator William Langer and Senator James O. Eastland in care of Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C., as well as their own senators and congressmen expressing approval.

This bill was prepared and is sponsored by: Siegfried Goetze of Monrovia, Maryland, former chairman of the Southern California Committee for Relief of the German Peoples, Inc., acting as an individual citizen.

Evangelists for Peace

Editor, The Mennonite:

Early in December you had an editorial in The Mennonite calling for persons who would be "Evangelists for Peace." It was of especial interest to a group of us on the Bluffton Campus. We had just begun to work on a series of programs that was quite similar in purpose. The Peace Action Club has set up five groups which operate somewhat in the nature of Peace Caravans. Following is a list of the five groups and their particular emphasis.

1. The Dynamic of Non-Resistance. This is a treatment of the basic principles of non-resistance, the nature of Christian patriotism and the various paths to peace.
2. The Christian, Conscience, and Conscription. Conscription in the form of UMT, a critique of CPS and the Voluntary Service Program as a positive alternative are considered in this section.
3. Our Ailing Mental Institutions. This deals with our mental hospitals and epileptic colonies in the light of our experience recently and our present concern.
4. The Christian Dilemma: Race Relations. The Negro, Oriental, Jewish and White problems are considered in the light of Christian principles and practices.
5. Relief and Reconstruction. A number of foreign and missionary students present the needs of the various countries from which they come.

The intent is to stimulate thought and action in finding a way to heal some of the major sore spots in the world today. This program was undertaken because of the recognized need for a greater application of our way of life to some of the social sins existing today.

The programs have been set up for presentation in churches primarily, and a number of programs have already been scheduled. A couple will be used for chapel programs here at the college.

The Peace Action Club has drawn upon the large number of students with a rich background of experience in these areas.

James Harnish, President
Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio.

Calvary Church in Famous Lancaster County

Mechanics Grove, Pa., February 9.—The Calvary Mennonite Church of Mechanics Grove, is a home mission church which lies nineteen miles south of Lancaster, in the famous Lancaster County. It is surrounded by prosperous farms and well established Christian communities. Walter H. McDowell, pastor, enjoys the moral support and cooperation of other churches in the community. Reverend McDowell reports that in 1947 two young people came to a new relationship with the Lord. Calvary Church is a part of the mission program of the Home Mission Board of the General Conference.

GLIMPSES INTO HOME MISSION FIELDS

by A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Quakertown, Pa.

Recently two churches in Canada took action to relieve the Board of Home Missions of some expenses. One church decided to assume the whole support of their pastor, and another took action to assume an additional $30 per month toward their pastor's support. Such action is greatly appreciated, since it shows that the congregation is growing stronger and the contributions have helped. Now the amounts saved can be used to good advantage elsewhere.

Bad Weather Interfers with Sunday School

Rev. Andrew Holhman, Paint Rock, North Carolina, reports that unusually bad weather has interfered with the Sunday school in Grace Chapel. On January 25 thirteen came for Sunday school, but on February 1 it was too bad for any pupils to venture out. Until this bad weather had set in, the attendance and interest had been good.

Visitor's Permit Granted

In Mexico it is required that a non-resident secure a Visitor's Permit every six months. This last time Rev. Frank P. Dyck, Apartado 3 Cuauhtemoc, Chichuahua, Mexico, reported he had no trouble to get the premit renewed. Some time ago the official was a bit hesitant to grant the prolonged stay. We are thankful for this improved condition. The Dycks are doing very good work in the Hoffnungsau Church.

Myron D. Hilty Ordained as Pastor of Winton, California, Church

A young business man heard God's call and as a result entered college and later Bible school to prepare himself for the work the Lord would have him do. Upon graduation in 1947, he was approached by the church council of the Bethel Church, Winton, California, relative to the possibility of serving them as pastor. Feeling definitely led of God, after much prayer, to accept the call, Mr. and Mrs. Myron D. Hilty and family of Pandora, Ohio, moved to Winton, and assumed the pastorate of the Bethel Church on October 12.

After several months, the congregation requested the Evangelization Committee of the Pacific District Conference to take the necessary steps for his ordination to the full gospel ministry. Thus it was that Sunday, January 18, was set for the service which was to serve as a climax to a week of special services conducted by Rev. H. D. Burkholder, Los Angeles.

On January 18, the auditorium was crowded to standing room. There were friends from Fairmead, Madera, and from as far as Los Angeles, and there were out of state visitors from South Dakota. A fine meal was served in the Community Hall to all the friends who had gathered.

The ordination service opened at 3:00 p. m. Rev. W. Harley King, Paso Robles, California, presented the charge to the pastor and the congregation. The ordination was conducted by Rev. H. D. Burkholder, president of the Pacific District Conference, assisted by Reverend King. Rev. J. P. Glanzer, and Rev. D. B. Hess. Reverend Glanzer and Reverend Hess, two former pastors, and the pastor of the Mennonite Brethren Church spoke words of encouragement. Brother Hilty responded by saying that only by God's grace and help and the whole-hearted reliance of everyone upon the Holy Spirit's guidance could this joint ministry resolve into what God would have it be. Reverend Hilty spoke for himself and his wife who had knelt at his side for the prayer of dedication and consecration. This was the first ordination service witnessed by many members of the Bethel Church.

Nearly ten years ago the attention of the Pacific District Conference, as well as that of the Home Mission Board, was directed to a group of Mennonites at Winton, California, which was interested in forming a General Conference church. The District Committee and the Mission Board promised joint assistance, and Reverend and Mrs. D. B. Hess ministered to the group for the first several years. The congregation was organized, and Reverend and Mrs. J. P. Glanzer came to minister to the church. The church prospered in the next six years, reaching a membership of over sixty. In June, 1947, Reverend Glanzer resigned, and the church besought the district Evangelization Committee, as well as the Placement Committee of the General Conference, to assist them in securing a pastor.

In ten years the Winton community has prospered materially. A large number of families have fine fruit orchards, nut groves, vineyards, and dairy farms, many of which are newly developed. The church is growing and is a spiritual lighthouse with a missionary vision. —Reported by Rev. W. Harley King, member of the Home Mission Board of the General Conference and chairman of the Evangelization Committee of the Pacific District Conference.

Bethel Hospital Has Annual Meeting

To Undertake Building Program
Successful in Getting Nurses

Newton, Kansas.—According to a statement made at the Annual Meeting of the Bethel Deaconess Home and Hospital Society, February 10, the "Sister Frieda Memorial Chapel," as well as the addition to the Home for the Aged, will be undertaken after some necessary repairs have been made to the present buildings. The present program of construction on the enlarged heating plant and the laundry building is nearing completion. The hospital has a net worth of $361,724, and the Home for the Aged has a valuation of nearly $180,000.

At a time when many hospitals can get practically no recruits, enough prospective nurses enrolled in the Bethel Hospital to carry on the work normally. The hospital authorities were commended for strengthening the work of preparing nurses and for their cooperation with Bethel College. The School of Nursing has an enrollment of 15 first-year students, 17 second-year students, 11 who are in their senior year. Twenty-eight sisters serve in the hospital and the Home for the Aged. In the past year, Sisters Hilda Mueller and Ella Risser were ordained as deaconesses.

A total of 3,131 patients were cared for during the year. The number of guests at the Home for the Aged at present is thirty-three.

One of the highlights of the day's meeting was the paper on, "The Responsibility of the Medical Profession in the Development of Hospitals," read by Dr. J. B. Nanninga of the Bethel staff. This paper, together with a sound film entitled, "You're the Doctor," impressed upon the audience that it was in their hands to build the kind of a hospital that is needed. The operating expense of the hospital in the past year was about $171,000. That of the Home was $27,517 with a deficit for the year.

The Senior and Junior Auxiliaries also reported. The former has as one of its projects an electric bake oven and a steam cooker.

Guest speaker for the day was Dr. P. C. Hiebert, chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee.

The Women's Missionary Organization of the Western District will meet March 17, 1948, for an all-day meeting in the Christian Student Union Room of Memorial Hall.

The meeting will open at 9:30 A. M. on time. Each one is requested to bring a sack lunch for herself—sandwich, and maybe a few cookies and an apple, —hot coffee and postum will be furnished. Bring your lunch with you to the meeting room, as we plan on eating there right after the morning session. We plan on one hour of noon recess, and want to close our meeting in time to hear the last speaker on the Bible Week Program.

Bayard Rustin Visits Community

Reported by Ralph Bargen

It is seldom, indeed, that a man can enter a discussion of tense human relations, and leave behind him better understanding.

But Bayard Rustin, an outstanding Negro leader and Christian thinker, succeeded in just that.

He came to the Newton, Kansas, community last week-end, February 15-17, in hopes of "Building Bridges of Understanding in Tension Areas."

During the three days he was here, he held seven meetings with various groups in Newton, Moundridge, and Bethel College, Kansas. In all of his meetings he asked for greater understanding, for greater humanity of man toward man.

Mr. Rustin believes that this humanity of man for man will come through Christian love. Where there is tension and ill-will, love will work under severe handicaps. But man should never resort to violence. Non-violence, the way of kindliness and compassion, will help man achieve greater understanding.

Mr. Rustin serves his belief in love by working particularly in areas of great tension. In the summer of 1941, he was one of twelve students who helped build a school in an under-privilege area of Puerto Rico.

Since 1941, he has been Field Secretary of the Racial and Industrial Section of the Fellowship of Reconciliation. Last summer, and again this summer, he will direct a work shop on the use of non-violence toward inter-group understanding.

Mr. Rustin left this community, sincerely loved by many people. His task is stupendous, but it is probably lightened since many people see more clearly the need for greater humanity in man's relationship to man.

Jottings

—The Easter season will be marked by a special series of plays on the radio program, "The Greatest Story Ever Told," which is now in its second year over the ABC network every Sunday night at 6:30 p. m., EST. Last year, the Easter Trilogy, broadcast on Passion Sunday, Palm Sunday, and Easter Sunday, proved a high spot in this outstanding dramatic program, and this year's plays for the same Sundays on March 14, 21 and 28, will be equally effective.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: A train car load of wheat is being gathered in this community to be milled into flour for relief.—Mrs. Dan Epp, Corr.

—Grace Church, Dallas, Oregon: Dr. Don R. Falkenberg, of the Bible Meditation League, spoke to us Tuesday evening. Among other things, Dr. Falkenberg spoke of an ever increasing call for Bibles and Christian literature from all parts of the globe. Lack of funds prevents meeting all needs, he stated. Due to illness, Rev. Leisy was absent. Please remember him in prayer. World Day of Prayer was observed by the local churches.—Mrs. Earl W. Smith, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: Our C. E. Society for this year has set its offering goal at $1,000. Last year it was set at $700 and we exceeded it by several hundred dollars. World Day of Prayer was observed by the three combined churches. For Easter our choirs are practicing "The Crucifixion" by Stainer. A community male chorus has organized to render a sacred program on community day, March 8.—Clarence E. Friesen, Corr.

—First Mennonite, Fredonia, Kansas: We are glad to report that we now have a nice church in Fredonia. We have been privileged to share in many spiritual blessings in this new year. February 15 we had our Christian Endeavor program, and were privileged to have a number of visitors.—Lucena Seibel, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Our summary of offices for 1948 shows that in the last year twenty-two new positions were created. There are 166 positions held by 107 persons. —Inman, Kansas, Rev. Donovan E. Smucker, of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, has been secured as the speaker for the special Holy Week services to be held in the High School Auditorium from March 21-26. —Bethel Mission, Winnipeg, Manitoba: On January 17 the ministers from the surrounding Mennonite churches met at the Bethel Mission for an all day conference. They were served dinner by the Ladies Aid. The last Sunday of January was a rather unique one for the church. A large number of Normal School and University Students attended the eveing service to learn about Mennonites and their belief. Rev. Freisen briefly traced the history of the Mennonites and brought out the fundamental beliefs of our faith. Following the service an informal meeting was held at which various questions were asked regarding the church. The S. C. M. of the University served a lunch at the close of this discussion. The Christian Endeavour of the Bethel Mission publishes a monthly paper, The Bethel Beacon. The monthly meetings of the Ladies Aid and the Brotherhood were held February 4 in the church. Clyde Dirks the speaker.—Mrs, A. V. Krehbiel, Corr.

—The General Conference of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ voted at its last meeting to change the name of the denomination to that of the United Missionary Church.

—Richfield, Pa., Church: Cornelius Wall, a student at Princeton University, brought the message at the regular church service, February 8. Other ministers, who have supplied the pulpit since Rev. week Bible study; classes for all ages. The Ladies Sewing Society invited their families to a supper at the church. Nikkel. February 10 was an all day meeting at the church, spent in working for relief. Our church has recently purchased and installed a Wurlitzer Electric Reed Organ and chimes. On February 15, we had as our guest speakers Rev. Vernon Sprunger, missionary from Africa in the morning service and Rev. Harold Burkholder, formerly of this church and now of Los Angles, Calif., in the evening. We also joined with the other churches at the St. Johns Church for our monthly Singspiration after our evening service. These services are times of real spiritual blessing and inspiration to all who attend.—Anona Landes, Corr.

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: On February 6, a very beautiful wedding was solemnized in our church. Miss Virginia Dick and Aaron Meyer were married. This is the first wedding in our church since we have been meeting in Caldwell. Rev. W. Harley King from Paso Robles, Calif., was here in our church Sunday, the 15th . His messages were very inspiring and very much appreciated. Everyone was blessed by his messages. We are planning on having revival meetings here in April and we plan on having Rev. Esau with us. —Mrs. Leonard Schmidt, Corr.

Book Notes

TWO MINUTES WITH GOD. By Paul J. Hoh and Philip R. Hoh. (Abingdon-Cokesbury; 1940, $1.50)

Just the book hundreds of parents with small children have been looking for! A book that the entire family can use together in family devotions. The book was the result of the author's long search for a devotional book which would meet the needs of young children in a family circle, which would center in their activities, lift their every-day life into the presence of God, and bring God close to this life. Finding his search futile he enlisted the help of his twelve-year-old son, who happens to be the co-author, and they wrote the book themselves.

The author, a Lutheran seminary professor, has this to say about how he and his son wrote the book. "Many of the topics chosen are the lad's suggestions many of the Bible verses are his selections; some of the language is expressive of his thought; and a number of the prayers are his own creation."

There are groups of five meditations gathered under thirty-one topics which are carefully indexed. The author suggests that the various topics be taken up as the child meets the type of experience indicated by the topic rather than starting at the beginning of the book and going straight through.

It would seem that such a volume would be invaluable in helping parents who want their children to see God in all their activities and experiences. It would be a tremendous aid in bringing to the surface many questions that would ordinarily remain undiscussed to the possible detriment of the little ones.—Jacob J. Enz

A Mission in Puerto Rico

by Ellwyn Hartzler

IF predominantly Catholic Puerto Rico is less than forty miles wide and one hundred miles long and the larger Protestant churches had divided the Island into sections before CPS even entered with its influence, what hope or reason is there for another church group to enter? Now that the Elkhart Board of Missions and Charities (Old Mennonite) has purchased the land and buildings and is in the future expecting to assume full charge of the present La Plata MCC Project, why should we too seek to enter and start mission activities?

To answer the first I would mention several factors. Geographically Puerto Rico is small, but its topography is such that many sections are still quite isolated from influences of more advanced ones. In 1943 the estimated density of population was 570 persons per square mile or more than ten times that of the continental U. S. This figure is significant to our problem because there are only four cities with populations above 24,000 which means a high percentage live in rural areas. It is true that the Island has been generally divided by the larger Protestant groups, but within some of these areas our church has been requested and given territory to establish a mission station where there live many unsaved souls which the present-working church does not reach.

We agree that there are many yet to be saved, but why choose Puerto Rico in which to start a new field? Even though the island is small and Protestant mission work has been carried on for fifty years, Catholicism, as in most of the Latin-American countries, is still widespread. However, we who have been workers there feel that it is not dictatorially Catholic as are other traditionally Spanish territories where Protestantism is banned by State-Church relationships. Besides, their strongholds are the urban areas where the large cathedrals occupy the more prominent sites on the city square. Largely the rural areas are neglected, and the people are left to grope about in superstition and spiritism. Garver and Finch, in their book Puerto Rico: Unsolved Problem, have this to say: "Yet Catholicism has only a superficial hold on countless people. At heart, many islanders are pagans, and while they may not worship idols, their belief in spiritism is strong. In rural areas the medium is sometimes a more powerful figure than the priest or minister. Through the centuries, the primitive religious concepts of the Indians and the dark superstitions of the early Spanish colonists have persisted." (p. 19)

If this be true why have not the Protestant groups been more successful through these fifty years? I believe that one of the factors is that some of these churches, like the Catholic, have their strongholds in the urban areas in the states and thus their missionaries are not as familiar with the rural problems. Along with this building up of large city congregations has gone the tendency to become rather formal and staid in worship and to lack warmth in relationship to those outside the fold. Without the knowledge of the Spanish language and culture and sensitive, emotional temperament of the Latin American, these representatives were at quite a disadvantage for some time. Historically, we are a rural church acquainted with the particular problems of agriculture and its supporting peoples. During the time the MCC has maintained a project at La Plata, several of our young people have gained knowledge of medical, social and spiritual needs and correspondingly how to cope with the same. Besides this they have acquired at least a conversational knowledge of the Spanish language and have fellowshipped with the Latin American by which they learned to appreciate and understand the peculiarities of their culture and society.

One of our more important doctrines, non-resistance, is greatly needed in Puerto Rico, perhaps more than in other fields because the islander is highly sensitive as we mentioned, and with this we find strong family ties and a quick, fiery temper which often leads into episodes of bloodshed. This is often displayed on the athletic field or court, and the martial air in the religious can be easily detected. Compared to what the other church groups have to offer, we should be outstanding in this testimony. And this witness has not gone without note by these other denominations who have told us that we have something which the Puerto Rican needs and they cannot give as forcefully as the Mennonites. We have the heritage but what about promoting the doctrine in this day?

Remembering the second part of the opening paragraph, some will still ask about the wisdom of a second Mennonite branch entering to do mission work. Since the Elkhart Board now has the La Plata Project, it may appear to some that we will have lost our CPS planting. I do not feel that way because of the potential core of workers which has been made available as a result of the MCC project. Besides, the present governor has commended the Mennonites for their fine work and this testimony is generally known over the Island. And, as was mentioned, we have been invited by the Protestant churches to help. If I am not mistaken, the various Mennonite mission boards are cooperating very nicely in other fields and I, personally, would consider it quite a blow to our profession of Christianity if we could not as brothers work together in Puerto Rico.

There is one more particular advantage in choosing Puerto Rico. Only a comparatively few miles separate it from the mainland. This would mean less expense, danger and time in traveling and would afford opportunity to set up a new type of mission program in which a skeleton staff devoted to full life service would be on the field and be leaders for those young folks who feel called to shorter terms but to a field such as Puerto Rico. Such a program would be beneficial to the young missionaries seeking an outlet for their expression, to those on the field, and to those in the home congregations.

In conclusion let me re-enumerate the particular reasons for starting mission work in Puerto Rico. Catholicism is not sufficient even in its highest form; historically we have the advantage of being able to serve in rural areas; we have the doctrine of love and forgiveness to all which other churches have failed to promote fully; we have workers who have knowledge of culture, language, and human peculiarities and who are willing to serve because they have learned to love their brothers; there is an opportunity for short-term service for many who would not go to other fields, and most of all we have been invited by the other churches to help them preach Christ and Him crucified. Will we heed the call?

Abram Mathies

MUSIC is the fourth great material want of human nature. First comes food, then clothing, then shelter and then music. Good music and songs make a deep and lasting impression which cheer and refresh men's minds. What would church be like without those grand old hymns of faith? It can safely be said, that even Christmas would be rather dull and boring without the wonderful music one may hear during this season. Music has no bad after effects.

An opportunity to sing is given our young people by joining the various choirs. A person may sing at his work to brighten the dull moments.

Unfortunately, instrumental music has been badly neglected and that will be the main topic of this article. Think how much of their leisure time many people waste reading cheap fiction or attending worthless movies. If this time were spent in music study many a person might be an accomplished musician.

Few parents realize the value that a musical education has for their children. Many, perhaps, fear that this would be an extra burden for those already attending school. The truth is that children learn music much more easily than they learn reading, writing, or arithmetic. It rests both mind and body from the study of other school subjects.

When parents decide to provide music lessons for their youngster, the piano seems to be first that comes to their minds. One reason for this is perhaps that piano teachers are much more plentiful than others. Also, the piano makes a good piece of furniture. Giving all due respect to the piano, may I say that it is a fine and very useful instrument. It has made many an artist, who mastered it, famous on the concert stage.

Now I would like to point out some of the advantages small instruments have to offer. It must be remembered that in ensemble playing or even in a large orchestra seldom, if ever, more than one piano is required, while a good number of violins, violas, violincellos, and basses can always be accommodated, also a lesser number of woodwinds and brasses. This is an important factor, as group playing is not only very enjoyable for the participant, but is also educational if properly conducted.

With a violin or related instrument the fingers of the left hand must be in exactly the right place and the bow must travel in the right path. As in singing, you must listen sharply to stay in tune. Getting music out of a violin is therefore an entirely personal achievement, while the production of tone on the piano or a fretted string instrument is largely a mechanical process.

An eminent teacher of string instruments states: "Everybody, absolutely everybody, can participate in good music if he starts early enough." He has proved through experiments that the best time to start is at the age of five, and that group practice with the young is much better than playing alone.

I hope that older persons will not be discouraged. Providing they do not cherish ambitions of becoming concert artists, people in their twenties and older can derive a good deal pleasure from the study of music.

It has been estimated that about 90 per cent of the honour students play some musical instrument; on the other hand less than 3 per cent of criminals in the penal institutions of this land play any musical instrument whatsoever. This would mean that if a person spends his leisure hours doing something useful he will find it much easier to keep himself out of mischief.

Positive proof that music is the best mind trainer comes from Oxford University. Only 10 per cent of the students there study music, yet this 10 per cent takes 75 per cent of all school prizes and scholarships. This is not the record of a single year but the average over a period of 30 successive years.

It is hoped that in the future we will have more and better musicians and perhaps—even a symphony orchestra. I can hope, can't I? — Die Vereinsglocke

The teachers in charge are, left to right: Rosella Reimer, Jeanette Richert, and Lois Musselman. Similar work is being carried on throughout the year among the under-privileged children of Gulfport. And voluntary service units next summer will be again bringing the Christian gospel to children in Montana, Saskatchewan, Chicago, Gulfport. Of the Gulfport children, they say, "The boys and girls with their big black wistful-looking eyes are so polite and orderly, and hardly know what it is to play a real live game. But how they enjoy going out to the lot in front of their school and learning to play toegther."

Midwestern Peace Institute Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas

February 14, 1948

The first of a series of regional peace institutes arranged by the Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee was held at the Eden Mennonite Church on February 14. Representatives from various Mennonite groups of four central Kansas counties were represented. The conference was opened by Albert Gaeddert, chairman of the Peace Section. Frank Peters, a graduate student at Emporia State Teachers College, gave the opening address, "Christ the Center of Our Living." The second part of the conference was a panel discussion on the topic "Should Christians Serve in the Armed Forces of the Country?" John Duerksen of Hesston College served as chairman. With him were Ervin Goering of the Bethel College faculty, Ralph Lehman of Casterland, New York, student at Bethel College, Evan Oswald, a student at Hesston College and Waldo Janzen of Goessel, Kansas. The panel entertained questions from the floor following an intense discussion. The panel concluded that Christians should not serve in the armed forces nor should they serve in the merchant marines or in defense industries because of the complications involved in such service for Christians who wish to do all things as unto the Lord.

The afternoon session was opened by Jesse Kauffman, the chairman. Walter Gering, the pastor of the Eden Church, conducted the devotion, reading from the twenty-first chapter of Luke. Winfield Fretz of Bethel College gave an address on the topic, "Recurring Wars in History and the Christians Answer." Under this topic he sketched the nature of war, its attractiveness to men and suggested some things Christians might do as alternatives to war. Following this address there was again discussion from the floor.

During the second part of the afternoon, the audience of some 250 guests divided into two groups, one for the ministers and young people's leaders led by Rev. Menno Troyer of McPherson and the other young people led by Rev. Arnold Funk of Hillsboro, Kansas. Each of these groups discussed the nature of the problems confronting Christian non-resistors and then joined for a united meeting and exchange of conclusions arrived at in each group. In this way members of the conference learned what other members and other peace church groups are doing by way of carrying out peace programs.

The women of Eden Church supplied meals for the conference guests in the basement of the church at noon and again in the evening. The evening session was chaired by Waldo Hiebert of Tabor College and Minister Koehn of the Church of God in Christ, Mennonite conducted the devotional services. Five men gave testimonies in the evening meeting as to their experiences in time of war. James Rutschman of Elbing, Kansas, gave a testimony of his experiences during World War I. Harold Duerksen of Bethel College told of the experiences of the CPS Unit as assistants in the Veterans Hospital at Roseburg, Oregon. James Hean from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, student at Bethel College spoke on the peace testimony of Historic Peace Churches in Puerto Rico. Frank Venture, a student at Hesston College, spoke on the subject, "I Could Not Serve in the Army Again." Mr. Ventura is a Mexican who is a member of a Mennonite Mission Church in Chicago. Noah Leatherman of Hillsboro, Kansas, spoke on his experiences as a conscientious objector in World War I. All of these testimonies were enlighteningly interesting and much appreciated by the members of the conference. Dr. H. A. Fast concluded the conference by summarizing the high lights and giving the challenge for the future. The conference guests expressed the feeling that similar conferences might well be held in other parts of the country to help teen-age boys and girls think through the problems of the position of a Christian in time of war.

" . . . . in speaking before groups all over the country . . . I have found public sentiment overwhelmingly against UMT. I have found that to be so despite certain polls that claim the program is popular. I am convinced that the questions put by these polls on this issue are not framed in such a way as to reveal what the public actually thinks about UMT."—Dr. Robert M. Hutchins of University of Chicago, November 1, 1947.

The Understanding

by Jean Alderfer

"How do you know?" they ask.
"How can you tell?"
How do I know there is God?

If all the knowledge of all the world
I should in my hands hold.
And all the formulas there are,
And every man's equations.
And profound theories know well.
And should I go out and speak to scientists and to learned men of all nations,
Then have some small child come up to me and say,
"But how do you know?"

I just could say—

I feel there is God.
Sometimes, at night,
When on my mind some worries press,
Or, some unknown thing I can't express,
In darkness,
Causes me to fear,
I can close my eyes from light and pretend
That I am nestled in the arms of God.
And calmly, quietly,
Fall asleep.
Yet, I cannot prove that God was there,
Nor that he constantly does keep Watch over me,
Everywhere I am.

I have seen God.—or at least I've seen places God has been.
Just as rabbit tracks across a desert sand
After the animal has gone his way
Can show that a little while before he had passed by,
So can I see a pastel ray
Make the horizon line at break of day,
And watch the constant rhapsody of color in the evening sky
And know that God was there.
In every lovely place,
In happiness, in quiet waters,
On clovered lea, o'er rippled sea,
I have seen the trace of God.
I am too small to understand why God should let wars go by,
And raging tides rise high,
Or mourners have to lift their arms in sorrow.
But—even in these tragic things I can see God.
Because the loveliness of June comes closest after darkest winter days,
Because after blackest nights break fairest
Dawns of morrow,
And in a hundred other ways,
I know God is there.

God has taught me.
Not corporation laws, not the rules of diminishing utility,
Not the rules of supply and demand,
Not the things that in textbooks are,
But the most important things in all the world.
That the kindest act that you can do is just to smile.
That happiness is some soft note of song,
Or someone passing by,
Or quietly watching birds across a silent sky.
That all loveliness is some simple clod
Of earth that is home.
No one told me this.
It must have come from God.

I've felt God.
I've seen places God has been.
God has taught me.

Although I can not prove that God is there.
It need not be.
For by a million touches of his hand
God's proved himself to me.

Some Goals for Our Conference

by J. N. Smucker

In general our two-fold goals may well be expressed, in the familiar words from Isaiah, "Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." For these times demand that we be active, alert, and growing, to meet our Christian obligations and responsibilities. We need a larger outreach and a deeper religious rootage.

We need to lengthen our activities in MISSIONS. The Gospel of Christ was never more needed around the world. We believe that in the Gospel alone are the proper solutions to the world's ills. This Gospel must be proclaimed with certainty, not only in so-called backward nations but in Europe and America as well. This goal must be clear before us all as we unitedly cooperate in its attainment. "The world needs Jesus."

We must set before us a larger goal of RELIEF, not simply for the emergency, but as a long-range program. Our Lord was quick to respond to physical need. We should share our means with less fortunate ones as a permanent undertaking. Relief is more than mere giving of money; it implies a spiritual concern and interest as well. We share the sufferings and needs of others around the world, that we may win them to Christ.

We must set before us a larger goal for CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP. There needs to be some systematic form of giving. We are but stewards of our Lord's wealth temporarily entrusted to us. We need to teach, preach and practice giving with such an unselfish spirit that we do not demand for ourselves what we would not wish for others. In this spirit we will have the means to support the various activities of the Church.

Another goal to set before us, is a renewed emphasis on EVANGELISM in our own midst and in ourselves. Our unsaved neighbors are as important as the far-away heathen.

We need to win people for Christ one by one in our daily personal contacts. Religion must be shown to be practical and workable in our strange world. Our churches should be more deeply concerned in bearing true witness to our Lord. Definite training and assignments should be worked out for practical home evangelism.

We need to lengthen the cord of MUTUAL HELPFULNESS. Among our own number, we need to make proper provisions to care for the aged, the needy, the sick, the mentally ill, the retired missionaries and ministers. We should stand ready to help our young people get started in life as well as assist in making their closing years happy and comfortable. Paul warns us that not to care for our own is worse than infidelity. This whole field needs to be carefully considered and worked through in the Name of Christ.

We should strive more unselfishly towards CHURCH UNITY, both among ourselves and among the Christian churches around the world. The Church is the fellowship of believers in Christ, and the nearer we come to Christ the nearer we are brought together. There must be no air of suspicion and distrust but a genuine desire for Christian fellowship and love. The deep bonds that unite us need to be strengthened, the minor points that tend to divide should be reduced. We need a united Church in a united fellowship with Christ to present a unified front against the sins and evils of the day.

Having considered some of the cords that need to be lengthened, let us consider some stakes that need to be strengthened.

We should all seek to strengthen our WORSHIP SERVICE in our churches. The whole spirit and work of the church should be deepened, — the sermons, the worship, the teaching in Sunday school, and the whole church program. Every Sunday worship should be a time to bring all face to face with God.

We need to strengthen the HOME, and make it more Christian. Young people should know more about establishing Christian homes, the dangers of mixed marriages, divorce and loose family ties. The Family Altar and home worship, the religious nurture of the children, the Christian attitude towards each other, —

EDITORIALS

DR. S. F. PANNABECKER'S acceptance of the presidency of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary is an event the results of which should do much to make the school one which is respected by young men and women genuinely seeking God's truth. He's a man of learning. He knows what the General Conference is like, having studied for his doctor's thesis the development of the General Conference and the part that the American culture has played in it. Hard, systematic, and thorough work characterize him. His associates respect him. This is a notable fact, for a man's immediate relationships are often the most telling test of his Christianity. With a president of mature character and thorough scholarship, the Conference can expect an administration that will make for creative leadership in our churches.

THE PASSING of Mrs. G. A. Linscheid removes from the earthly scene one of our early missionaries, who, with her husband, devoted thirty-five years to the work among the Cheyenne Indians in Oklahoma and Montana. The Indian mission work, begun in our church when Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Haury went to Darlington, Oklahoma, in 1880, has been difficult from the start, and was never surrounded with the strangeness and glamor of foreign work. The primitive conditions which prevailed made the work a trial for the missionaries, and the lack of transportation facilities resulted in almost complete isolation from the society of white people. Mrs. Linsched shared these privations gladly, filling a large place both as missionary and housekeeper and mother in the home. Though the work among the Indians was discouraging and beset with difficulties of language and customs, it was not in vain. In a short life of her husband, written in 1944, Mrs. Linscheid reports that during his years of service, he baptized 247 souls, mostly Indians. The Linscheids pioneered the opening of the work in Busby and Lame Deer, Montana, returning after sixteen years once more to Oklahoma. Mr. Linischeid passed away in Newton, Kansas nearly six years ago. She has now joined her husband in the Father's house, the work of life over, but her silent ministries still living in the hearts of many

If the Church Would Live

Last year the General Conference adopted a program of evangelism that will mean great things if the churches will take it up. The Council of Boards agreed that all churches be asked to observe the Holy Week as a Week of Witness annually. Every congregation is to make special effort that week to reach out in the community with a witness for Christ.

This task is not optional. It is the express command of Christ, the Head of the Church. "Ye are my witnesses", He said. The very life of the Church depends upon faithfulness here.The Church needs to witness to win adherents to the faith, but more than that, she needs to witness to keep vital and life-giving the faith she has. The soul of the Church will grow only as we reach out to save those who are still in the dark and in uncertainty about the salvation of their souls. It is said, "The church is divided and therefore weak." Rather the Church is weak and therefore divided. Likewise, if it is said that the Church does not grow and therefore is weak, we would rather say the Church is weak and therefore does not grow. She is weak because she does not witness

In the beginning of our history the Mennonite Church grew fast. The Dutch and Swiss Mennonites had great missionary zeal and vision. They won many souls to Christ and risked their lives to do so. Somewhere we lost this zeal. May it be due to our misunderstanding of what it means to be a separated people and to keep ourselves from the world? We may have lost sight of the fact that the way to preserve our faith is by propagating it. By witnessing to our faith we are established in it, and help to win others to it. The spiritual life of the Church thrives on evangelism. When we believe in Christ, as the Scriptures have said, our lives become like rivers of living water.

The coming Holy Week will give our congregations a new opportunity to reach out into the community with a witness for Christ. In most Church communities there are still some folk who have either never accepted Christ as Savior and Lord, or who have gone back to the old life of the world. Who will help these people to Christ if the church does not assume responsibility? In the coming Holy Week every Church should seek to witness of the redeeming love of Christ Who gave His life to save every man, woman and child of our community.

Now It's Co-ordination

by B. Bargen

WHAT is this "co-ordination" that everybody is talking about in relation to our Conference activities?

One is tempted to go into the meanings of various syllables—"co" means equal, or together—"ordinate," to bring into system or to efficiency, etc. There will doubtless be considerable talk along those lines. Something can be said for that approach. For who is to say that this function or that function of our Conference work is of greater or less importance than another? There will also be innuendous that "system" and "efficiency" are portentuous evils to be avoided at all costs. But the Apostle Paul said, "Let everything be done decently and in order," and it was he who also said, "But now are ye one body."

"For bread, destroy not the work of God," says the Apostle Paul in the letter to the Romans, and our Conference may well say, "For money, destroy not the works of God." Let's integrate or co-ordinate, or whatever it takes, but let's do it together.

There is something about the way our Conference boards operate that frustrates the purposes of God in our Conference. For one board, for example, to say that in carrying out it's work it needs to do some education through putting out posters, or some pamphlets, tracts, or booklets, and then to have another board say that such printing cannot be done or such posters cannot be prepared for lack of funds, is to frustrate the process of integration. If one board, prayerfully considering its duties and its opportunities, decides that a thing is good and that it ought to be done, who is another board to say that it shouldn't?

When an individual farmer or stock raiser, let us say, decides that it would be a good thing for him to risk his capital to go into pure-bred livestock raising, fully aware of the risks involved, he nevertheless goes ahead and does it. He does it because he is an integrated personality. He doesn't say to himself, "I think I shall go into livestock raising. I think I shall not go into livestock raising." He talks one way or the other, but he does not vacillate in his decisions. Our Conference boards must in the same way make their decisions.

Take, for example, this matter of Daily Vacation Bible School materials for children. Our churches and teachers in the church schools ask for better materials to do the work of religious education within our own group. The Curriculum Committee has said that the materials are not only needed but are available. Let us go ahead and do it. If bread is good for children, parents who love their children will get the bread—they will not ask whether the price is ten cents per loaf or twenty cents. They will get bread. They will get bread at almost any price if bread is available, because children must have good bread.

This talk of co-ordination, therefore, is one of the best evidences that a real change is gradually taking place in the thinking of leaders of our Conference. "Except a grain die, it abideth alone." Little by little our Conference Boards and Committees are beginning to realize that they cannot do an effective piece of work until they "die to self." Only as Kingdom considerations begin to take precedence over the consciousness of separateness can increasing effectiveness take place. Co-ordination was discussed at the Council of Boards on every side. Again and again members of this board or that board would be called out to confer with members of other boards. There were joint meetings of various boards, who realized that there are some things you just can't do by yourself; you have to do them together. It is becoming imperative that each board must operate as though all other boards were merged with it in an integral whole. From this point of view the word "integration" would be better than "co-ordination." Every board must operate as though all boards were one board.

Whether this proposed "co-ordination" will co-ordinate or not depends much upon the basic will to work together. The will to unity is all-important. Where that is present, no red tape can ever take over; and where it is not present all efforts at unity may degenerate into nothing but red tape. The constructive questions asked, and the temperate way in which those questions were examined and partially answered is good indication that the will to unity is strong, and that genuine, effective co-ordination is "around the corner."

A Renewed Emphasis on Evangelism

"A renewed emphasis on evangelism" was one of the six goals for our conference as given at the Council of Boards meetings in Chicago by Rev. J. N. Smucker, President of the General Conference. Non-Christian people living with us and among us should be won to Christ. Last year the Council of Boards endorsed the plan that all our conference congregations annually observe the Holy Week as a Week of Witness. Annually we are to make a united effort to fulfill the charge Jesus has given us. The Evangelism Committee is sending out a folder and a poster to all pastors of the conference. Both the the folder and the poster give suggestions on how the Holy Week may be observed as a Week of Witness. People who have never accepted Christ should be encouraged and invited to do so. Then also there are Christian people who need help because they are inwardly struggling with fears, with inferiority feelings, with worries, with unforgiving attitudes and inner conflicts. There is need for Christian people to share with their Christian friends how they found release in Christ. The Holy Week should lend itself well to efforts of helping our friends closer to the Lord.—THE EVANGELISM COMMITTEE

Exec. Com. Emphasizes "New Life"

Co-ordinating Com. Active

by Walter Dyck

Members of the Executive Committee: C. H. Goering, A. E. Kreider, Walter H. Dyck, J. N. Smucker, Olin Krehbiel, J. M. Regier, H. A. Fast, Ed. G. Kaufman, H. J. Andres.

It had been the sincere hope of our beloved Brother A. Warkentin, who, until the time of his decease served as President of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois, that the Seminary might be host to a session of the General Conference Council of Boards.

He had been anxious that members of boards and committees might become more intimately acquainted with the aims and plans, the physical facilities, the faculty and student body of this institution which stands unique in its aim and field of service among other recognized schools of our General Conference.

During the week of February 16-20 the Seminary served as host to the 1948 Council of Boards and Committees. Those who attended were heartened and given special reason for thankfulness to God for the hand of blessing He had placed upon this our school. Definite prayers have been answered. Our constituency is finding a renewed joy in investing in the Lord's work—an investment in young men and women who are anxious to heed the Lord's call to dedicated service.

In this setting the General Conference Executive Committee met all day Monday, February 16, and again on Wednesday afternoon, February 18, to consider a number of pressing concerns. Outstanding was a presentation of the need for a general spiritual revival or "New Life" emphasis in our churches.

At the first joint evening session, Tuesday evening, to which all members of boards, committees, and auxiliary organizations, the seminary family, and others in the Chicago area were invited, Brother Smucker based a stirring challenge on Isaiah 54:2, which calls us to "Enlarge the place of thy tent . . . stretch forth . . . spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." His pressing appeal was climaxed with the warning. "We cannot go farther until we go deeper." Realizing our need for guidance, a special period had been set aside for intercession for the plans of the week, for the laborers in the churches and in the many fields beyond. We must go deeper into personal consecration, deeper into a practice of Christian stewardship, and deeper into lives of prayer and self-forgetful service, if the goal of nearly one million dollars needed in 1948 to "enlarge . . . stretch forth . . . lengthen . . . and strengthen" the Lord's work entrusted to us, is to be reached.

Although much of the work of the executive committee in Chicago had to do with the assignment of responsibilities to the various boards and committees, the committee was also called upon to consider hitherto neglected areas of endeavor.

Considerable time was given to the discussion and adoption of the Rules and Regulations which are to govern the retirement income plan of the Pension and Ministers' Aid Committee. It was heartening to note the increasing number of ministers and churches making application for participation in this plan.

The Executive Committee agreed to contribute our share toward the expense of the Fourth Mennonite World Conference to be held August 3-5, at Goshen, Indiana, and August 7-10, 1948, at North Newton, Kansas.

The proposed program of activity submitted by the Historical Committee was reviewed and endorsed. Among the various avenues of service to be undertaken are the preservation of the Germantown Mennonite Meetinghouse and other historical monuments, the continued collection of materials pertaining to Mennonite culture, and the preservation and making available of acquired materials for research at places to be approved by the Committee.

A significant meeting held was that of the Coordinating Committee which was assigned the responsibility of a revision of the Constitution. Members of the committee are H. A. Fast, Chairman; C. H. Goering, Chairman of the Trustees; the Conference Officers; and the president of each of the district conferences or one appointed by him. A number of questions concerning the extent of the assignment given this committee was presented and discussed at the Wednesday evening meeting. During the coming year the study is to be continued with the hope of bringing a more definite progress report to the 1949 Council of Boards.

A graphic picture of the total budgets will be presented in our papers within a few weeks. Our sincere appreciation goes to the Seminary for the hospitality extended. Churches or individuals are encouraged to write the GENERAL CONFERENCE HEADQUARTERS, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, for more definite plans for 1948.

WHAT HAPPENED AT CHICAGO

Main Developments Resulting from Board Sessions

THE following are some of the main developments which came out of the recent Council of Boards sessions in Chicago. This is no comprehensive survey of the actions taken by the various boards. Neither are developments described in the wording of the minutes of the various boards. It is an attempt to give some of the highlights for the readers of THE MENNONITE.

Seminary and Bible School Board

The call of Dr. S. F. Pannabecker to the presidency of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and his acceptance was the main news event coming from the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School Board. The faculty of seven is to have two additions when suitable men can be found for teaching courses in New Testament, Rural Sociology, and Christian Education. Housing accommodations are to be enlarged by the purchase of a ten-room house, which would be used for non-Seminary guests and financed by funds outside of regular Seminary receipts. The school now has nine such who are students in schools of medicine, optometry, and so on, in Chicago. The Home Mission Board is particularly concerned that something be done for these Mennonite students. Although the Seminary enrollment stands at nineteen, the Seminary students and their families, and faculty members and their families make a total Seminary family of fifty-seven, thus causing crowded housing conditions. Present indications are that there may be an increase of six to twelve students in the Seminary next year. The Board also approved plans to take care of as many as ten students in the Bible school next year. Housing continues to be one of the main problems of the Seminary. According to the Board budget, about $3,000 will be the monthly running expenses of the Seminary. There is a $17,500 debt which must be liquidated by June, 1948. Rev. Andrew Shelly is now working on this. The Home Mission Board and an individual have loaned money to purchase the ten-room house referred to above.

Foreign Mission Board

The Foreign Mission Board has not turned down the idea of a mission field in Puerto Rico. It has approved in principle the opening of such work if the questions of location and finances can be solved. There is no staked out field in Puerto Rico. However, it is hoped that the General Conference might be allotted a certain territory in a prospective reallocation of territory among mission groups. Men missionaries and single lady missionaries are being sent back to the China field. They go to Paochi, which is comparatively free from civil war. Elisabeth Goertz and W. C. Voth are scheduled to leave for China on March 14, and Albert Jantzen is to sail as soon as possible. Funds are needed for building a new mission compound in Paochi, and for starting the new work in this area. A five-year expansion program, entailing an expenditure of $80,000 to $100,000, has been outlined for the South American work. It is hoped that the Mission to Lepers will assume 80 per cent of the cost. The result would be a school for eighty to one hundred untainted children of leper parents. An architect has already drawn up the plans. Another couple is to go there. The Board decided that Rev. S. T. Moyer return to India this fall. The budget for the African field is larger than previously. The Board encouraged the Canadian Conference to continue studying the possibility of carrying on mission work among the Indians of Canada. The resignation of Dr. and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker as missionaries to China was accepted, with appreciation of services rendered in the past. Dr. Pannabecker resigned in order that he might accept the presidency of the Seminary. To arouse mission interest in the churches the Board appointed Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, S. J. Goering, and Howard Nyce to draw up plans for such promotional work. The matter of pensions for our missionaries was considered and a committee was appointed to work out plans. The Board's budget for the next year is about $100,000 higher than for 1947.

Emergency Relief Board

With a budget of nearly $1,399,100, the Emergency Relief Board will continue its War Sufferers' Relief and spend about $180,000 for resettling Mennonite refugees from Europe to Paraguay. Altogether some 2,500 to 2,600 refugees are to be moved. The first group was to leave for South America on February 24. The second is to go about a month or so later and then the third one. These will be the major refugee movements by the board this year. Some thousands of Mennonites may have to remain in Germany for some time, unless new opportunities should present themselves. Paraguay is hesitant to absorb any more at this time. The Board moved to share its part in the deficit of the Educational Rehabilitation Fund, to share in the student exchange fund, and to raise $900 for the distribution of Christian literature among Mennonites in Europe and South America. Most of the latter fund will go for paying for copies of the song book, Gesangbuch Mit Noten. The budget of the Relief Board will perhaps be the largest of any single board or committee for the coming year.

Board of Education

Feeling that a definite spiritual impact has been made upon exchange students which came here from Europe, the Board of Education is planning to continue this program, with the hope of also getting some students from Germany. It is felt that this is one way of influencing the German church in the future. Recognizing that ministerial students often share the fate of the proverbial church house, a special committee is to study the need for and the methods to be used in the granting of scholarships to young men preparing for the ministry. New Sunday school materials are being worked out by the Curriculum Committee, which is a sub-committee of the Board of Education. Work has begun on a Junior graded course, to be ready by 1950. The Adult Quarterly has been adapted for young people by substituting a different discussion section. The German Quarterly may be improved. A committee is to work on materials for catechetical instruction. Plans are being made for a new youth hymnal. In addition to this, a $14,000 project of Daily Vacation Bible School materials has been mapped out. The materials are to be an adaptation of the course prepared by the Old Mennonites. Dr. Ramseyer, a specialist in visual education, is to work towards a centralized visual aid service for the churches. The Board feels very strongly that the Educational Rehabilitation Fund, which provides tuition for CPS men in college, must be continued. The Board-sponsored Ministers' Retreat will be held at Estes Park this year, July 29, to August 5. The board sub-committee on inter-school relationships is trying to coordinate the activities of the schools to promote their cooperation and to improve their general welfare. The Board will call attention to Christian education with a special emphasis beginning the last Sunday in August, and extending through September. A budget of $33,940 is needed to carry out the work for the coming year.

Peace Committee

The major problem facing the Peace Committee is that of peace education. To facilitate this the Peace Committee is planning to publish a little periodical called "The Peacemaker" with Russell Mast as editor. This is sent to all ministers of the Conference, to instructors in the colleges and the Seminary, etc. Also Dr. H. A. Fast's doctor's dissertation on "The Principle of Non-Resistance According to the Teachings of Jesus," is to be published in book form with the Board underwriting the publication. The dissertation will be revised somewhat by the author. Furthermore, the General Conference Peace Committee is trying to work with District Peace Committees to carry on peace education in local congregations. To this end, minutes of the General Conference Peace Committee meetings are to be sent to all peace committees in the various districts. Once a year representatives from the district committees are to meet with the General Conference committee. They are to exchange counsel on work and procedures. It is hoped that by this cooperation district committees will carry on education through retreats, institutes, literature, voluntary service projects, etc. It is hoped that a united budget can sometime be worked out for the General Conference Peace Committee and the various district committees. The whole field of education for peace is felt to be so important that the committee discussed the possibility of having a full-time man for peace education. The Committee is to continue in its support of the MCC Peace Section with a budget cost estimated on the basis of 10 cents per church member. The committee is again working with the Young People's Union and sponsoring Voluntary Service Projects this summer. It is also much concerned with the CPS Educational Rehabilitation Fund.

Home Mission Board

As mentioned before, the Home Mission Board decided to help the Seminary secure a good sized home for housing Mennonite students in Chicago. The Board decided upon this course of action after considering how the girls homes in the three Canadian cities of Winnipeg, Rosthern, and Vancouver, are furnishing a retreat from the daily grind and also a bond of fellowship for the girls from the different communities, as well as a source of inspiration through the weekly Bible studies and the regular worship services. Feeling an obligation for the many new Mennonite settlers in Paraguay, the Board is asking Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Friesen, of Henderson, Nebraska, to fly to South America and work among the settlers there for two years. The Friesens will stop off in Brazil to visit the Mennonite communities there before preceding to Paraguay where they are expected to spend most of their time visiting the different colonies. The Board is also supplying these refugees with German books. In the future the home mission work among the southern mountain people will be enlarged and carried on with more workers. A minister from one of our district conferences is to conduct special evangelistic meetings at Paint Rock, North Carolina. The Board's budget for the coming year is $60,000.

Mutual Aid Board

Highlights of the Mutual Aid Board meeting were: A review of the work it has been doing during the past year. It has made fifty-three loans since the beginning of its operation. Sixteen of these have been completely repaid, putting back a total of $11,895 in the revolving fund. The Board plans to give careful assistance in the rehabilitation of European Mennonite refugees who may be admitted into the United States during 1948, if immigration laws will be changed as is now a real possibility. The Board decided to urge local congregations to study the possibilities of mutual aid as a way of strengthening their total life and activity. It is felt that local aid committees can do much to be alert to the needs of its young people as well as to assist weaker churches. The budget of $1,650 was worked out.

Placement Committee

The cry of the Placement Committee is like that of a girls' school. It is, "We need more men, especially young men." Facing this need are such churches as Emmaus, Whitewater, Kansas; Pretty Prairie, Kansas, Church; Henderson, Nebraska, Church; Turpin, Oklahoma, Church; Dalton, Ohio, Church; Madrid, Nebraska, Church; Zion Church, Kingman; Enid, Oklahoma, Church; Donnellson, Iowa Church; etc. "It is three times as hard to place an older man than a younger one, even if he has had no experience. The churches want men fresh out of the Seminary." The Placement Committee wants more information about young men in who might be interested in pastorates now or in the future. It is the responsibility of the Placement Committee to help churches find ministers. To accomplish this the Committee needs more information about men available and more information from the churches as to what they are willing to offer the men who may be interested. The Committee plans to visit all General Conference students in seminaries. Rev. Freeman Swartz is to visit those in the Eastern area and Rev. Edmund Miller those in the Chicago area. The chairman of the Committee said, "Information is one of the best tools." The Committee plans to publish a pamphlet "setting forth the ministry with a view of interesting young people." Edmund J. Miller is to write it. Discussion material is to be prepared for C. E. societies.

Doctrine and Conduct Committee

The Doctrine and Conduct Committee reports that Don Smucker is to spend the summer months working upon the manuscript of a book, Doctrines of the Bible. This is a preliminary manuscript which is to be submitted to others for criticism. The Committee has not decided as to whether it will be submitted to the Council of Boards. Jacob Goering, of the Mennonite Seminary has been asked to compile the statistics on the survey on divorce which Dr. Warkentin carried out. So far the Committee has not produced material defining the Christian attitude towards Russia. It is to run some stewardship articles in The Mennonite and also a series of doctrinal articles coordinated with the church year. A member of the committee is also to make a survey of General Conference giving, and a stewardship packet is to be worked out. The committee's budget is $1,000.

A REPORT ON U.M.T.

A report from Washington states that U.M.T. seems to be stalled at present in the Rules Committee. It is not considered to be "dead" as was reported in a recent issue of Newsweek. Those favoring this legislation are making efforts to get action. The rules committee stands 6-6 on the matter of bringing it out for action on the floor. A few more congressman are said to have gone over in favor of the legislation, but the present reluctance to vote on it likely will be strong until the elections. The reluctance to vote now is chiefly political.

Evangelism Committee

"A New Life Movement" is what the Evangelism Committee hopes will come out of observing Passion Week as a Week of Witness. Plans for this week will be publicized through The Mennonite. There will be a poster on evangelism, and a pamphlet, listing ways in which lay people can witness of Christ, will be sent to the pastors.

Church Unity Committee

Since the Church Unity Committee is convinced that the cause of unity is well served by the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan, it is encouraging the district conferences, with the exception of the Central District, to encourage their churches to take up this plan. It is planning to check on how many churches belong to the district conferences and not to the General Conference, with the thought of sending either The Mennonite or the Bundesbote to the ministers of such churches, thus achieving a better understanding among Mennonites. The Committee also favors reunions of CPS men, for this helps the cause of unity. The secretary of the Committee was instructed to continue correspondence with the officers of the Canadian Mennonite Conference and the leaders of the Schoenwiese Gemeinde in an effort to effect a reconciliation and reunion. If the church secretary of the Kleine Gemeinde in Manitoba reports that he thinks it would be appreciated if a complimentary one-year subscription of The Mennonite were sent to each one of the twenty ministers, the paper is to be sent to them, the Unity Committee standing the cost.

Ministers' Aid Committee

The Ministers Aid Committee of the General Conference is planning to publish a booklet which explains very plainly the Pension Plan for ministers. It is to be sent to all church boards. The committee still faces the problem of acquainting churches and ministers with the plan. Fourteen churches are either in the process of getting the plan under way or have already adopted the plan. The committee reports that a goodly number of other churches are planning to enter the plan. The Ministers' Aid Committee plans to do something for ministers who need help, with the result that in the coming year it may add eight additional ministers to the two who are now receiving $50 a month aid. This would call for an amount of $6,000 in the $6,740 budget of the committee.

Laymen's Organization

The new Laymen's Organization has not adopted any new projects for the future, but it is seeking to learn what other laymen's organizations are doing, and it is also seeking to give publicity to projects being carried out by local brotherhoods.

Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Association

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Association is again sponsoring migrant work for young people and is underwriting this financially. The Association decided not to merge the Missionary News and Notes with The Mennonite at this time. Literature, which it will prepare, will include a workbook for the study book on China and a mission studies book. The first will be edited by Elva Schrock and the second by Mrs. Willard Claassen. The Association takes on projects from the Home and Foreign Mission Boards, and these will run to about $33,200. This, with an expense budget of about $4,800, will make an approximate budget of $40,000 for the Association.

(Watch next week's paper for a write-up of the main actions taken by the Board of Publication)

The total budget of all boards and committees will run close to one million dollars. Last year's budget was $735,000, and the income was $713,764, making the boards and committees $21,236 short. Rev. J. N. Smucker, president of the Conference, pointed out that the new budget, if distributed equally among all church members of the Conference, would make less than twenty-five dollars per member.

Boards Held Three Joint Sessions

Reported by Don E. Smucker

The Council of Boards of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America met at Mennonite Biblical Seminary February 16 to 19. On Monday, February 16, the Executive Committee was in session through the day preparing for the other boards to come on the next three days. The opening joint evening session was held on Tuesday evening with J. N. Smucker of Bluffton, Ohio, the Conference President, speaking on "Some Goals for our Conference." He took as his text Isaiah 54:2, "Enlarge the place of the tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitations; spare not; lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." The Conference President urged his constituents to lengthen the cords in regard to missions not only in backward nations but in the United States and Europe. He urged them to share our material goods for the needy throughout the world in order to win them to Christ. He called their attention to the very urgent need for Christian stewardship. He asked for a renewed emphasis on evangelism for the unsaved neighbors of those represented in the constituency. The Conference President suggested a more practical home evangelism as well as the effort in the mission field. A further plea was for a renewed program of mutual helpfulness and mutual aid to see us through the difficult days ahead. He also called attention to the challenge of church unity, first within the Conference itself, secondly with other Mennonite groups, and third with the Protestant church in general. Then he mentioned the matter of improving and enriching the worshipping services, strengthening the life in the Christian home, continuing and extending Christian education, and making our general Biblical teaching more effective in regard to love, peace, and simple life. The opening address was concluded by the necessity for personal committment saying, "We cannot go farther until we go deeper." The Conference Secretary, Walter H. Dyck of Newton, Kansas, then addressed the group on "Attaining Toward These Goals." In answer to the question how can we do these things, he declared that it can be done through personal consecration, mutual cooperation, and intelligent planning.

At the conclusion of this paper there was a season of prayer for the needs of the Conference, and then the Vice-President, Olin Krehbiel, of the Berne, Indiana, congregation, read a paper on "The Training and Recruiting for the Ministry. Among the practical suggestions he made were the need of youth mission bands, and more power to the Placement Committee for complete information on all young men interested and available for Christian work, and finally the suggestion that every Christian worker spend at least one term in Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School.

The final feature of the opening program was the presentation of the preliminary report of the Coordinating Committee by Henry A. Fast of Newton, Kansas, the Chairman of the Committee. Following special music by Rev. Marvin Dirks of the Seminary faculty, the meeting adjourned with prayer and benediction.

Throughout the day on Wednesday approximately fifteen committees were in session. On Wednesday evening another joint evening session of the Boards was held. The devotional service was under the direction of Rev. Henry Hege of Corn, Oklahoma. The seminary choir sang two numbers, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is" and "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord." At the suggestion of D. J. Unruh, Newton, Kansas, special prayer was held for Homer Leisy, of Oregon who is seriously ill at this time and Mrs. G. A. Linscheid who has suffered a stroke in Newton. Later in the Conference announcement was made of her death.

It was at this meeting that A. S. Rosenberger of Dalton, Ohio, announced that S. F. Pannabecker was the new President of Mennonite Biblical Seminary. H. A. Fast then announced the Mennonite World Conference to be held August 4 to 10 at Goshen, Indiana, and in Newton, Kansas. Following this he read thirty questions concerning possible changes in the constitution of the General Conference. These questions were part of a "Progress Report" of the Coordinating Committee. Because of the expanding work of the Conference, it is inevitable that there will be readjustments in the organizational arrangement of the various committees and boards. No action was taken since it was merely a matter of raising the issue. Following this meeting a special reception was held for the guests in the parlor of the main seminary building at 4614 Woodlawn.

The following day Paul Goering of the National Service Board in Washington reported on the latest legislative developments of interest to Mennonite people. Other meetings of interests held during the Conference included the Committee on the Mennonite Encyclopedia and the Committee on the Mennonite World Conference and the Curriculum Committee. Three officials from the Scottdale headquarters of the Old Mennonites were present, including C. F. Yake, A. J. Metzler, and Paul Erb.

The closing joint evening session was held Thursday, February 19. This session was primarily devoted to matters of budget. It appears that the total budget of the various General Conference Boards will be approximately $950,000. The only board to remain in session on Friday was the Foreign Mission Board which had a vast number of items on its agenda in the light of its work all over the world. It adjourned its meetings on Friday noon.

A number of General Conference leaders stayed over in the city Friday and Saturday for meetings of the Mennonite Central Committee including the Peace Section, the Refugee Committee, and the Executive Committee.

The sessions of the Council of Boards were held in the St. James Methodist Church; whereas, the evening joint sessions were held in the offices of the Seminary itself. The meals were served by the women of the Mennonite Bible Mission in the cafeteria of the church.

Dr. S.F. Pannabecker New Pres. Of Mennonite Biblical Seminary

by Don E. Smucker

Chicago, Illinois, February 21.—S. F. Pannabecker has been named as President of Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School succeeding the late Abraham Warkentin, it was announced at the Council of Boards session here in Chicago this week.

A native of Michigan, Dr. Pannabecker was educated at Bluffton College, Garrett Biblical Institute, and Yale University, receiving the Ph.D. degree from the latter institution in 1944. His thesis at Yale was on the development of the General Conference and is to be published as a book by the General Conference Publication Board. He spent two terms of service in China under the General Conference Mission Board and later returned to that nation as Director of Relief for the Mennonite Central Committee. He is President of the General Conference Historical Committee, a member of Foreign Mission Board, and serves as Associate Editor of Mennonite Life.

Dr. Pannabecker came to the Seminary in the fall of 1946 to work with Dr. Warkentin in the second year of the Seminary. During those last months of Dr. Warkentin's life, he was privileged to be intimately associated with him. It is his plan to carry on the great vision which the first President of the institution had.

Dr. Pannabecker's wife is Sylvia Tschantz Pannabecker, formerly of Dalton, Ohio, and his children are Robert and Alice Ruth of Bluffton College, and Richard of Roosevelt College, Chicago.

The Seminary rejoices in having a successor officially named to this position.

here is a stake to be driven firmly into the bedrock of our foundation, Jesus Christ.

The stake of CHRISTIAN EDUCATION is not permanent enough. The Sunday School can do better; teachers should have some training to do their best work. The whole program of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, religious day school programs, our church colleges, and now our seminary should be firmly anchored in Christ.

(March 20 another Daily Vacation Bible School Workshop will be held on the Bethel College Campus)

We need to strengthen our BIBLICAL TEACHING program. We have been neglecting some of the great principles of our faith. The fundamental principle of love must be put in its rightful place. The ideals of Peace have slipped somewhat. Our teaching of the simple life has become involved and complicated. We need to build solidly on the biblical teachings of our Lord and not on some strange interpretations and "isms" of man's imaginations.

But these various goals cannot be attained unless the stake of PERSONAL COMMITMENT AND CONSECRATION is driven deeply into the foundation of Christ. A personal experience with Him; a full commitment to Him and His cause; the practice of prayer and of love and His full way of life, all this is fundamental. The lengthening of cords and the strengthening of stakes begins in us as individuals. Always we need to seek these great goals "that in all things He might have the preeminence." We cannot go farther until we go deeper.

Various ministers of the Ministerial Association lead this Bible study. We now have pre-prayer services before our Christian Endeavor. The Women's Mission Society is gathering clothing for relief. After the program the young people gathered in the basement of the church for a Kaffee-Abend. The object of such a Kaffee-Abend is to keep the young people together, give them an opportunity to become acquainted, and to make them feel at home. This is a recent experiment of the C. E. committee and should prove especially helpful to those who are new in the city. The entertainment is usually voluntary, and therefore does not lack variety. The food for such an evening is supplied by the young people.—Justine Hildebrand, Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: Rev. Howard G. Nyce, executive secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, held meetings here on February 13, 14, and 15. Reverend Nyce had just come from the Hopi mission field in Arizona and stopped here en route to Chicago where he was to attend the Council of Boards meeting. Rev. H. P. MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

[For a write-up of the General Conference Council of Boards sessions, which were recently held at the Seminary, see another part of this paper.]

Miss Liu Kuei-ying has arrived from China and is now located in the Seminary. She was able to come to many of the board meetings and hence a great many conference leaders had the joy of greeting her upon her arrival in this country.

Recruiting trips on behalf of the Seminary will be made to Bluffton and Bethel Colleges soon by S. F. Pannabecker and Don. E. Smucker.

Walter H. Dyck addressed the Vesper Service on February 15 urging a careful consideration of the Biblical teaching on the second coming. He declared that Mennonites have done fairly well in regard to the faith aspect of the Gospel and the love teaching of the Gospel but had tended to ignore the blessed hope. He cautioned against fantastic interpretation and forced exegesis, but he declared that the second coming was a basic part of Biblical teaching. Brother Dyck referred to some of the special problems in connection with the tribulation and the rapture and suggested a positive solution.

Ray Schlichting of the M.C.C. in Akron addressed the bi-monthly fellowship meeting on February 20, presenting splendid pictures of his recent tour through Paraguay.

Among the Council of Boards visitors who inspected the buildings of the Seminary was Julius Franz of Lind, Washington, one of our buildings is called "Franz Hall" named after this family of generous stewards in this far western state.

Mimeograph machine, we are again able to have Sunday bulletins.—Mrs. Willard Wiebe, Corr.

He planned to be in Caldwell, Idaho, Sunday, February 15, and then go to Chicago for the General Conference Council of Boards Session February 17-19.—Mrs. John W. Claassen, Corr.

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Rev. Andrew Shelly, Kitchener, Ontario, was a guest in our pulpit February 15 for both morning and evening services. The High School Y-Teens have their annual part in the program with devotions and special music. Rev. Shelly addressed the young people on the topic "Youth's Best for God's Highest."—Mrs. N. L. Hoffnungsau Church Was Familiar Landmark

by Albert Gaeddert, Pastor

The Hoffnungsau Church had become a familiar landmark in the community. Built in 1898, it had stood for fifty years. To witness its disappearance in angry, consuming flames, which could in no way be brought under control, was disquieting to say the least. Records would reveal how many souls have been baptized in its sanctuary, but these have not yet been tabulated. Records would not reveal the number who have been under the sound of the Gospel in its halls and in its Sunday school rooms.

It was the church home for a group of people who came from South Russia in 1874. As soon as their farm homes were under construction, the settlers took steps also to provide a church home. For a short time they worshipped in the Immigrant House provided by the railroad company. Then it was destroyed by fire. A mud brick building was next constructed. This housed the congregation, until in the 1890's provisions were completed to erect a new building, and in 1898 the church was dedicated. It was built for the total sum of $7,000. In the frame structure were huge supporting timbers measuring at least twelve inches by fourteen inches, which alone would cost more today than the total structure of 1898. The pattern of construction was modeled after the Mennonite churches of Russia, and they in turn dated back to the Holland Mennonite church buildings. On three sides the church had a balcony. There were two pulpits, the upper one designed to be used when the balcony was filled.

Insurance to the amount of $11,000 was carried. This covered only a small portion of the loss. Plans are under way for the building of a new structure, and as soon as agreements can be reached with the architect, the building program will begin.

The membership of the congregation to date stands at 365. Not all of these members live nearby to avail themselves of the service opportunities. This church is also the parent of two daughter churches, the Inman and Buhler Mennonite churches, and at least one of these is practically as large as the parent congregation.

We are grateful for the work that has been accomplished in and through this building, and it is our hope that the great eternal values will not have been extinguished with the flames.

Alcoholics Anonymous expects that at least 20-000 new members will be added to the roster of the organization this year to lift the total to more than 80,000. It was reported at the first international convention of this organization that 95% of its members have regular employment.

held at the Alexanderwohl Church near Goessel, Kansas. An annual church directory was recently completed and distributed. Among other items of interest, it contains the names of committee members and officers and a schedule of special offerings for the year. "The Young Married Group" is the official name selected by the young couples' organization of the two churches. They had as speaker Mrs. Willis Rich of North Newton, Kansas.—Mrs. Elbert Koontz, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Churches in and around Hydro are practicing an Easter cantata under the direction of Rev. Waldo Kaufman, our pastor. The program is sponsored by the Hydro Chamber of Commerce.—Corr.

—Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Schmidt of Newton, Kansas, left the United States on February 27 for Paraguay. Dr. Schmidt, who has had machinery for a cotton seed oil plant shipped to Paraguay, will supervise construction and beginning operations of the plant. Besides being interested in helping the Paraguayan Mennonites in the line of industry, Dr. Schmidt is interested in medical care among them, having served them as doctor some years ago. Mrs. Schmidt will be available for help in church work. They hope to return by June 1.

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Shultz celebrated their golden wedding anniversary February 22, a program was given in the church in the afternoon. Lunch was served in the church basement after the program. The mission workers' project for the month was making baby blankets for relief and rolled bandages for the hospital in Africa. Fourteen baby quilts were made. Mrs. Susanna Rudiger, our oldest church member, passed away February 9, at the age of eighty-four. She was a charter member of our mission society, organized in 1905. —Daisy Rudiger, Corr.

Voth, whose departure for China has been delayed several times due to unsettled conditions there, plans to leave for his field of service in the near future. In explaining his desire to return to war-torn China at this time, even though it means separation from his family, Rev. Voth mentioned the personal call to win souls, the great need for the Gospel in present-day China, and the inspiration of loyal Chinese Christian workers who carry on in spite of overwhelming difficulties. Book Notes

THE CHURCH OF OUR FATHERS

Roland H. Bainton, Scribners, 1941, $2.50

"Reformers Reformed" is the title of the chapter under which the author, a teacher of church history at Yale Divinity School, discusses the origin of the Mennonites in this book which portrays the glorious history of the Christian Church in the language that youth can understand. The book is said to have been written by the father under the guidance of his children—guidance in so far as they were the test as to whether he was getting down to the level of youth.

It is a pleasant surprise to note the comparatively large amount of space given to Mennonites in the history of the whole Christian Church in a volume of such brief scope; thus the book can be of real service as an aid to getting the true perspective of Mennonitism in the total picture of church history.

Of course, the chief concern of the book is the vivid portrayal of the history of the whole church. The author wisely uses many interesting incidents to make the story life for youth. The book is profusely illustrated but always with pictures or drawings of the very time under discussion.

Alert pastors will investigate this book as a possibility for youth groups or classes in church history. Parents who want the best for their children on the background of the modern church will find a place in their library for this volume.

(Incidentally, the author of this book is the editor of the set of slides entitled "The Panorama of the Christian Church" which may be rented from the Bethel College Slide Service for use by groups studying the books.)

The book, The Church of Our Fathers, may be ordered through our General Conference book stores.

In Search of Early Egyptian Pottery

Anis Charles Haddad

Cut courtesy Youth's Christian Companion

I have never dug for gold or washed it either, but I witnessed the sifting of the sands of Egyptian ruins, and that, I imagine, is as fascinating and absorbing a task as any search for the precious metal.

In Egypt one has the feeling that every foot of ground is potential territory for excavation, but the particular location of any more serious description, if serious it may be called, were the ruins of Memphis, once the great queen city of Egypt.

A host of donkey drivers at once surrounded me upon my arrival at Bedrishin, a sweet little village some miles distant from Cairo, each showing rows of glistening white teeth and lauding, with an ingratiating smile, the virtues of the animal offered for hire. One donkey at once took my fancy because of the brass-studded saddle and gaudy saddle-bag. Today I blushingly admit that I am no judge of donkeys, for this one proved to be the slowest and least responsive creature I ever bestrode.

Anyway, as I ambled along toward the ruins of Memphis on the back of my chosen humble steed, I was only too glad to dismount, for the temptation to kick up the sand with my feet could no longer be resisted. In my imagination I could see myself stumbling over a stone with hieroglyphic inscriptions, or a gold bracelet formerly owned by an Egyptian queen.

As I walked along leisurely I peered into the catacombs of the ruins of buildings, centuries old. I climbed over mighty carved columns from old temples, now lying about in fragments. But what of my expectation of a find? It was rewarded. Yes, the sands gave up a much appreciated though broken lamp—Greek style—and a broken end of an Egyptian vase, decorated in colors. Insignificant though these objects may be to an archaeologist, to me they were a valuable addition to my amateur museum.

The early forms of pottery in Egypt were not often beautiful, but they had the honesty of purpose which prevented them from being ugly. There was certainly less temptation in those days to repeat the same forms. All the pottery being made by hand and generally without molds or templates, it was nearly as easy to invent a new form as to copy an old one; that is to say, the mechanical effort was not much greater, even though more mental effort was certainly required.

The shape of the best earthenware vessels may have been derived from those of the stone vases, of which numerous specimens are found in the earliest graves of the Neolithic period in Egypt. In fact it is probable that stone cups and vases were made soon after men learned to grind and polish their stone axes and other implements, possibly even before they learned how to make vessels of earthenware.

One indication of this is the fact that the earliest earthenware vessels never have handles. Later ones are found to have slight protuberances with a horizontal passage for the string by which they were suspended. This device was used in the earliest times for stone vessels on which it would have been difficult to carve a loop handle projecting freely from the body. For a vessel built up with ropes of clay, such would seem to be a simple enough contrivance, but it does not make its appearance until much later in the world's history, and even then it does not seem to have been accepted by the Egyptians. Being so conservative in their tastes, they may have preferred the clumsy old stone handle forms.

These early stone vases are chiefly in very hard stone, such as marble, basalt, and granite. They have fairly good geometrical forms although some are so ungainly and impractical that it is difficult to say why they were made. They range in size from a few inches to a foot or more in diameter. Their final shape seems to have been given by grinding them down with wet sand or emery and a small stone, much in the same way as hard stones are polished at the present time. Nearly the whole of the interior must have been hollowed out by the same method for not much inside chipping could be done with the poor implements at their disposal. Gentle hammering would have been risky, since they worked even the large vases down to a thickness of less than half an inch.

It is pleasant to find remains so surpassingly remarkable without having to buy false antiques. Let us climb alone a hill in that serene silence and half fear to enter the awful presence of some columns or to penetrate into the catacombs, as mysterious to us as to those of old, while our donkey quietly rests on a sandy plain where Memphis once was. Egypt is the favorite ground of the man who tirelessly hunts antiquity. Compared to Egypt, other lands and ruins are young and scant and tame. Everything invites the world hither, and one is indeed welcomed by the smiling landscape and never-saddening sun.—Youth's Christian Companion.

Youth Rally at Alexanderwohl Church

by Evelyn Goering

The Alexanderwohl, Tabor and Lehigh churches were host to the Western District Young People's Fellowship Youth Rally, which was held on February 8 at Alexanderwohl. The women's organization of the church served lunch to approximately 350 young people, after which a program including discussion pertaining to our district work in relaton to the Y.P.U. organization was presented. A film portraying the life of John the Baptist was shown in preparation for the personal consecration service that closed the services.

A genuine interest on the part of the young people was revealed by the excellent attendance, which included a group of fifty from Beatrice, Nebraska, who chartered a bus for this trip, and also a large representation from Oklahoma.

Major areas of interest and work in our district center around the acquistion of our retreat grounds, which we trust will soon be a reality, and work towards making our local C. E. organizations stronger and more efficient.

A Boy's Home in India

by Cornelius Das

Every person in this world is found under different environments. It is not so that he is born in that condition. But the environment changes, it does not remain in the condition.

In the same way there was a family in Saranger. The caste of that family was the meanest caste in India as it is considered. The forefather of that family also passed their days of life in Sarangar. Sarangar is a state. The state is also a good state. An ordinary king ruled there under the British Government. In that family there were many children. But after a period of time they all died; except one boy and one girl. After some time the father of that family died. I forgot to tell in the beginning that the family was an ordinary family. The family had got enough land to cultivate and to maintain their livelihood. After the death of the father, the mother told her son to marry. The son got married. The girl also got married. Gradually the mind of the boy changed and wanted to be a Christian. Whenever he put this matter in front of his mother, the mother replied, "Let me die first, I can not see you a Christian before me." By this answer the boy found himself unable to do anything. After some time the mother died.

After the death of the mother, her son went to Janjgir and wanted to take baptism. But when his wife knew his opinion, she ran away from that place. This was an obstacle for that man. But at the same time his wife realized that her husband was right and so she came back to her husband, and there took baptism with him.

In Sarangar these parents gave birth to four children, two girls and two boys. This family settled in Janjgir. Janjgir is a Tahsil. It is also a good place. There is a Christian church which contains over thirty families. It is separated in two parts. One is called Bhatapara and the other is called the Janjgir basti. This family lived in Bhatapara where the church is found. In Janjgir there is a great majority of the Hindu people. Gradually in this family four children again took birth; one daughter and three sons. When all the children grew up, then they were sent to study here and there. The parents were poor so they sent their children to study facing great home difficulties. After some time one girl died who was the smallest girl.

When the youngest child grew up then the parents sent him to study. The boy studied in Janjgir up to his fifth class graduation. After that he was sent for sixth class study to Jagdeesphur and there he passed his sixth and seventh class. And then for the eigth class he was sent to Kanker with his sister to study there. There he passed his eighth class. In the meanwhile the brothers and sisters of that boy finished their study and began to serve. Two brothers passed their high school and one other brother and the sisters began to serve. Till now one brother of that boy is studying. Like this the work of that family went on. When the youngest child finished his eighth class, he was sent to Jagdeesphur again to study in high school; and at last I wish to tell that I am Cornelius Das, that boy, and the parents are my father and mother and the other brothers and sisters are my brothers and my sisters, who come from this kind of environment.

What's Your Hurry?

by J. W. Benjamin

We live in a breathless world.

But let us "take time to be holy."

No doubt some of you still use that old pun, "Tempus fidgets." It certainly does. Time flies and fidgets. And even when we aren't actually doing anything, most of us keep doing.

You can't possibly appreciate the rare beauty of a perfect sunset unless you stop and look at it. You can't absorb the mood and the feeling of a beautiful painting unless you give it some study.

In our fast-moving age even fiction is geared for speed. Some years ago a popular magazine began putting at the top of each of its stories a line of type telling the reader just how long it would take to finish the yarn. That's just plain silly, it seems to me. Who wants to know how many minutes and seconds it will take to read a story? I have read some stories over and over again, and enjoyed them more each time. I can't imagine anyone who actually enjoys good reading using a time schedule.

Once, in a preface to one of his books, a great man wrote: "It will be easily believed that I am a fond parent to every child of my fancy, and that no one can ever love that family as dearly as I love them. But, like many fond parents, I have in my heart of hearts a favorite child. And his name is David Copperfield."

Do you think you can live with David Copperfield through the fascinating adventure of his life, meet and learn to know Dora and Agnes and Mr. Micawber and all the other characters who had the breath of life breathed into their fictional selves by the master novelist, Charles Dickens, and do it all at so many words per minute?

Yes, to appreciate fully, to enjoy, to understand anything worth-while we must devote to it adequate time.

Now if there is one thing that is worth-while it is our religion.

But, since time immemorial, man has had to guard against putting on his religion like a Sunday coat—just for Church.

God doesn't want that. God is with us always. Why don't we enjoy his companionship all the time? Why don't we let him share our joys as well as our sorrows?

Man, bundle of nerves that he is, insists on hurrying, is inclined to do even when he isn't doing.

In 1666, writing in prison, John Bunyan came to this conclusion: "I find to this day seven abominations in my heart." He listed them. The second on his list was: "Suddenly to forget the love and mercy that Christ manifesteth." Number four was: "Wanderings (of attention) and coldness in prayer."

Urged Moses, "Stand still, and see the salvation of Jehovah." That is still good advice.

No one suggests that you be a lazybones. But the next time you aren't doing anything how about not doing, if you get what I mean?

Did you ever have to give a Bible verse beginning with the initial of your name? Maybe that is why for years and years I have known and liked this one.

Let us read it together. Let us read it reverently. Let us read it with understanding. Let us take it to heart.

Let us stop, look, and listen.

Let us think.

"Be still, and know that I am God."

"In Respect to the Living"

An Editorial

What place has "viewing the remains" in the Christian funeral? Present practices range all the way from no viewing at all to making the viewing of the remains the culmination and for all practical purposes the climax of the service at the church.

Viewing, like many a time-worn custom connected with funerals, is a practice that is gradually losing its prominence, and it ought to. However, extreme care should be exercised in the process of eliminating such customs which have practically assumed the authority of canonical law. It should be remembered that people do not practice such customs merely for the sake of sustaining them; in their minds it is more often not a matter of right and wrong. Obviously, then, direct attacks on such customs, particularly in the very situation of death itself, may make it impossible to bring the one thing that these last tender services are intended to bring—strength and thoughtfulness concerning God and Life.

"In respect to the dead" is a phrase that has probably been the guiding principle in the planning of last rites to a much greater extent than is evident on the surface. This needs to be replaced by the Christian conception, "in respect to the living." This is the proper place to begin an evaluation of practices with respect to funerals—with basic principles. The real question should always be, will this strengthen and help the bereaved to take up life anew, not will this or that honor or disrespect the dead.

Let this approach be applied then to the problem under discussion — namely, the "viewing of the remains." A common custom of the past, though becoming more uncommon today, has been to conclude the service at the church with viewing, first by the congregation who file past the casket in view of the bereaved family and thence back to their seats, looking on as the immediate view the body for the last time. This practice has been modified by moving the casket to the rear of the church and having the congregation leave the sanctuary as they view. The family then is left alone as they view for the last time—a decided improvement over the first. A third alternative is that of having the family view the remains for the last time in the home right after the prayer service in the home and prior to the service at the church. The casket then is not opened after the service at the church; the Word is the climax not the viewing. A fourth alternative is that in which the family views for the last at noon before the funeral at which time the casket is taken to the church to lie in state until the time of the funeral when it is closed permanently. A fifth, and what may appear to be a very radical alternative is suggested by some—that of having a few friends assist the bereaved family in laying the body away immediately, apart from a public service, to be followed at some later time with a memorial service.

Now if death from the Christian point of view is like sleep as Jesus points out—that is, a temporary beneficial separation ("It is needful for you that I go away")—rather than a severing of a fellowship, then surely the practice of paying last respects, which involves much viewing with the casket central in the service, may well be called unchristian. Imagine the problem created for the minister who is asked to stand in the midst of the experience of death to bring a message of hope only to have the service climax around the casket, with weeping and despair. For the thoughtful pastor has in his calling at the bereaved home and the planning of the service tried to lead his people from the immediate shock of death, when tears flowed heavily, to a vision clear of God and Life ahead as the climax of the service in the Church. Is it consistent then to break open anew soul-wounds that the Word of God should have begun to heal by having viewing at any time after the services at the home or church have begun? Furthermore, it may well be asked, does not even the presence of the casket itself constitute a hindrance to the pastor as he seeks to turn the gaze of his bereaved people back to Life?

If any of the foregoing suggestions seem to have merit, the problem arises, how can they be incorporated in our present funeral practices or be substituted for them as the case may be? This is most difficult. Certain suggestions warrant some consideration. First, of course, the problem ought to be thought over by families without the pressure of the actual situation of death. The church can also do much by carefully planned Christian teaching on death and Life in the regular education program of the church; this in turn will cause people to seek the most Christian practices when death comes. They will seek the pastor's counsel who feels much freer to suggest when asked. Another procedure, indirect but effective, is that of commenting on favorable changes as they occur. Changes will always arouse discussion; this is the opportunity for the pastor and church leaders to guide the thinking of their people. Finally there have been those pastors who have felt so deeply about the problem of viewing after the service in the sanctuary that they requested the official board to forbid the practice in the interests of the Gospel.

Much or all of this discussion may prove to be very unacceptable to most people. But let one principle stand in the forefront: "If God is the God of the living then when death comes let us pay our respects to the living."

RUSSIA'S coup in Czechoslovakia and her appeal to Finland can be viewed as a continuation of her defensive reactions. It seems that just as individuals tend to react defensively when they feel that they are not understood or when they feel that their life goals are threatened, so nations tend to react defensively when they feel that others have little or no appreciation for what they consider as necessary and right. Nations, like individuals, need the feeling that someone does care for them. Along this line lies redemption, the discovery of the worthwhile beneath that which is objectionable. Jesus saw that enemies were particularly in need of such understanding and care. He declared, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." The Christian solution to American-Russian relations must lie in this attitude and not in the opposite.

FIRST things first is a Christian ideal which needs to be interpreted in relation to the present world situation. Christians are now sending millions of dollars annually to do relief work in Europe. Far more significant than this is the tremendous human suffering that has resulted from the last war. It makes good men say. "This must not happen again." But what is the Christian Church doing to keep something like this from happening again? Today blocks of power are forming themselves as in years gone by. Russia and the United States must learn to get along together or there may be a repetition of the awful suffering that mankind has gone through and is still going through. A major obligation of the Christian Church, it would seem, is that of working for peace between the United States and Russia. Is there any institution which can lead the way better than the Church? But what is the Church doing? Is it adequate? Or is it again a matter of too little and too late? If the Church won't show the way, who will?

MASS education seems to be losing out. One of our college presidents points out, " . . . . in America as a whole students are more inclined to seek entrance to the smaller colleges this year than they were last year." Recently a student from one of the state universities transferred to one of our colleges in order to continue his education at a smaller school. A writer of an article in a magazine for Methodist young people pleads for smaller classes in which the professor would talk less and give more opportunity for discussion with the students. It is becoming evident in education that Jesus' concern for the individual was right. Church colleges, with their concern for the individual, present distinct opportunities in this day of mass education.

Russia and the Command of Jesus

by M. S. Harder

During the summer months in the year 1874, several hundreds of Mennonite families emigrated from Russia to Kansas and other states of the Union. They were courageous and determined to face the hardships of pioneer life. They came with great hope and faith into a new land which promised what they were earnestly seeking. Leaving, often, father and mother, friends, and familiar surroundings, they faced those gnawing heartaches that only such separations bring in their wake.

Among these staunch pilgrims were my grandparents, the Johann Harder and the Andreas Flaming families. They came together on the same ship and they finished the last years of their life as next-door neighbors. It was my privilege to live near them for almost thirty years.

Grandmother Flaming, a saintly soul, told me much about her early life in Russia and the many hardships experienced since coming to this land. My first impressions of Russia were gotten from her, not from my geography book studied in the fifth grade. My grandmothers' attitude toward Russia was not vague or uncertain. She spoke of it with conviction. She didn't compliment it; she pronounced it untrustworthy and incurable.

I have discovered, again and again, that the viewpoint of my grandmother has been shared by most of the Mennonites whose background is Russian. It may be true that we, Mennonites, have a right to speak critically for we had experiences that linger in our memories which are frequently refreshed by new reports of Russian ruthlessness and barbarism.

American opinion is exceedingly critical of Russia today. Expressions of fear and hate are heard everywhere. As a Christian cultural group, what attitude should we take toward a nation that deals so unkindly with its fellowmen? What should we Mennonites say about the Russian situation that seems to disturb the world so?

In my history classes, we pursue the stories of all the nations in the world. Every nation has in its history such acts that must be described as corrupt, dishonest, and sinful. Even our own America cannot look back upon an undefiled record. One need but to call attention to the underhanded method employed to gain permission to build the Panama Canal across the Isthmus of Panama, or our stubborn unwillingness to free the negro slaves who toiled in our fields. All nations have sinned before God. Maybe we should say here, "He that is without sin you let him cast the first stone." And yet someone might contend that Russia cannot be compared to America; that her sins are so much greater. Jesus said, "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

As a student of history, I become very much disturbed at the behavior of nations. Nations act in ways never granted to individuals. Nations kill, nations steal, nations destroy that which doesn't belong to them. When individuals attempt to do likewise, they are taken in hand. Are there two different ethical codes, one for nations and one for individuals? It seems that I become disturbed over the conduct of a nation when I try to evaluate its behavior according to the same ethical standards that apply to individuals. Maybe we can't do that. Maybe nations and individuals do not conform to the same code of ethics.

Thousands of years ago, Moses, the great lawgiver, presented to the children of Israel the greatest code of laws that man had ever seen. This code is the true basis for man's whole structure of laws. Down through the ages this code has said, (1) Thou shalt have no other gods before me, (2) Thou shalt not kill, (3) Thou shalt not steal, and so on. These great ethical principles certainly apply to individuals, but do they also apply to nations? Nations don't seem to be concerned with the Ten Commandments.

It appears that nations adhere to another code of law, (1) Might makes right; (2) To the victor belong the spoils; (3) Land and natural resources belong to those who desire to exploit them; (4) The state is more important than God, human personality, conscience, or happiness. When such a code of ethics is considered, the behavior of Russia begins to make sense. She follows it conscientiously. She is consistent. Maybe the trouble is not with Russia, but the ethical standards she lives by.

In the march of civilization, man has solved many problems; man has achieved great things, but he has failed, it seems, to build high moral principles for group behavior. Until this failure is recognized and repaired, nations will be inhuman and deceitful.

For the first time man seems to attack this problem of group misbehavior. At the war criminals trials held in Germany and Japan, efforts are being made to place the guilt of nations upon certain leaders. These leaders are being tried as individuals according to the Ten Commandments. Indirectly the nations are on trial. Soon we may realize that individuals or nations must submit to one code. When "thou shalt not kill; thou shalt not steal," applies to nation too, we shall experience a new day in international relations.

Until nations have learned that they too must be ethical, we may hate, with an intense hate, brutality, ruthlessness, destruction, and deceitfulness evident everywhere but not Russians. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Having been indoctrinated at my grandmother's knees to mistrust the Russians, hearing daily of their methodical process of annihilation, I find the command of Jesus very difficult to practice, don't you?

Ten Trends in General Conference Publications

by B. Bargen

We look back over the path which Conference publications have traveled during the past two years and we note certain trends.

TREND NO. 1.—More publications. The Conference is publishing not only more copies of existing publications, but it is putting out more publications. The total increase in circulations during the last six months is about 4,238 copies, including both weekly and quarterly publications.

The YOUNG PEOPLE'S QUARTERLY is a new publication in part, as is also the INTERMEDIATE QUARTERLY, published co-operatively with the Mennonite Publishing House of Scottdale, Pennsylvania.

TREND NO. 2—Increases in both languages. This will be a surprise to some people. The total circulation of our German publications is increasing due to an increasing number of readers in Canada and in foreign countries. Total consumption of German quarterlies within the States is larger than it is in Canada, although we have a larger German reading population in Canada than we do in the States. This indicates that our Canadian people are not using exclusively Conference publications in the German language.

TREND NO. 3.—Diversified publications. Requests for certain types of books such as Pannabecker's book, "Mennonites in a New World," and THE POWER OF LOVE were requested directly from the Conference floor, or from various boards of the Conference. The HANDDBOOK FOR THE MENNONITE HYMNARY is a new venture in better church music which apparently is getting considerable support from many quarters. The new materials for the daily vacation Bible school, just being initiated and portions of which are scheduled to be ready for 1949, also were undertaken at the request of the Board of Education.

TREND NO. 4.—Shared costs. In years past, it was taken for granted that every publication had to pay for itself, or it wasn't going to be published. Now the trend is that books and periodicals with wholesome spiritual food must be made available, even though sales of these publications cannot be made to stand the entire cost.

TREND NO. 5.— Changes in format. The tendency is to use a little bit more color work, more pictures, more art work, more drawings etc., to make the material appeal more to the average reader.

TREND NO. 6.—More churches on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN. There has been an increase of 41 per cent in the number of churches on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN over the year 1946. There are now 74 churches out of a total of 240 belonging to the Conference who are on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN, which means that there are more people in Conference reading Conference news every week, on the assumption that all who get the paper read it.

TREND NO. 7.—More bookstores. Within the last two years, two new bookstores have been opened, both of which have been operating at a net profit—not a phenomenal profit, to be sure, but a profit—during the last six months. The combined profits of our bookstores exceeds the losses from our church publications which means that our bookstores are carrying Conference publications! (Shall a business carry a church?)

TREND NO. 8.—More articles by young people. Increasingly articles are being written by young people and more projects by young people's groups are noticeable in the pages of the MENNONITE. A keen interest by the young people in Canada, both in the English and the German papers is apparent.

TREND NO. 9.—Better styling. An increasing number of publications demands better editing and better styling in order that there may be a characteristic style and format for all publications coming out under the name of General Conference publications.

TREND NO. 10.—Increased publication-consciousness. Total gifts for publication have more than doubled. Gifts from individual contributors are increasing. Associate Editors look critically and creatively at everything that goes into our papers. A Curriculum Committee is working on materials for all age levels. In short: "The Word of God is not bound."

Can all this be summarized in a brief statement? We think it can:

The trend is toward a unified program by all groups and for all groups in the Conference, expressing and ministering to the felt needs of these groups in an effective manner. "The Word of God is not bound" as far as God is concerned, and our Conference, apparently is becoming increasingly resolved that it shall not be bound so far as our Conference is concerned. "Let it shine!"

What Is To Be Done in a Week of Witness?

Witnessing refers to a person's best way of bringing his friends to Christ. It means expressing one's love for Christ by leading others to think so highly of Jesus and the life He gives and represents that they also will desire to trust and follow the Lord.

In a Week of Witness different methods may be used. A person should decide in what way he can best influence his non-Christian friends and his weak fellow-Christians for Christ. The following suggestions may point out possibilities:

1. Make a list of all non-Christian friends in your community and pray for their salvation. List also the luke-warm and indifferent church members and pray for them.

2. Invite your non-Christian friends to worship services and to other special services that may be held. This also is a testimony. It speaks of your devotion to Christ and of your concern for your friends.

3. Make sure that those who come to your services will there receive a warm welcome and be made to feel at home.

4. As you have opportunity in private conversation, humbly but gratefully and cheerfully share with your friends what Christ means to you. Make sure your voice carries the note of gladness and gratitude. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."

5. Invite the family you feel needs encouragement over for supper or for the evening. Many people are hungry for love and fellowship. These, Jesus says, we are to invite over for a meal. Read, Luke 14:12-14.

6. If you know of any friends who are interested in the church and need further help, get your pastor into touch with them. If you yourself can help them, point out to them the wonderful promises of God and help them to put their trust in the Lord and in His word. Bring them into touch with God.

7. Let groups of people go out to other churches or to schools and share what Christ means to them. Let your church invite groups from neighboring churches to come to you with their witness. Many Christian people have inward struggles with fears, jealousies, hatreds, inferiority feelings, worries and unforgiving attitudes. Christian people who have found release from these things should share with others how they have found it. There is a place for a witness from Christian to Christian. People might be asked to give a witness before a catechism class.

8. Tracts may be given out with a word of testimony. When a tract is given out it should be done with a word on what the tract has meant to the one who gives it. It is then when the tract will be read and appreciated. Good evangelistic tracts may be ordered from Rev. J. J. Enz, Nappanee, Indiana.—THE EVANGELISM COMMITTEE

Churches Asked Not To Buy New Bible School Course this Year

by Joanna Andres

We are happy to announce that both the Board of Education and the Board of Publication, at a joint meeting in Chicago, voted that the new Summer Bible School Course, edited by the Old Mennonite Conference, should be adapted and made available to our churches through an edition of our own.

This course cannot be made available for 1948. Even the Old Mennonite Conference cannot supply their constituency with the entire run of courses for this year. They are hoping to be able to complete an alternative plan of courses for this summer's use and complete the series for 1949.

The Curriculum Committee of our conference has been charged to adapt this new course for our conference use. Such an adaptation is a necessary process, since the course as it is contains the conference activities of the Old Mennonite group. Where they have inserted their historical background, their mission work, their leaders, their varied other activities, we would like to insert ours. These are, however, only minor changes as the course is primarily Bible study material, and yet the changes necessary run through the courses and will involve quite a bit of technical work in the printing shop.

The Scottdale Publishing House sees the possibility of running our own edition of their course in an alternative course plan for 1949.

We are certain that this new course which has been a costly project for our sister conference, will be enthusiastically welcomed by our churches. We are anxious, however, that our churches wait until our own edition is completed, though in part, for 1949.

In the meantime, we suggest that the old Scottdale course which is still a good course, be used for this year, 1948.

NINE CATARACT OPERATIONS IN ONE AFTERNOON

Jagdeeshpur, via Raipur, C. P., India, February 21. —Dr. Herbert Dester has been treating many eye cases. He has had as many as nine cataract operations in one afternoon. The new dermatone was just the thing recently for treating a small child whose face and arms were badly burned. The skin is healing nicely. Barely had the new fracture table been unpacked recently when a patient with a broken leg was brought in. The little twelve-volt generator is supplying lights for the hospital, but that is about all. More power is needed for the hospital equipment. It is hoped that Willard Unruh will be able to build something for the generator so that it can be taken out of the storage room and set up for use. Mr. Unruh is now in Champa checking up on the electric wiring. Miss Elenore Schmidt, nurse, has been in charge of the sixty or more inpatients that the Desters have averaged daily since their return from America. It is hoped that an Indian doctor can soon be gotten to help in the hospital. The ambulance, which the Desters brought to India from America is still in Bombay. Willard Unruh may be able to get it to the mission station when he goes to Bombay after some luggage. Gasoline is still very hard to get. Last week someone set the strawloft afire in the school cattle grounds. The community had gathered for a meeting on the church compound, so the entire loft was in blazes before it was seen by the missionaries. Much straw was lost in the newly built cattle yard. A great deal of the tin can be used again. The Edward Burkhalters are now visiting the Jagdeeshpur station.

EPISCOPALIANS USE RADIO FOR RELIEF APPEAL

One million dollars for world relief was the goal set for 1,600,000 Episcopalians in the United States on February 29. An appeal was made for this by radio in all Episcopalian churches. Henry Knox Sherrill addressed Episcopalians over a nation-wide hook-up, which was carried into the local churches by radio receivers. It is believed that this was the first time that radio was used by any church in such a way to bring a message to the whole constituency at one time.

REFUGEE GROUP SAILS FOR PARAGUAY

February 24 will be long remembered by 860 Russian Mennonite refugees as the date upon which they left a land of persecution, cruelty, wandering, and suffering, and set sail toward a new homeland. After several delays, the SS General Heintzelman sailed from Bremerhaven at 4 p. m. on February 24, carrying 345 children under sixteen years of age, 286 women, and 229 men. Elfrieda (Mrs. Peter) Dyck is accompanying the group to serve as their leader. The ship is now on its way directly to Buenos Aires, where it should arrive soon after March 13.

John W. Warkentin and Martin Duerksen have been in Buenos Aires making plans for river passage from Buenos Aires northward to Paraguay for this group of immigrants. The entire group will settle in the Chaco area of Paraguay except for thirty-five who wish to go to Friesland and Volendam colonies in order to join close relatives there. C. A. DeFehr has recently gone into the Chaco to make further arrangements for receiving these immigrants. The general plan for their settlement is similar to that followed last year for the Volendam group. The new immigrants will be received by the older colonies and assisted until they are able to build their own houses and produce their own means of livelihood from the soil.

One vital phase of this resettlement work is the Tools-for-Paraguay Project which has been in progress for the past few months among the churches of North America. It is hoped that through this means a substantial amount of equipment can be supplied to these people, with which they can establish themselves and make a living in Paraguay.

1,500 MENNONITES TO GO TO PARAGUAY

Conservative Canadians Will Emigrate Lest Children Become Worldly, Conscription Be Imposed

WINNIPEG, Man., Feb. 16.—Fifteen hundred Mennonites from the Canadian prairies, the majority from Manitoba, have chartered a steamer to take them to new homes in Paraguay. They will sail from Quebec about the middle of May. These Mennonites are from the extremely conservative section of their group. Their desire for a primitive life is so strong that they are taking only the crudest agricultural implements, with oxen to use as farm power. In Canada they find their children becoming too "worldly." They are apprehensive, too, lest a coming war bring conscription. Paraguay is offering them special privileges, including exemption from the conscription, taxes, attendance at Paraguayan schools and learning Spanish.—"Christian Century"

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Walter Gering, Moundridge, Kansas, was the chapel speaker February 26. He was the pre-Easter service speaker at the First Mennonite Church during that week. Rev. Harry Yoder spoke in the Goodland, Indiana, Mennonite Church, Sunday, February 29. He is contacting prospective students in the Illinois and Iowa territory. The Mozart Vocal Trio appeared as the fourth number of the College Concert Series March 3. Rev. C. E. Kerr, Smithville, Ohio, is to be the Vesper speaker March 14. He is director of Boys' Village at Smithville. This is a new venture patterned somewhat after Boys' Town in Nebraska.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Our student home was the scene of many activities during the past week. A number of visitors were received on their journey through Winnipeg. Among them were Rev. A. E. Kreider of Goshen, Indiana, and Elmer Ediger of Akron, Pa. Both spoke to our student body on several occasions and served the Bethel Mission Church with messages on Sunday morning and evening.

On Thursday three church groups from the surrounding communities sent in shipments of produce and canned goods. These commodities are taken in at the home under the supervision of Jacob Franzen and from there dispersed to the different student groups, living in private homes.

During the first week of March the Manitoba Minister's Conference will be held in the College. Dr. C. Krahn of Bethel College and Dr. J. H. Janzen of Waterloo have been secured as speakers for this occasion. We anticipate a very rich week in fellowship and study with these leaders of our Conference.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Last Wednesday Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur Hieb of Marion were campus visitors. The Hiebs just recently returned from Germany where they were stationed for nineteen months with the occupation forces. Dr. Hieb presented a vivid picture of present conditions in Germany. Mrs. Hieb, the former Sally Tieszen, is a Freeman graduate.

Miss Kaufman has selected the College Play to be given early in the spring quarter. The play selected is "The Magnificent Obsession" by Lloyd C. Douglas.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The third number in the Memorial Hall Series was a concert on March 1 by the Little Philharmonic Orchestra of Chicago, directed by George Shapiro. On March 20 the final program of the series will be presented by the Westminster Choir. Eighteen faculty members and wives attended the inter-school meeting of four Kansas church-related colleges—Kansas Wesleyan, Bethany, McPherson, and Bethel—held this year at Salina on February 28. The faculties of Bethel and Hesston Colleges will meet in the Student Union Room on March 3 for an evening of fellowship and getting-acquainted. The second quarter closes at 5:00 p. m. on Wednesday, March 3, after two days of final examinations. The spring quarter opens the following Monday Morning. During the recess between terms the Student Volunteers will send out two Gospel teams, the one to western Kansas and Colorado and the other into Oklahoma and Texas.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Another step in the development of Mennonite Biblical Seminary as an important center of Mennonite life in the city of Chicago was taken this week when the Home Mission Board and an interested friend of the institution joined to purchase a ten-room house on 1228 E. 46th Street. This house which is available for immediate occupancy will primarily serve the non-seminary students who increasingly are living in this general community, thus providing a vital center of Mennonite life. One of the difficulties in purchasing buildings in this neighborhood has been to gain occupancy. In this case all the rooms are vacant, and most of them will be occupied immediately.

President-elect Pannabecker has returned from Bethel College where he interviewed prospective students for the year 1948-9. While in Newton he attended a meeting of the budget committee of the Foreign Mission Board of which he is a member.

Last Sunday a group of people living here was hastily gathered to informally greet Dr. Herbert Schmidt and his wife who stopped in Chicago en route to Paraguay. The Seminary family were given some particulars of his mission to Paraguay both in connection with medicine and the economic development of the colony.

The third term of this school year will start on March 9. Four new students are expected at this time —Ellwyn Hartzler who has just returned from an M.C.C. assignment in Puerto Rico; he is a graduate of Bluffton College. Other new students will be Robert Hartzler who is a graduate of Goshen College and

Farewell

After long waiting, hoping and praying it seems the Lord is opening the way for my return to China. "Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him . . . . commit thy way unto the Lord . . .and He shall bring it to pass." It is in that confidence that we believe the Lord is leading me to return to China.

Christ's injunction, "go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," is as vital as when first spoken.

Many friends, who are also truly interested in missions, have asked us, "Why go to China now under such uncertain conditions?" Those conditions do not minimize the need. If anything it would enhance the need for bringing a Gospel of redemption and hope.

There is a challenging need in China today. Only one out of one thousand are of the Christian faith. From numerous sources come reports of open doors for the Gospel and of many meetings with thousands attending. An example of the real desire to know Christ is seen in the group of forty eager to come to instruction class in a village near Kaifeng in spite of the persecution around them.

In the world crisis today I believe God wants to speak to all of His children again as He spoke to Moses when He said, "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward." May God increase our faith! This mission enterprise is the task of the whole Church. Therefore, if we ask in His Name He will answer "and bring it to pass." It is with real joy that I return to this phase of the Lord's work, even as we also found much joy in both church and school work at home.

Remember those of our family who bear a large share in making my going possible. We heartily thank you for your intercession for the work and for us. May the Lord richly bless all of you as we work together for our beloved Saviour who delights to answer prayer. Dr. Dixon once said: "When we depend on man we get what man can do . . . . when we depend on God we get what God can do."

Sailing date is March 12 on the S. S. General Meigs of the American President Lines, San Francisco, California.—W. C. Voth.

Those Who Have Died

(The reporting of all deaths in the General Conference is the new policy of The Mennonite in regard to death notices. To make this possible such notices will have to be brief. Forms for reporting deaths are being sent to all ministers. They ask for such vital facts as: the name, residence at time of death, life work or profession, name of church of which member, date of birth and date of death. It is expected that the minister (not the correspondent to The Mennonite) will fill out such a report form as soon as he secures the necessary facts. This should make for promptness in reporting.)

Jottings

—Mennonite churches in Brazil and in Paraguay have united to form the Conference of Mennonite Churches of South America, according to a letter by G. G. Neufeld. The action was taken at a unique conference held February 9, by ministers of churches in Brazil and Paraguay. The leaders of the conference are: Elder David Koop, Curitiba, and Elder A. A. Harder, Friesland. The conference includes churches in Bazil and in the new and old settlements of Fernheim, Paraguay, the new settlement Volendam, and also Friesland. Rev. Neufeld recently went to South America to work among the Mennonites there. He was sent by the Canadian Conference and the General Conference.

—The United Mennonite Church, Waterloo, Ontario, paid a tribute to their beloved minister and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Janzen, by celebrating their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on the afternoon of February 21. Reverend Janzen helped organize the United Mennonite Church of Waterloo, and other United Mennonite churches throughout Ontario, and at one time was bishop of all of these churches. The Janzens came to Canada late in 1924. After organizing the Waterloo Church during the years 1925-1926, he became its pastor and also served the churches at Leamington and Vineland. This he did until 1935, when he was appointed by the General Conference to open a mission in Vancouver, British Columbia. Today their son-in-law and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Wiens, serve this flourishing congregation. In 1938, the Janzens returned to Waterloo and again took up the work in the church. Suffering ill health for some time, Reverend Janzen tendered his resignation last fall. As a gesture of esteem and friendship, the congregation decided to celebrate, with Reverend and Mrs. Janzen, their Silver Wedding Anniversary After a program in the afternoon a sumptuous supper was served by the young people to some 250 people. At this time, some presents were given to the celebrants. The Ladies Aid gave Mrs. Janzen a coffee table and the congregation gave to the couple an electric refrigerator. Good will messages and greetings were extended from surrounding Mennonite churches. Another program was given in the evening. Reverend Janzen is well known as a teacher, lecturer, and writer. He has had good success in poetry. Some of his books have been used as text books and some are still in use in Sunday schools. He has been in demand as a guest speaker, not only by our Mennonite people, but also by service clubs and other organizations. The Janzens have established a wide circle of friends. Word has been received that Henry H. Epp, of British Columbia, and now a student at Bethel College, has accepted the call extended by the congregation and will arrive here early in March. —H. P. THE READER SAYS

The Origin and History of the Now Called Mennonite Church

Editor, The Mennonite

The writer of the article, General Conference position in regard to U.M.T., in The Mennonite of February 10, said that the origin of the church now called "Mennonite" was in Friesland, small province of Holland.

The fact is, that the Baptist-Minded were called by duchess Anna of Ostfriesland "Mennisten," to distinguish them from the more numerous fighting Anabaptists, which she drove out of her country. The Anabaptists were condemned in 1528 by the Emperor and Reichstag of Germany, all Anabaptists should be beheaded or drowned. Our forefathers never called themselves Anabaptists, but in Switzerland Taeufer, Baptizers, or in Holland Baptist-minded. Menno was a Catholic priest and became a Baptist-minded, preaching very sharp against the Anabaptists, to which his brother belonged.

Do YOU EVER USE A MIRROR?

Do you ever use a mirror to find out what you are like? There are different kinds of mirrors. Maybe you are one of the General Conference Mennonite families of Marion County, Kansas, which has not made use of a mirror that is just in the process of manufacture. We refer to a questionnaire which you received some time ago from Prof. I. G. Neufeld, of Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas.

This questionnaire can become a mirror for you in this sense. If you answer the questions asked and return it to Professor Neufeld, he will compile the results of 1,200 such questionnaires and then mail out some conclusions to the various churches in the county, which conclusions will also be of interest to the members of these churches. In other words, through such a survey of Mennonite families in Marion County, the families themselves can get a better idea of what they are like by comparison with the final results of the questionnaire.

Wouldn't you enjoy knowing more about yourself as a Mennonite family? If you would then fill out the questionnaire sent you by Professor Neufeld and return it to him just as soon as possible.

A Book on Evangelism

CHOOSE YE THIS DAY by Elmer G. Homrighausen, The Westminster Press Philadelphia, 1943.

"The present crisis in life demands Christ; it demands an evangelism for the regeneration of national character through converted individuals." This statement is typical of this Princeton Seminary Christian Education professor's insistence upon a radical return in the church to an evangelism with sound foundations. The author is not among those who brush aside lightly mass evangelism, but he warns that it must be carried on, on a deeper basis. Nor is he among those who decry educational evangelism wholeheartedly, but at the same time he warns this group concerning the failure to lead the individual to responsible decision—the basic evidence of spiritual maturity. This last point is one of the basic theses of the book from which the author argues the need for a return to evangelism on a church-wide and personality-wide basis; not merely a return to the traditional protracted meetings in which only one phase of the Gospel—life after death—was preached.

His approach is scriptural. Says he, "For our strategy we shall have to go to the New Testament in order to find a Gospel which really made men Christian and made them serious about winning others for Christ in a concrete way."

In teaching the Gospel to children he has these refreshing words, "If we would teach Christianity to our children, we cannot ignore the facts of sin and redemption. We dare not teach one kind of Christianity to the child another kind to the adult." But he also warns against shortcuts child evangelists are prone to take.

This book may well be considered a "must" for ministers and church leaders as they plan for the annual Week of Witness during Holy Week.—Jacob J. Enz

IT WORKS

A class of high-school seniors in Los Angeles took a pledge to give the Golden Rule a ten-day trial at home. Their families were not to know anything about it. When the ten days were up, the Golden Rulers reported their triumphs.

"At first," wrote one boy, "I was just waiting for the ten days to be up so I could knock the socks off my sister. But as the days went on, I started to think differently. My parents were amazed I could be so generous and thoughtful." In another school, a little girl who had been fiercely anti-Japanese wrote a theme on tolerance. "If a Japanese came to my school," she said, "and asked me for a pencil, I wouldn't say no."

Youth News from the Churches

A section of Mennonite Youth is being set apart to share ideas, plans, and news from the church youth groups. Each society is urged to submit reports and ideas to this section. Such sharing will strengthen the Christian fellowship of each and all.

Crusaders Raise $3,225

Approximately 200 participated in the fifth annual Crusade season at the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario. This six months season of the church was climaxed with a Harvest Festival in the fall. During the six month period, members of the church engaged in money raising projects which were divided into six divisions and which netted an income of $3,225.16 this past year. This method of raising money through projects was begun in 1943 with a children's project which yielded $275.

The divisions this year were as follows:

1. Busy Bees — $122.05. Mostly children doing odd jobs, minding babies, running errands, carrying papers and giving part of allowances.
2. Potatoes — $176.05. A co-operative young people's project. A farmer donates the use of the land and farm equipment. The young people do the work.
3. Paper-magazines — $128. Boys collect old paper and magazines. This is bundled and sold in bulk.
4. Livestock — Poultry — $571. This is an attempt at coordinating cooperation between city and farm and farm children. A city man cooperates with a farmer in assisting the children in the projects.
5. Lord's Acre — $350. Farmers not engaged in any of the other projects give an acre of grain.
6. Lord's Hour — $1,360.30. All wage earners in factories, stores, offices, etc., are asked to give their first hour's pay each week for the six-month Crusader period.

The balance of $517.76 represents special offerings.

A Young People's Fellowship

The young people of Delft, Minnesota, have organized a "Young People's Fellowship." The description of their group is made by Herbert Fast, secretary-treasurer, as follows: "We as a group of young people felt the need of getting together and enjoying Christian fellowship more often than we had been doing. We formed a fellowship organization, and we called it the Delft Young People's Fellowship. Any person from Junior High School age and up who comes to our organization automatically becomes a member of the group. Our committee consists of a president, secretary-treasurer, three committee members and an adult leader.

"Our organization meets once a month. The programs for the year are divided into three groups: a program in the church just for the members, a social in the form of recreation, and a program by the members to which we would invite everyone. We plan to follow this schedule in rotation throughout the year.

"Our first meeting in January was a surprise program just for the group. The president, who had charge of the meeting, called on certain groups or individuals to render a special number in song or whatever they were called on to do. It was greatly enjoyed by everyone. Our next meeting was at the home of one of the members where we had a skiing party after which refreshments were served."

Clouds in the Sky

The winds of March suggest a change is being made. From the numb cold of the winter season, to the balmy days of May, the season must change and March is that change. The winter sky with its wisps of clouds high in a blue sky changes to fluffy billows of clouds all woolly and white always suggesting green things and flowers below. Clouds in the sky. How delightful, how welcome! How tiring it would be to have nothing but a sharp blue sky day in and day out. Never a change. Always the same brilliant, cold blue! Clouds in the sky. Clouds suggesting a spring rain and wet, green things growing out of the wet earth.

They speak of clouds in our lives, too, you know. Clouds are said to be trouble—something we don't like. But, perhaps the clouds are what make us grow. Without the clouds, we may be a cold lifeless blue. With the clouds we may become warmth and life and sympathy and love. Each of us have clouds in our sky—how will we look at them? Will the clouds in our sky serve us?

The Church House

There it stands, a simple wooden structure in an inconspicuous location. To the persons who do not know this building it is insignificant, and they are unaware of the power and might imbedded in this modest architectural structure. To the persons who are members of this Church it is a symbol of the Glory of God, for all the goodness He has done unto us. It is the nucleus around which our daily life revolves.

The people of the Mennonite Church have suffered many hardships in the past and will probably have more sufferings in the future. Our strong faith in our religion has been the invincible craft that was able to withstand the worst of storms. Our Pilot was the best obtainable. Our doctrine is the same as it was hundreds of years ago. We have retained many old customs, they are a part of our heritage, a part of each and every one of us. Although our customs will change, the Spirit of our ancestors will remain with us forever.

Many baptisms, weddings, and funerals have taken place in this white house of worship. As children we attended Sunday school in this Church; with the passing of years we attend the Church service, we are taught religion which has shown our people how to lead a highly moral and religious life.

We are all Christians so let us live up to the reputation of this name. Let us be a symbol of our Church in the world. The sincerity of our faith should be shown by our daily deeds, not by word of mouth alone. If our language should change it would not alter our faith. It is our faith not our language that has made us strong.

Let us call to our Creator in the humble hour of prayer to strengthen our faith in him forever and ever.—The Silent Reporter

Hold Peace Institute

A Peace Institute with representatives from the Mennonite Brethren, the (Old) Mennonites, the Holdeman church and the General Conference church was held at Eden Mennonite Church. The following is a brief report of the Institute.

The Mennonite Peace Institute held at the Eden Mennonite Church at Moundridge, Kansas, on February 14, was attended by more than 250 young people, ministers, and youth leaders. There was keen interest in the discussions on present-day applications and nonresistance. Special speakers included Frank Peters, J. W. Fretz, and H. A. Fast. Others participating included Albert Gaeddert, John P. Duerksen, Waldo Janzen, Evan Oswald, Ralph Lehman, Erwin Goering, Jesse Kauffman, Walter Gering, Waldo Hiebert, Arnold Funk, George Claassen, James Rutschman, Harold Duerksen, Frank Ventura, and Noah Leatherman.

One of the emphases in the Institute was "Christ the Center of All Peaceful Living." Definite need was expressed for more clear-cut thinking on the practical implications of our nonresistant faith in this present day.

My Village in India

by Nicodemus

Rev. John T. Neufeld
4215 South Rockwell Street
Chicago, 32 Illinois

The village from which I come is known as Dongonia. I spent my childhood in this village. As far as I know my father is not the bonafide resident of this village or community. My father says that his forefathers came there from a district called Udain. This district is in Orissa.

My grandfather was a Christian and he did not tell us anything about his Christianity. Before we became the members of the Mennonite church we were Baptists. Our each and every connection was with the Baptist people. But due to some reason we were handed to the Mennonite mission.

In my village the bulk of the people are Christian. Perhaps, 75 per cent of the people are Christian. The others are Aghariya, Kond, Binjhwar, etc. It is a small village, but never-the-less there is unity among the people.

Because the number of the Christians is bigger than that of the Hindus in my village, all the people have a peculiar situation. The Hindus accept the opinion of the Christians in any matter and hence the opinion of the Christians prevails. All the people decide the matters collectively, and hence there is hardly any necessity for the inspection of the police. For one thing I am proud is that there is not a single criminal in my village. I did not find any theft since my birth. For this reason I thank the Lord.

As far as wealth is concerned, my village people are little bit poorer, but they are satisfied. The Agharias (a farmer caste) are farmers. Among the Christians some are farmers and some are weavers. Roughly speaking all the people are weavers. They have little land which can not provide them or can not meet their needs for the whole year. For four months they till the fields and for the other eight months they devote themselves to weaving.

The health condition of my village people is not so good. In the rainy season, due to clay soil, the earth is muddy. In the pitches mosquitoes are produced, and they cause sickness to the people. The mud gives offensive smell which is detrimental. Again the houses are built close together so the air is not fresh always.

For the education of the villagers there is a primary school. Two teachers are engaged there.

The above is the brief history of the condition of my village. Now I wish to write a few sentences about myself.

I was born in 1927. In my childhood I fell sick, but God saved me. I passed my Oriya (language) primary there and had my plan to go to Balamgir for high education. I went up to Kena. There I heard the news of my little brother who was terribly sick. I lost my chance but I joined the Hindi school of Girola and was admitted in the third class. After that I came to Jagdeesphur to study in the fourth class. Here I studied up to the eighth class and after that I spent one year in teaching in my village. Then again I joined the school line and by the grace of God I am studying in the matric class. God is merciful. He has brought me up to this standard. I am ever thankful to Him.

CORRECTION: The budget of the Emergency Relief Board is not $1,399,100 as erroneously stated in The Mennonite of March 2, but rather $399,100. Somehow an extra one slipped in to make the difference of one million dollars. Furthermore, it was stated that conference giving in 1947 fell below the estimated budget. This conclusion was reached by subtracting the monies received at General Conference Headquarters from the total 1947 budget. However, this did not present the true picture because of the fact that the budget included the budget figures of the Seminary Board but the Headquarters income did not include the Seminary income, which was around $110,000 for 1947. Consequently, as Rev. Walter H. Dyck, Executive-Secretary, points out, the Conference really contributed 10 per cent above the budget for which the boards and committees asked.

Millions escaped in bombing raids with only a single clothing outfit and no changes. Underwear quickly disintegrates where soap is lacking. Shoes, doubled in price by American price changes, cost $50 a pair in Warsaw, with the worker making less than $2 per day. Such necessities as baby diapers, socks, wool blankets, cloth for bandages, and other goods considered essential in a family are simply not to be had for most European families."— Church World Service.

"Grain used directly for human consumption will keep more people alive than grain used to fatten livestock for slaughter . . . . We recognize that conservation measures involve economic sacrifices for the farmer . . . . they are justified, not as good business practice, but as a moral response to human need. The world food crisis is a challenge to Christian service."—Dr. Mark Dawber

A Palm Sunday Meditation

By Don E. Smucker

Matthew 21:9 sets the tone for Palm Sunday as a day of triumph and high affirmation: "And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest."

There is good reason to sing Hosannas to Christ. We who bear His name (and how unworthily!) make a radical claim: We boldly declare that God's whole plan and man's entire destiny were once and for all revealed in the life, the teachings, the death and the resurrection of Jesus Christ. This life, we declare, is the central fact of history. From Jesus comes all measurement and judgment; from Jesus comes all the good in the world; from Jesus comes all power to overcome sin and death . . . . Yes, Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.

I

We pause to look back over these 1900 years to discover the reality back of these Hosannas.

Alas, only too often has the church crucified Christ afresh. (No one ever expected the world to do other than crucifixion.) Yet there is also cause for real jubilation.

Today for the first time in all history the Gospel has reached every representative geographical area of the earth. Churches have been planted from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand. The Word of God is not bound by European culture nor the white race nor the Latin language nor ignorance. Across every human wall has leaped the Good News of God. Let us not underestimate this powerful fact.

Behold the fruits of salvation in Jesus Christ! They have appeared in every conceivable type of human situation. Christ has transformed Eskimos in the Arctic and colored people living in the blazing sun of Belgian Congo; Christ has transformed the aborigines of the South Pacific islands and the industrialized farmers of the Kansas wheat belt; Christ has transformed the heart of the Nigerian witch doctor and the scientifically trained physician; Christ has reached precious souls in China, India and Japan as well as South America and Puerto Rico.

Men with Christ in their hearts have broken forth with spiritual revival where life seemed hopeless and bitter as gall.

Men with Christ in their hearts have started more schools than any other group. America's first schools were Christian schools; America's best schools are still Christian schools.

Christians took a leading role in uprooting chattel slavery.

A remnant of Christians has been in conflict with political dictatorship and tyranny since the days of Rome. More positively these Christian convictions have provided the basis for decency in democratic government.

The mercy of Christ has launched hospitals, started medical missions and brought healing balm to the least and the lost of society.

The love of Christ has touched hated, unwanted minorities of race, color and class.

The holiness and power of Christ have created dissatisfaction with dead churches, compromised churches and lost churches.

The tenderness of Christ has created a sensitive conscience against the brutality and ruthlessness of war and all carnal strife.

Indeed, everything good has come from a cleansing based on a fresh return to Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour. Tides of faith, hope and love will bring real spiritual victory. The triumphant note of Palm Sunday is a permanent part of the Gospel despite the undeniable facts of that six days later many cheers become jeers.

The picture admittedly is not entirely one for jubilation. During Passion Week the palms become spears; the Hosannas becomes hisses and the triumph becomes tragedy—but only temporarily!

It is like the feeling which John R. Mott had in traveling through the countries of South America: "Crosses, crosses, everywhere, but not a sign of Christ." In fact, I wonder if there isn't a crusade against Christ in our day. A crusade which seeks to destroy Christ either by ignoring Him or perverting Him.

Last year I attended sessions of the United Nations at Lake Success located on the edge of New York City. There Christ is being ignored. His name and His teachings do not appear in the symbolism, the publications, the speeches and the plans of the United Nations. There are, to be sure some, noble Christians among the delegates, but essentially Christ is being by-passed by political priests and Levites.

Then there are those who pervert the message. Dur-

UMT is not a dead issue. On March 8 it was reported that senators had pushed the go-ahead button for hearings on UMT. Secretary of Defense, Forrestal, is to have commented significantly. "Events are making progress for us." Once again it is beginning to look as if the program of the Christian Church is too little and too late in the face of world affairs. At least the attention of the great majority of citizens is centered upon the secular measures which our government plans to take in the face of the world tensions of the hour. Where is there a program of the Church that they can turn to or feel like turning to? Has the Church been so pre-occupied? with secondary interests that it hasn't gotten down to grappling with the things that hold men's attention day by day?

PEOPLE can sometimes be smeared with a very quick move of the tongue or stroke of the pen. A recent Associated Press dispatch from Eveleth, Minnesota, ran as follows: "Henry A. Wallace told a Minnesota audience Sunday that Communist seizure of power in Czechoslovakia was 'inevitable.'

"Wallace said he did not condone the morality of the Communist move, but he said since Russia has insisted on friendly governments on its borders, the move was to be expected 'under the circumstances.' "

One midwestern newspaper gave this news item the heading, "Seizure Okay with Wallace." It is difficult to see how it can honestly be said that Wallace gave his "Okay" to something, the morality of which he could not condone. Regardless of what we may think of Wallace, it hardly seems that this heading did justice to the statements made by him. This is evidence of how easy it is to smear those whom one may not like. Perhaps when pastors preach sermons on not hearing false witness they might cite a few illustrations from the newspapers of the day.

We Need To Encourage Repentance

"Our pastor ought to preach more about repentance," said a layman recently. "We find life by repentance and faith rather than by trying to do one good thing after another," says an older pastor. The president of our Conference says, "We cannot go farther until we go deeper." The Evangelism Committee of Conference is sponsoring a "Week of Witness" during Holy Week. Jesus said, ". . . . unless you change and become like children, you will never get into the Kingdom of Heaven at all," (Matt. 18:3, Moffatt).

It is rather obvious that there is a need for repentance on the part of those who plainly can't make life work out, but the need may also exist for others who apparently get along much better. Professor Paul E. Johnson writes:

> "Americans are good at keeping up appearances of well-being. To the hasty glance it may appear that we are 'healthy, wealthy and wise.' We work in monumental buildings, dwell in charming homes, eat plenty of food, spend money generously, laugh hilariously and always say 'Fine!' when asked how we are. Yet beneath the facades of grandeur and false fronts of optimism, 'most men lead lives of quiet desperation' (as Thoreau observed). Within the mask (persona) of outward success the deeper struggles of personal life are won and lost. The personal crises, frustrations and failures may seem petty to the onlooker but they are decisive issues of human life. These dynamic motives of personal desire and defeat bear a harvest of interpersonal rivalry, social conflict, family discord and divorce, industrial strife, delinquency, war and exploitation, psychomatic illness, despair and suicide."

Man generally stands in need of correction. The concept of growth presupposes changes in outlook. The unobserved "struggles of personal life" are an incessant stimulation to find The Way more adequately.

By repentance as here used, we mean a change of mind in which the individual admits that a way of life is not working out and that a different way is necessary. Repentance may involve major and minor changes of mind. A major change may involve the whole personality, whereas minor changes may take place in rather gradual growth. But in both there is a willingness to admit that some approach won't work and that a different one must be found.

It seems that there are in our churches two types of people—types which, of course, shade into each other. One is the less conflictful type. Members of this group feel relatively secure and free and have a rather strong self-regard. Their main change of mind or repentance may have come in adolescence; and continued minor "changes of mind" come rather naturally to them, for they feel strong enough to admit rather easily to themselves the errors of their way. But there is another type.

This other type shows vastly much more inner conflict and repression and, perhaps, have never had a decisive and fruitful change of mind about life. Or having had it, they find it a slow and difficult process of growth to pull out of their former way. Possessed with a low self-esteem, they find it much more difficult to admit to themselves the errors of their way. They can appreciate the point in the German saying, "Wer Nichts ist und denkt sich Nichts, der is gar Nichts." Such people need encouragement to admit to themselves, and perhaps, to others, that the way or ways they are trying just simply don't work out to make life satisfying.

As suggested before, the two types shade into each other, and each, perhaps, has some characteristics of the other. When one considers the fact that there are people who are severely frustrated in life and without that attitude which will enable them to "overcome" these frustrations as Jesus did his and that there are others whose rate of growth could be accelerated by an acceptance of the necessity of changing one's mind, then the need for preaching repentance become more evident. For the sake of people in their churches, pastors need to make known the fact that there is such an experience as repentance and that it is a necessary part of finding The Way, Jesus Christ.

But they will need to do more than make it known; they need to encourage it. Many people are kept from repentance by the shame connected with it. Sick people go to a medical doctor without shame, but not so in the realm of ills of the soul. People with life-wrecking problems need to feel the grace of Jesus Christ as keenly as they do his righteousness. Jesus said that he came not to condemn but to save. The person with problems needs to be understood rather than shamed. He needs the assurance that he is afterall "a precious soul." Evangelists, pastors, missionaries, and teachers are often successful just to the extent that they can make the troubled individual feel that afterall he is worth something. As the individual feels this basic self-respect he is enabled to admit his futile attempts in life. He begins to change his mind.

Repentance has been introduced into the public school system. An article, "Teach Them How to Live," in the Reader's Digest of July, 1947, told how in "Classes in Human Relations" children were helped to look squarely at their problems, and how as a result they gained insight which gave them self-understanding and self-tolerance and therefore also tolerance and love of others. These pupils found out that they were not queer though they had problems. The queerness gone, they could repent."

The continual "challenging" in our churches, the continual upholding of righteousness, with little said about the tricks and deviations of the human heart, tends to make people with problems feel that they are queer. As the minister gives indication that he understands something about the deviations of the human heart, he gives troubled people encouragement to admit that life is not working out for them. Thereby he gives them a start on the way out.

It seem that quite a few people in our churches feel the need for something which would help them to live in a more satisfying way. They feel the lack, but they do not know what to do about it. Therefore, it would seem that it is necessary that pastors give encouragement to people to admit their problems and to face them. Since there may be two types of pastors as there seem to be two types of people, it may be necessary for the more serene type of pastor to seek the help of someone else in this approach or himself seek to enter more fully into the experiences of the conflictful type. Perhaps, it is a sensing of this need that enters into the special pre-Easter services that are so popular in many of our churches. Such special services are helpful, but our need is for an extended emphasis. In the usual run of things, many pastors tend to feel that since their members are Christians all things are settled, but a study of how quite a group of people feels does not seem to confirm this belief. Since we tend to lean toward staidness in our General Conference, we might achieve a balance by doing more for those who are troubled. We can't ignore the feeling that prompted the layman to conclude, "Our pastor ought to preach more about repentance." But it should be repentance with understanding in place of shame.

Reinhold Niebuhr wrote in the February Atlantic, "The renewal of life through repentance is therefore a message of hope and judgement for every age. It will yet prove its relevance and power to an age which imagined that intellectual progress would obviate the necessity of religious renewal."

"Christian Mutual Aid"

A Book Review by Carl Lehman

J. Winfield Fretz, the author of Christian Mutual Aid, is chairman of the Aid Section of the Mennonite Central Committee. The work of the Aid Section is no doubt best known through its recent resettlement of Mennonite refugees in Paraguay. It is also concerned with problems of rehabilitation and resettlement of members in the United States and Canada. Help given is on a self-liquidating loan basis, in contrast to the outright gift basis with which the Relief Section operates. Brother Fretz's book is published by the MCC and was written to help foster the spirit and the program of mutual aid among Mennonites. As such it is exceedingly helpful and deserves a wide reading. Harold S. Bender in his foreword writes:

> "It assumes that the Mennonites in their various groups constitute Christian brotherhoods based upon a personal experience of faith in Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord and a loving fellowship in His body, the Church . . . . It is a conscious effort to challenge the secular trend of the times which threatens to denature the Christian community and make its members increasingly dependent upon the state and the commercial world with consequent transfer of loyalty from the church to other agencies."

Important as this effort is, Brother Fretz also tries to make clear that if we take the Christian principle of mutual aid seriously the brotherhood will be able to solve serious problems and meet important needs that are not now being met by either commercial or governmental agencies. This point has been well established in the recent movement of Mennonites to Paraguay, a movement which could not have been possible had it been left to the efforts of commercial or governmental agencies.

The eighty-eight page booklet opens with a clarification of the principle of mutual aid. The author states that "the idea of working together to accomplish desired goals is much older than the idea of working alone . . . . (it) is a fundamental law of the universe . . . . an inherent part of God's creation." The extreme individualism of modern life was not known to ancient peoples and today is not found among the more simple cultures and civilizations. The author also distinguishes between the terms cooperation and mutual aid, although he admits they are nearly synonymous. Cooperation may be for selfish purposes, whereas in genuine Christian mutual aid "there is as much concern for the other person or group as for one's own." Admittedly the terms are used interchangeably and this distinction actually is not always made in practice. The author also makes clear that mutual aid is not charity. Charity divides people because it is a one-way relationship with the recipient often losing self-respect and the giver assuming a superior attitude. Mutual aid on the other hand unites people because it is a two-way relationship, and wherever applicable it is a much more wholesome process. Strangely enough the church has clung to charity, which is often necessary, whereas mutual aid which was so widely practiced in the early church has become a stranger in today's program!

The booklet is written in clear and non-technical language. You do not have to be an economist nor a sociologist to understand and deeply appreciate what the author writes. It unfolds ideas which are new only to modern life. They are actually as old as Jesus of Nazareth and as vital for our world as they were for the disturbed little country of Palestine in His day. Though He was rejected and put to death His church flourished. No doubt there will be those who will reject and label impractical many of the things found in these pages, but let him who is so disposed first ask himself whether he speaks as one who has sold himself to the commerical materialism of the modern world or whether he speaks as one who has taken up the cross of Christ.

Brother Fretz stresses the point that instead of being contrary to nature, mutual aid is a fundamental principle of nature, and incidentally, it is not the only principle which has been perverted by modern man to his own harm. He traces mutual aid from the early Old Testament period on through its greatest emphasis in the New Testament. He quotes Lucian, the ancient Latin writer, who in speaking about the early church says, "the activity of these people, in dealing with any matter that affects the community is something extraordinary; they spare no trouble, no expense." In two intensely interesting chapters he shows how this emphasis was again taken up by our Mennonite forefathers in both Switzerland and Holland, and how its principles have affected our history since that time. Another chapter is devoted to illustrations of mutual aid still being practiced in Mennonite communities; and another to the needs not now being met because we are not committed to helping one another as true Christian brothers should. Another chapter gives helpful and practical suggestions on organizing mutual aid in a community. The book closes with a discussion of what mutual aid can do for the church. It should be clearly understood that this principle is not properly considered as something confined to secular life about which the church has no concern. To the contrary it is something that rather clearly indicates the real spiritual condition of a church. Should any think there is too much idealism in the book, let him remember that no principles are worthy of Christ if they are short of ideal. What we really mean when we say certain Christian principles are not practical is that we have no place for them in our lives because of other things which predominate.

No Mennonite pastor can well afford not to read this booklet. No leader in the church should be without a copy. Anyone really interested in what his church does and what it becomes, whether he or she is a leader or not, will find here eighty-eight pages of some of the most interesting and stimulating help he has seen in a long time.

TO REHEARSE FOR "SEVEN LAST WORDS"

All former students and graduates who have sung in the Bethel College A Cappella Choir are invited to participate in the twenty-sixth annual rendition of the Easter oratorio, "Seven Last Words," to be presented in Memorial Hall on the afternoon of March 21. Dr. Hohmann has announced a rehearsal for this performance for March 20 at 4:00 p.m. in the college chapel.

"These Necessary Things" for 1948

by Walter H. Dyck

The Council of church leaders held in Jerusalem about A. D. 52 prefaced its closing resolution with, "For it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things" (Acts 15:28).

Reverently, we would draw a parallel as it applies to our Conference for 1948.

The Council of Boards recently met in Chicago to consider a budget for 1948. We were conscious of the Holy Spirit's presence. We were conscious of the interests and the abilities of each of our over 45,000 members.

Speaking in behalf of those who surveyed the open doors and weighed our ability to meet the challenge of the hour, we wish to preface a report on budget totals with these words of the early apostles:

"For it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things."

Besides the continued interest and prayers of each congregation and member for the task the Holy Spirit is laying upon us, the following twelve boards and committees report their budget requests:

Board of Emergency Relief	$399,100	$4.20
Board of Foreign Missions	330,000	3.48
Mennonite Biblical Seminary Board	68,500	.73
Home Mission Board	60,000	.64
Board of Education	33,940	.35
Board of Publication	21,657	.23
General Conference Treasury	13,540	.14
Peace Committee	10,000	.10
Young People's Union	5,200	.05
Women's Missionary Association	4,818	.05
Mutual Aid Board	1,650	.02
Committee on Doctrine and Conduct	1,000	.01
	$949,405.00	$10.00

Each of the boards and committees feel that the above figures are the minimum which they definitely need to carry out what should be done in 1948.

A Church Council, also individual members, will welcome the accompanying breakdown of the above items.

If the Lord prospers us materially and spiritually in 1948, so that we are willing and able to raise the almost $950,000 for General Conference causes, and if no individual phase of our work is to be neglected, every $10 contribution should, on the average, be broken down as indicated in the right hand column above.

To illustrate, the Peace Committee needs 10 cents out of every $10 of gifts which you will contribute; the Boards of Education and Publication need 35 cents and 23 cents respectively.

Since our Canadian brethren do not pass their most generous relief contributions through our treasury, it is safe to estimate that we will need $25 per General Conference member during 1948. This does not include gifts in kind passed through M.C.C. clothing or relief centers.

From time to time in these columns we will present the work assigned to each of the various boards and committees.

"Let us not grow weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we do not lose heart."—Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary.

KING OF KINGS

ing one of my pastorates I decided to check the book section of the local dime store. They were selling some well-known books prized at forty-nine cents. The only life of Christ was that by Ernst Renan. To Renan, Jesus is primarily a beautiful poetical legend.

In place of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, then, men erect religions for irreligious. The religion of truth, the religion of the working class, the religion of business, the religion of patriotism, the religion of reason, the religion of humanism, the religion of superstition, the religion of success. All are strange mixtures of truth and error, a poor re-hash of pseudo-science and betrayed Christianity.

How shall we remain in the triumphant power of Palm Sunday in the light of these challenges to our Lord?

First of all, every authentic re-discovery of Christ is the re-discovery of the Bible. The Old Testament for background and the New Testament for the revelation itself. The Living Word of God is Jesus Christ. And He is supremely known in the written Word of God. These cannot be separated even though Christ is final and the New Covenant is decisive.

Second, Christ must be known in a living union between the follower and his Lord. We must be in Christ. How daring! How audacious! How radical! We must live in Jesus Christ. And He is gracious enough to live in us. "Abide in me and I in you"—John 15:4 This is beyond even obedience. This is being. This is beyond denominations. This is beyond modernism and fundamentalism. This is beyond seminary training or no seminary training. This is beyond debate and argument. This is beyond all books including the Book of Books. This is it—to use an American phrase. Indeed, even death cannot separate us from the love of God in Jesus Christ.

If you have this union with Christ your first and last word will be Hosanna.

M.C.C. News Notes

Refugee Group Includes Variety of Skills

Among the 860 Mennonite refugees who are making the voyage toward South America aboard the "SS General Heintzelman", are 2 nurses, a doctor, 4 teachers, 246 farmers or farm workers, 226 housewives and domestics, 4 carpenters, and one or two each of other occupations such as electrician, mechanic, miller, butcher, shoemaker, cook, etc.

In the group there are 229 men, 286 women, 155 boys, 160 girls, and 30 babies. It is noteworthy that nearly half of the group are men or boys, as contrasted to the much smaller percentage of men and boys in the Volendam group which went to Paraguay last year. This larger percentage of men will greatly facilitate settlement of these people in Paraguay.

Mennonite Refugees from China to Enter Canada

Many of the Mennonite refugees who fled from Russia during the 1930's came to North and South America. A small number, however, fled eastward crossing from Russia into northwestern China, hoping eventually to reach a place of safety and refuge. Because of the strife in China in recent years, these people have again had to flee.

The need of these people came to the attention of our MCC relief workers in China, who assisted them in coming to Kaifeng, and later to Shanghai. Since that time permission has been secured for some of them to enter Canada as agriculturalists. On February 24 six of these individuals were able to leave for Vancouver, British Columbia, where they are scheduled to arrive on March 19. In this group are Mrs. Maris Schellenberg with sons Jacob—twelve, and Henry—eighteen, and Mrs. Lili Goosen with son Peter—fourteen, and daughter Lene—sixteen. Nine more persons of this refugee group have been approved for immigration to Canada, but have not yet secured boat passage.

Relief in Java Opens

William Yoder reports that an agreement has been reached between the Indonesians and Dutch, thus ending the state of war which has existed in Java for a number of months. This development opens the way for the MCC to begin a relief project in the interior of Java, in the area of the Dutch Mennonite Mission. A shipment of relief supplies is ready to be sent, and additional personnel for this work will also be available from the group of workers now in India.

Soap is Still Needed for Relief

About one year ago arrangement was made to share a soap manufacturing plant with the Brethren Service Committee. During this past year our people have contributed enough fats to produce 34,050 lbs. of soap evaluated at $6,810. This soap is shipped through MCC channels and is distributed by our workers overseas.

This method of converting fats into soap for relief has proven very satisfactory. Some of our people may prefer to make the soap at home, and such is acceptable for relief. However, we would generally recommend sending in the fat to this soap factory, making possible a uniform product which is especially suited for overseas shipment. Where possible, contributions should be sent directly to the Brethren Service Committee Center, Nappanee, Indiana. Use containers that you do not care to have returned. If you do not have a suitable container, write to the Brethren Center requesting a five-gallon can which they have for loan for this purpose. All contributions should be carefully marked as Mennonite gifts. The MCC will receive soap corresponding to the amount of fats given by Mennonite people. If desired, contributions may be sent to one of the MCC food warehouses (Newton, Reedley, Goshen, Kalona or Silver Springs) from which it will be hauled to Nappanee.

It should be noted that this announcement applies only to the United States, since Canadian restrictions prevent the export of soap for relief.

Summer Service Units Planned for Canada

Due to the many expressions of interest in Summer Service, Elmer Ediger, the director of this phase of MCC work, visited a number of communities in Canada, with some very encouraging results. It is hoped that service units will be opened this summer in mental hospitals in Ontario and Western Canada. Anyone interested in this type of service should write to the Kitchener MCC office (223 King Street East, Kitchener, Ontario) for further information.

Brook Lane Farm Construction Help

After delay because of weather, good progress is being made with the small new building for the mental hospital. A group of seven Mennonite men have been working regularly since November or December. Some of these will need to leave this month. Additional manual help, skilled and unskilled, is needed. For information about work on employment or volunteer basis write to Akron Office of the Mennonite Central Committee or Brook Lane Farm, R. F. D. No. 5, Hagerstown Maryland.

Program Material for Intermediates

by Henry Harder

As a member of the Curriculum Committee of our conference, I have been asked to write an article about program material for the Intermediate Age Group. There appears to be a need for suggestions as to what material to use for programs for this age group. Below I am giving a list of suggested material. What may be preferred by one group, may not be cared for by another. But will you kindly study this suggested list, order such copies as appeal to you, and then adapt the material to your own local group. The Curriculum Committee to date has not worked out our own Intermediate Young People's Program material, but we hope to have something ready for our

Mennonite Church at Caldwell, Idaho

At Edge of Desert Expected To Blossom as a Rose

By Menno and Selma Kliewer

On March 23, 1947, we were able to have our first service in the church building, which had been purchased from the Church of Christ Scientist, and then moved on to our lot. On May 25 the group was organized as the First Mennonite Church of Caldwell, Idaho. Rev. Henry N. Harder and Brother Marvin Linscheid of Aberdeen came over to help with the organizing. On June 1 five young people were baptized. At present the membership stands at twenty-four.

We have an active Christian Endeavor in which all ages take part. It meets every other Sunday evening, and attendance and interest is good. Our ladies are considering starting a mission society. We have not been able to show gain in attendance during the time we have been here. The gain that was made by new attendants was lost in those who moved to other states. We have lost twenty-one from our attendance list in those who moved away. We hope that our loss has been some other church's gain. We feel this loss very much since a number of these were faithful workers in the church.

The moving of the church, the digging of the basement, and the pouring of the foundation all meant a lot of work. Some remodeling was also done on the entrance to make it fit our need. Recently, considerable work was again done on the basement so that it is now ready for use. The group labored together faithfully in all this work, so that now only a few minor things are needed to complete it all. We hope to be able to have the dedication some time this spring.

The church is located in Caldwell, two blocks from the high school, two blocks from a large new grade school, and one and one-half blocks from the Junior High School. Caldwell is a city of 11,000 or over, located in rich farming country. The city finds itself in a boom. Many new business houses are being built, while others are being planned for the near future. This boom is partly due to the expectation that land just north of the city is to be brought under irrigation. Twenty-six thousand acres are to receive water this spring; however, the project may not be entirely completed by that time. When it is completed, it will transform a desert of useless sage brush into rich farming country. "The desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." Isa. 35:1b.

In regard to the church, we realize with the author that "Tomorrow Is Here." The tomorrow for which we have labored and prayed, when we might have a church of our own; a house in which we could worship and serve God. Now we plead for grace to do the many things which we had hoped and planned to do when that day came. For this we covet your prayers and interests.

(The Board of Home Missions of the General Conference is greatly pleased at the evident blessing of God in this field.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary) churches in time. You will understand that the assignment of this committee is so large that we are asking you to be patient with us. In some areas of our Christian Education Program for our Mennonite Churches we have made progress the last two years, but much remains to be done.

Here is the list:

1. How To Use the Bible for Help Today, by John Bruere, The Westminster Press, Philadelphia. Price 24 cents. This is a series of studies prepared for young people. With the diligent help of the sponsors this study should prove to be quite helpful to young Christians. At the end of each chapter there are given suggestions for class preparation and procedure.

2. James the Practical by Yoder P. Leith, Westminister Press, Philadelphia. Price 25 cents. This is a study of this epistle.

3. Young People's Bible Study Course, by Jacob Blaauw, 75 cents, Zondervan Publishing House, Grand Rapids, Michigan. This book should be a fine guide book for the Intermediates as the subjects are prepared for this age level.

4. Talks With Our Young People, by John W. Weaver, Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa. This booklet deals with subjects such as these: What should be the attitude of our young people toward the church? The girl and her friends. The boy and his friends. etc.

5. The Program Builder, Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa. 20 cents per copy. This booklet discusses many doctrinal and social problems of young people from the Mennonite view point.

These are some of the suggestions which we kindly present to you for your consideration and possible use. —H. N. Harder, Member Curriculum Committee of the General Conference.

Our Colleges and Seminary

BETHEL COLLEGE

In spite of adverse weather conditions, the annual Bethel College Fellowship Committee dinner, held March 5 in the dining hall, had a record attendance of 243, representing thirty-one Mennonite churches in central Kansas. Jake Bartel (Hillsboro), chairman, presided during the after-dinner program, in which were outlined plans and progress of the school and interest generated still further in supporting Bethel with goodwill, constructive criticism, and financial aid. The large Student Christian Association elected the following to take office with the beginning of the new quarter: Harold Moyer, president; Harold Wedel, vice president; Edith Claassen, secretary; and Marjorie Fast, treasurer. Heading the reorganized Student Volunteer Cabinet are Joseph Duerksen, president; Arthur Isaak, vice president; and Katherine Enns, secretary-treasurer. Earl Loganbill and Frances Siebert have been appointed by the Student Council as new editor and business manager, respectively of the Bethel Collegian.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The Manitoba Minister's Conference was held in our College from March 1 to 5. Dr. C. Krahn of Bethel College and Dr. J. H. Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, served as leaders. Over sixty ministers from the surrounding communities took part. Rev. Walter Dyck will serve the College and the Bethel Mission Church with some messages on the Work of the Conference and Ministerial Studies, March 14-19. In the evenings he will bring evangelistic messages for the general public. On March 14, Mr. Henry Wall, an instructor in our College, will be ordained as a minister. Mr. Wall has been called by the Bethel Mission Church to serve as an associate pastor.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The losing side in the Star Contest invited the students and faculty to the Gym where they showed the picture, "Keys of Kingdom." The music department is busy practicing for the Music Day events on Easter Monday. As usual, it is planned to have the choirs of the community present the morning program, and the various musical organizations of the school will render programs in the afternoon and evening. Prof. Lichti has started work on the cantata "The Seven Last Words." This is to be presented in the evening. Mr. Ed. Stucky of Goessel, Kansas, spoke to the Freeman Bethany Church on Sunday morning and in chapel on Monday. The Teachers Training Classes are busy observing this week. Next week they start practice teaching. Six second-year and nineteen first-year students are taking these Teachers Training courses.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Twenty students attended the week-end conference at Mennonite Biblical Seminary March 5-7. This conference was sponsored by the Education Committee of the Middle District and was intended primarily for those seriously considering entering a full time Christian service vocation. Dr. J. S. Schultz attended the North Central meeting in Chicago March 11. Dr. Harry M. Gage, administrative consultant of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, visited the college March 9, 10. The Booster Committee is planning a Booster Concert to be given May 28. Some of the outstanding musicians, formerly connected with the college, will appear on the program. Either a concert or a dinner is given each year for college support, sponsored by this committee. Rev. Don Smucker spoke in Chapel March 3 and 4. During these two days he interviewed students who might later be interested in attending Mennonite Seminary, spoke to the full time Christian Service group, and spoke before the Peace Club.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Enthusiastic acceptance of the newly elected President of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, was made by President Rufus D. Bowman of Bethany Biblical Seminary at chapel Tuesday of this week. Dr. Bowman reviewed the affiliated relationship between the two institutions and indicated that the Church of the Brethren was happy for this affiliated relationship and looked upon it as a creative and fruitful development in future years. The new President responded and asked for the prayers of the faculty and student body in the light of the difficult assignment which he now has. He then went on to present an address concerning the whole background of the Mennonite church in order to make this clearer and more understandable to the Brethren members of our Seminary family. Dr. Pannabecker emphasized the diversity of background among American Mennonites. He said, "the Mennonites came from many different places in Europe at many different times to many different communities in this country, and therefore some of the divisions in America have come about simply through the diversities in place and time of origin." The present problem of the Mennonite Church, he then concluded, was how to accept what is good in our background and reject that which is not permanent. Four things he particularly believes are permanent in the Mennonite tradition—first, the matter of Biblical authority, looking upon the Bible as the word of God; second, a strong emphasis upon living the Christian life in obedience to the teachings of Jesus Christ; third, a pietistic religion which includes warmth and feeling and heartfelt emotion under the control of the spirit; and fourth, a new emphasis upon church unity, working with other Mennonites and other denominations which are evangelical. Following the address Professor Marvin Dirks sang the fine German prayer hymn, "Gebet."

Members of the faculty held a surprise reception for Dr. Pannabecker and his wife this week. Following ice cream and cookies there was a period in which the faculty members informally affirmed their joy in this new decision. Dr. Pannabecker responded with an address and by a selection on the little Chinese pipe organ (sheng), which he brought from the mission field overseas.

Don. E. Smucker will conduct Union Holy Week Services at the Inman High School during the week of March 21 to 26 under the sponsorship of several Mennonite churches in that community.

Corbet Bishop, well-known to people in the C.P.S. era, paid the Seminary an informal visit this week. His home is in Alabama, and he is a member of the Church of Christ Conservative.

Rev. Lester Hostetler of North Newton was on the campus Friday and Saturday en route to Nappanee, for special meetings.

Again a Bible School Workshop

"Are you planning another workshop? This has been asked me in casual meeting with friends on the street, in the church. "I certainly want to come" was their hearty reply when they were answered in the affirmative.

In the past two workshops we were greatly blessed. When we seek help for our task, God so willingly and abundantly pours out far in excess of our asking or our thinking and we rejoice to continue, strengthened, in the work to which He called.

Mrs. Paul Erb was our guest speaker and leader of the workshop last year. "It cost something" was her message to the children's workers. Yes, it does cost, but far greater than the cost is the gift of God's blessing when a teacher becomes the vessel to "bear His Name" to the child.

This year Mrs. Olin Krehbiel of Berne, Indiana, will be with us. Joyfully we look forward to the time when again we can welcome all who are interested in youth work. The place of meeting is again the Student Union Room on the Bethel College campus. Registration begins at 9:00 A.M. The day is April 3, 1948.—Joanna Andres, for the Western District Education Committee.

Institute of International Relations

The thirteenth annual Institute of International Relations will be held at Friends University for ten days June 4 - 13. The Peace Committee of the General Conference is one of the co-sponsors. The emphasis this year will be on constructive peace building. Among the leaders expected are:

Louis Dolivet - French American - writer - lecturer and international editor of the Free World Magazine.

Bert Mitchell - student of world affairs - has spent time in Russia and Poland with the Y.M.C.A.

Eddy Asirvatham - of India - teacher at Boston University and well informed regarding the problems and progress of the far East.

Maynard Kreuger - economist - University of Chicago, and professor W. A. Young, former president of Friends University who will be dean of the Institute.

Other leaders invited include an expert on International Education from Sweden, an outstanding Negro leader, someone in the field of religion and one or two headliners.

The tuition is $12.50 for the ten days. Board and room may be secured at a reasonable rate. These ten days provide an unusual opportunity for the college student interested in credit and ministers seeking basic information and for others who want to "Earn the Right to Form a Judgment."

Further information may be secured by writing to the Institute Office at Friends University.

Our Saviour

In a lowly manger the Christ was born
In later years his heart was torn
With grief and anguish, sorrow and such
And remember, Brother, it was for us.

He writhed in anguish and pain, you see,
And I know now that it was for me.
On that awful cross he bowed his head
And Jesus Saviour is numbered with the dead.

They buried him there in a rich man's grave.
He died a sin cursed world to save.
He rose from the dead and ascended on high,
Now our Saviour never more shall die.

He is coming again in this sin cursed world,
His banner you see is now unfurled.
He'll take his own home, never more to die,
But forever to live with him on high.

(The above poem was written by the late Rev. J. S. Raugh. It was recently found by Mrs. Raugh among some papers in his desk.)

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: We are eagerly looking forward to the coming of the Bethel Octet on March 14. The following Sunday night our special Passion Week services shall begin with Rev. J. J. Voth bringing us the messages, concluding the week on Good Friday Morning with communion services.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

IMPORTANT NOTICE REGARDING USE OF CLERGY CERTIFICATES

Mr. H. W. Siddall, Chairman, Trans-Continental Passenger Associations, Union Station, Chicago, Illinois, calls our attention to a misunderstanding with regard to the use of Clergy Certificates.

On the inside front cover of each certificate you will find the following rule:

> "This certificate and Clergy tickets issued thereon are not transferable, and if presented by any person other than to whom the Certificate was issued, it will be forfeited, taken up and canceled."

In some instances, holders of Western District Clergy Certificates have not been abiding by this regulation, and have allowed others to use their certificates.

Those entitled to the use of these Clergy Certificates will appreciate the consideration which railroads are giving, and will wish to cooperate in helping to make the abuses of this privilege impossible.—Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary

EASTERN DISTRICT BROTHERHOOD TO MEET APRIL 3

The Men's Brotherhood of the Eastern District Conference will hold its annual Father and Son Fellowship meeting at the Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pa., on April 3, at 7:30 P.M.

The speaker will be Charles E. Gremmels of New York City. Mr. Gremmels has, for many years, done a great work as a Christian business man, personal worker, and supporter of missionaries. He will speak at the Eden Church, Schwenksville on Sunday morning, April 4, at the Montgomery County prison in the afternoon and in the Grace Church, Lansdale in the evening.

Bring your son or borrow someone else's son for the evening and bring them along to the Fellowship meeting. If you teach a class of boys or men bring them along. Your families are also welcome.—N. K. Berky

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: We welcomed Mr. and Mrs. Irvin E. Richert to our church for the sermon and devotional period for Christian Endeavor, March 7. Our benevolent offering today will be used to purchase wheat in cooperation with a local project to send a car of wheat for relief. We're planning to have a fellowship church supper and program with the Rosenbergers, March 29. The Rosenbergers expect to leave that week for their new pastorate in Pennsylvania. To help pay for our Missionary News and Notes, the ladies are laying aside a penny every time they pass a church until our next meeting.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pa. We welcome into our midst Mr. and Mrs. Fredrich Dordregter of Holland. They will join our church on Palm Sunday by letter transfer from the French Reformed Church of Amsterdam. Both taught in the Sunday school period over a period of years. They speak Dutch, French, German and English languages. Having lived in Philadelphia with her parents from 1916 to 1919 Mrs. Dordregter is remembered by some of our members as the little "Dutch" girl who came to Sunday school with her cousin Wilhelmina Kuyf (missionary to China). Mr. and Mrs. Dordregter have applied for their naturalization papers, and we trust that the opportunities and new friendships here will erase the unpleasant memories of their war experiences. —Mrs. H. S. Weiss, Corr.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: Rev. Wilbert Regier of Pratum, Oregon, will conduct a week of pre-Easter Services beginning Palm Sunday. Rev. Wiebe is presenting a "We Believe" series of Sunday morning messages based on the General Conference Statement of Faith. These messages will continue through Pentecost. A recent offering for resettlement of Mennonite refugees totaled $818.12. The Women's Mission Society is sewing baby garments for relief.—Mrs. Willard Wiebe, Corr.

TWO NEW CHURCHES JOIN HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN

The First Mennonite Church of Fredonia, Kansas, and the North Star Church (City), Drake, Saskatchewan, young people's group have joined the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN of church publications. This brings the total to seventy-five churches now on the PLAN, fifteen of which have joined the PLAN during the last eight months.

The Board of Publication is deeply grateful for the confidence which one church after another shows through increased use of Conference publications. The more we get together on matters of information, the better we will understand each other, the more we will love each other, and the more effective our total witness will be.

—Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: The choir of our church, with that of the Wayland Mennonite Church, is practicing for an Easter cantata to be given on the evening of March 28.—Mrs. W. J. Graber, Corr.

—First Church, Newton, Kansas: On March 3 Mr. Raymond Schlichting, M.C.C. Worker, who recently returned home from Paraguay, showed pictures of the new Colony, "Volendam" and told of the work among the new settlers in Paraguay. Many friends from neighboring churches attended. Last fall our church adopted an Every-Member Family Prayer Meeting and Bible Study each Thursday evening, combining our mid-week activities into one evening of the week. We use uniform lessons.—Mrs. Menno Sperling, Corr.

—First Church, Berne, Indiana: The Rev. Andrew R. Shelly will be the speaker at the special meetings to be held March 14-21. His announced subjects are: "The Christ of the Cross;" "The Cross and Youth;" "On the Cross of Calvary;" "Peace and the Cross;" "Stewardship and the Cross;" "The Church and the Cross;" "Begin at the Cross;" "From Palms to the Cross;" "Beyond the Cross." On Sunday, February 22, Mr. and Mrs. Ellwyn Hartzler, who were in Puerto Rico for over a year, showed pictures of the work and the country. The first of the church offerings for the establishment of a permanent building fund was taken February 29. It is proposed to raise a fund of not less than $100,000 to be used solely for remodeling, construction and reconstruction purposes. The imperative need at present is more adequate space for the Sunday school, as it is impossible to do effective and satisfactory work in the present overcrowded condition.—Martha Gilliom, Corr.

—Boynton Mennonite Church, Hopedale, Illinois: $422 in contributions and pledges for the Auditorium-Physical Education Building Fund of Bluffton College was the result of the week of solicitation by Dr. L. L. Ramseyer. Rev. Robert W. Hartzler, of Goshen, Indiana, is conducting special pre-Easter services at this church. His subjects are: "A New Dawn," "A New Consecration," "Jesus' Message to the Sinful," "It Is Not Easy To Follow Jesus," "There Is Life in the Church," "What Is Life For?," "Where There Is Life There Must Be Growth."

LUCKY THIRTEEN

One lady we know is absolutely convinced that thirteen is her lucky number. She just doesn't believe that thirteen is unlucky for her.

And we are absolutely convinced that the thirteenth Sunday in every quarter is a lucky day for our children.

Lucky, because so many churches are beginning to see that special collections raised on the thirteenth Sunday in every quarter are particularly appropriate for sponsoring our Conference publications, with special emphasis upon quarterlies and other teaching aids for our children in our Conference.

Increasingly churches are beginning to see that one Sunday out of thirteen—and we suggest the thirteenth Sunday in every quarter—is a fine time in which to re-emphasize among our people the importance of good, well-prepared, carefully-thought-through programs of materials in our church schools.

Lucky, the children who are going to get better materials in the future because some Sunday school superintendent raises the question, "Can't we set aside the collection on the thirteenth Sunday in every quarter for better publications?"

Out of the Depths I Cry to Thee

Out of the depts I cry to Thee, Lord, hear me, I implore Thee!
Bend down Thy gracious ear to me, Let my pray'r come before Thee!
If Thou remember each misdeed, If each should have its rightful meed,
Who may abide Thy presence?

Our pardon is Thy gift; Thy Love And grace alone avail us.
Our works could ne'er our guilt remove, The strictest life must fail us.
That none may boast himself of aught, But own in fear Thy grace hath wrought.
What in him seemeth righteous.

And thus my hope is in the Lord And not in mine own merit:
I rest upon His faithful word To them of contrite spirit.
That He is merciful and just, Here is my comfort and my trust.
His help I wait with patience.

—Martin Luther (Mennonite Hymnary, 531)

Report on Y.P.U. Council Meeting

The Young People's Union Council met February 13-15 at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois. The meeting was held to plan for the coming year and to share with one another, the experiences of the districts of the Conference.

A full range panorama of the work of the Young People's Union was presented during the sessions. The varied and expanding program of work and activity for youth in the Conference was considered by Council members. The following were major areas of interest, projects and concerns of the Council.

Announce Future Voluntary Service Plans

The Voluntary Service program falls under two categories, the M.C.C. program and the General Conference. The M.C.C. plans to have units this coming summer in Gulfport, Mississippi; Cuauhtemoc, Mexico; M.C.C. office, Akron, Pa.; Three institutional units; a European Service unit. The General Conference announces units to be in the Montana and Arizona Mission fields; Youth Teams to visit churches; a Migrant Work unit; Chicago Mission; Canadian Youth Farm.

Youth to Meet at Mennonite World Congress

The World Congress of Mennonites has been scheduled for August 4-5 at Goshen, Indiana, and August 7-10 at Newton, Kansas. Youth nights have been announced on August 5 and August 10. The Y.P.U. has encouraged and expressed a desire to participate in the Congress.

Consider Annual Retreat

After the General Conference last August, about seventy young people from the U. S. and Canada gathered together for three days of retreat and fellowship at Camp Mack, Indiana. With minister's retreats held annually, consideration of some type of youth retreat has been before the Y.P.U. Executive Committee. In the light of the coming World Congress, this plan was not considered feasible for 1948. Further consideration will be given for 1949.

A Mission in Puerto Rico

N. Paul Stucky, who surveyed Puerto Rico with Rev. A. E. Kreider of the Mission Board during the Christmas season, reported on the trip, the investigation, and the program considered possible. The Council voted to support a mission in Puerto Rico, offering to purchase the land for a mission site. This decision depended upon the Mission Board action.

A Prayer Calendar for 1949

Feeling that a calendar graphically portraying the youth program of the church and presenting in a challenging way items for prayer, would be helpful, the Council favored a project of making a calendar with cuts and art work portraying the conference work and program to youth for prayer. A budget of up to $500 was designated for this project.

Missionary Education Fund

There are four students in the three colleges being supported by the Y.P.U. Three of the students come from Puerto Rico and the fourth from Paraguay. It was voted to continue this as a project aiding them in obtaining their education so that they may return to serve their own people.

Mennonite Youth

The four-page Mennonite Youth section of The Mennonite was reviewed and discussed. It was announced that an Advisory Editorial Committee is being appointed to aid in analysing, making recommendations, and serving as critics. Appointed to this position at present are Otto Klassen of Bluffton College and Rev. Robert Hartzler of Goshen, Indiana. It was agreed that the Youth pages need to become vital to younger young people. Efforts toward making the pages more distinctive were also suggested. A budget of $50 for cuts and $180 for office expense was approved.

Contact Students in Non-Mennonite Schools

A recommendation was passed urging that means be devised to keep in contact with students in schools, colleges, and universities which are non-conference institutions. It was felt a directory of students in such schools would be both interesting and of real value. It was agreed to work with the Board of Education on this matter since they are already actively interested.

Young People's Program Material

There is evidently a crying need for program materials for young people. The problem was seriously discussed, and it was agreed that present pamphlets under way be encouraged and that contact be made with the Curriculum Committee already actively interested in this field.

Universal Military Training

Arnold Nickel, a seminary student, presented a review of an all-day session the seminary had on this issue. It was again realized what the proposed bill meant. It was recommended that local young people be encouraged to express their concern to their congressmen and that the retreat committees of the districts be urged to include peace training as a vital part of the retreat program.

Letter Fellowship across the Sea

It was announced that Helen Tieszen and O'Ray Graber, both attending Bethel College, have taken charge of the Around the World Mennonite Youth Fellowship. This is a letter writing fellowship. Those desiring to make contact with people across the sea may do so through Helen and O'Ray.

Organizational Problems

Since the age of the officers of the Y.P.U. have constantly been lowering through the years, the question of proper administration of the constantly developing young people's program in the church was discussed. It was felt there is need for older people to be actively interested and a part of the organizational structure. Thus, the Y.P.U. acted to recommend that a study

The Eden C. E. Society

This material was prepared by a committee of the Eden Christian Endeavor Cabinet, Moundridge, Kansas, of which Miss Vernell Goering is president.

Eden C. E. Members go motorboat riding.

The Eden Christian Endeavor Society has a membership of approximately one hundred. The age group ranges from about fifteen to twenty-eight, including quite a few young married couples. The society meets on the second and fourth Sundays of each month.

The officers of the society include: president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, librarian, reporter, and two committees, each consisting of four members, the program committee and social committee. The term of each office is one year, with about half of the officers being elected in January and the remainder in July. This eliminates the possibility of an entirely new cabinet. Officers are not eligible for re-election. The officers meet once a month to discuss problems affecting the society and to plan for the future.

The constitution of the society was recently revised. Heretofore, the term of all officers was six months with the exception of the president and reporter whose terms were one year. Officers were eligible to serve two terms. Most of the other revisions were of a minor nature.

The duties of the officers are quite apparent, with the possible exception of the social committee and the reporter.

Members of the social committee have charge of recreational activities at the annual banquet, the Christian Endeavor Retreat, and picnics. This committee is also in charge of Christian Endeavor socials held occasionally during the year. Various games are played at these socials including folk games, twenty questions, and others. Refreshments consisting of apples, pop corn, ice cream or cookies are frequently served.

The chief aim of the reporter is to acquaint others with the activities of the society. About once a month, a report appears in the church paper, the Eden Chronicles, submitted by the reporter.

The Christian Endeavor programs are greatly varied. Approximately half the programs consist of numbers by members of the society. The remainder consists of talent other than that from the society, such as a cappella choir, negro choir, quartets, pictures of Christian enterprises, and speakers. The society has had several exchange programs with neighboring churches. Such programs promote fellowship and acquaint the society with the work being carried on by other societies. One of the recent programs of considerable interest was a radio presentation of a pageant which was given through the church microphone, the members of the pageant being in the basement.

Two study classes meet once a month after the regular meetings. One group, the Homebuilding Class, composed of young married couples is under the leadership of Rev. Walter Gering. Such topics as children, hospitality, movies, divorce, and other problems confronting the home are discussed.

Rev. David Neufeld of Rosemary, Alberta, Canada, who is at present attending Bethel College, has charge of the other group, the Friendship Class for those who are single. This group discusses such topics as true love, dating, morality makes sense, engaged, wedding, honeymoon, and other topics of interest to young people.

Visitation of the sick and aged is one of the activities sponsored by the society. Rev. Walter Gering and several members of the society visit homes in the community bringing cheer and comfort in word and song. The expression of thanks from those visited more than repays the efforts.

The Christian Endeavor Banquet, which is held annually on the evening of January 1 in the church basement, is one of the high lights of the year. As the banquets are quite similar year after year, a description of the last one should suffice. The officers and others worked for weeks in advance in an effort to make the affair a success. The topic for the evening was "Building the Future." The group was fortunate in securing Rev. Marvin Dirks of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary as the main speaker, with a quartet also from the Seminary providing some very excellent music. The Dorcas Society of the church prepared a delicious meal. The members of the Catechism class served as waiters and waitresses. The fellowship about the tables helped to renew the interest in the work of the society.

The dates of September 13 and 14, 1947, will long be remembered by many members of the society as this was the occasion of the first Eden Retreat. The excellent facilities of Camp Fellowship, near Goddard, Kansas, were placed at the disposal of the society. About eighty young people of the community, mostly Christian Endeavor members, including ten young married couples took advantage of this unusual opportunity.

The primary objectives of this retreat were to plan for the future, to create greater interest in Christian Endeavor work, and to discuss the various problems facing the society. Although much time was spent in nurturing the spiritual, the group found ample time to enjoy such forms of recreation as boat riding, ping pong, and softball. A few enjoyed swimming in spite of cool weather.

Plans are to make this retreat an annual affair, although the date will probably be advanced about a month. It is hoped that a much larger group will find it possible to attend the retreat this fall.

A CORRECTION

Editor, The Mennonite:

I wish to call your attention to an error that occurred in the last Mennonite concerning the Rally of the Western District C. E. It mentions that the Lehigh and Tabor together with Alexanderwohl church were the host churches to the Rally. The fact is, it was only the Alexanderwohl. Only the Alexanderwohl Mission Society known as the Willing Workers served the meals at this Rally.

GIVING IN THE FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH OF NAPPANEE, INDIANA

When we held our annual business meeting January 1, 1947, we set as our goal for 1947 a budget of $13,600. At the end of 1947 we found that we had exceeded our budget and had given a total of $15,000. This included our giving for current expenses, missions, relief, Bluffton College, the seminary, and the conferences.

The average giving per member was $97, and the total was about $2,800 more than for 1946 and about $6,500 over 1945. The goal for the year was exceeded by $1,400. Approximately 37 per cent was used to maintain and improve the work in Nappanee, leaving a balance of benevolences of 63 per cent of the total.

When we held our annual business meeting on January 1, 1948, and made our plans on giving for this year, we decided to change our plan for recording our giving. Our plan is as follows: Instead of giving to as many as four or five funds on a Sunday or seven or eight funds in the course of a month, which means unwarranted work for the treasurer and confusion for all, we contribute to three different funds: current, benevolence, and improvement. Benevolence will include all the projects such as missions, seminary, college, relief, and conference. We will then divide our benevolence funds as follows: General Conference projects (missions, relief, seminary, and various boards), 65 per cent; Middle District Conference projects (Lima Mission, Bluffton College, and Conference expenses), 20 per cent; the other 15 per cent will be allocated according to area of greatest need at the end of the year. The percentages in both conferences are based on quotas given by the conferences to the churches. Our current fund remains the same as last year, and our improvement fund will be recorded as such.

CENTRAL EUROPE SUFFERS DESPITE LESS SEVERE WINTER

A number of reports have come from Europe to the effect that this winter has been less severe than last winter. The direct suffering from cold and exposure thus has been less acute than might have been the case had the weather been more bitterly cold.

Actually, however, other factors have not improved, but grown worse, therefore making continued relief very necessary. The food reserves in Central Europe are at a low ebb, because of the cold weather of last winter and the crop failures of last summer. Clothing, shoes, and bedding are still not available in sufficient quantity to replace that which wears out. Often a garment is shared by several members of a family. In fact, it is generally felt that relief in Central Europe will continue to be necessary at least through next year.

Rabboni!

RABBONI!
I may call at last
With Mary of Magdala.
Here, kneeling at Thy feet,
My soul possesses all that in the past
It sought and dreamed and longed for
In the ancient quest
For rest.

I walked into life's garden . . .
Unknowingly, then knowingly
I sought Thee — of the Cross.
I sought and dreamed and sifted
Day by day
The grains of gain from out the fields of loss.
I walked . . . Sometimes
Through meadows in the spring, fragrant and sweet . . .
Sometimes my path led over hills . . .
And over rugged steep . . .
Sometimes through thorny briars that pricked and tore my feet . . .
And sometimes into valleys deep
Where lilies bloomed . . .
I walked and chose:
The best of seeds I kept;
Some blossoms — lovely, rare;
But when I found Thee blooming there —
Fairiest of the lilies fair —
My heart was lost to Thine,
Rabboni mine!
My heart was lost and well I knew
That from that hour my soul was knit
Through ageless, endless time
To Thine;
That I should cling to Thee
As clings a branch unto its vine —
That I should cling and know but this:
My seeking past;
Here in Thyself, at last,
My soul has found the answer to its quest —
Its rest!

PEOPLE need to consider each other's interests if they are to get along together. Jesus suggested that we love our neighbor as ourselves. But like the lawyer of old we are tempted to ask, "But who is our neighbor?" Seeing that we are all neighbors in this world, let us know what the other peoples want. The American people need to know just how Russia feels about being squeezed out of the rich oil pools of the Near East. Russians need to know how Americans value individual freedom. As things stand now the American people hear much about the aggressions of Russia, but little is heard about the fundamental problems of justice which must always exist for all peoples as long as they seek to live. If we could know clearly just how the Russians feel about our way of life and if they could know clearly how we feel about theirs, then we would be much nearer to a creative solution. Why doesn't that happen? Recently we read an article which advocated that parents quarrel. However, the writer qualified his suggestion by saying that only comparatively mature and secure people can quarrel in a manner sufficiently objective to be of help in clarifying issues involved. Are not the nations still too self-willed, too egocentric? Will they need to suffer and suffer just like prodigal individuals before they come to see that no nation can live unto itself and that by trying to save one's life, one is bound to lose it? It seems as though they will have too unless enough Christians with great and clear enough imagination are so able to witness of God's truth that nations will repent of violence and receive God's Spirit.

THE SUPREME COURT of the United States has handed down a decision, which in principle, declares that public school property shall not be used for released time religious education classes. This decision grew out of the Champaign, Illinois, case in which an atheist mother protested that the classes put her son in an unfavorable light. How strictly the decision will be applied remains to be seen. However, the International Council of Religious Education has come out with a statement advocating that the decision of the Supreme Court be observed. It still is not clear how much of a loss this is to Christian education. Especially is this true because it is not too clear how effective such classes are. If it is true that the interpersonal relationships which a child experiences in the home during the first five or six years are the basis of his religious conceptions, then added knowledge may not change his patterns of life to any great extent. Furthermore, there is the consideration of whether the home should assume the task of religious instruction, at least in the case of Christian homes. Can the children make much progress if the parents do not share the same interests, etc.? We need religious instruction, but we need to know what is the best manner of giving it. The Supreme Court decision can be a blessing if it prompts a thorough investigation of that question.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S SPEECH was a sad experience to those listeners whose faith is in the Spirit of God rather than in armed force. To such the speech was an atomic burst of futility. What shall be the role of the peacemaker in these days? There may be many things that he will not be able to do, but one thing he should concentrate on—he should see to it that he will keep his witness of the Prince of Peace clear, for the world will continue to need it and someday may give more heed to it. Christ went to the cross with faith in certain "witnesses" to be. The darkness of the hour calls for just such expectancy in witnessing. He who trusts in Him who is the Truth knows that his trust is not in the perishable. Secondly, the pacifist must understand. When he remembers the President's message and especially the President's last words, "With God's help we shall succeed," then let him pray with Jesus, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." It is not clear to all that God's way is not the way of violence. Our President has had much more military training than seminary training. The same is true of other national leaders. But let the grace of forgiving stab us with the pain of doing our share as peacemakers. During this Passion Season we need to heed anew the call to carry the Cross, which is still foolishness to the world.

NIGHT OR DAWN

TODAY the world is weary, wistful, skeptical. It seems as though there is darkness, hopelessness, futility settling over the world. Men are fearful, insecure, suspicious. There is fear that the dawn of a more hopeful day, if there is a dawn at all, is far away. If only there were hope for the coming of a new day.

We seemingly are unaware of what is causing our darkness. We only know that we are in it and that we would like to be in the light. We are such helpless, blind children. We have continually crucified the great spiritual truth by which alone man can live. We have cast out and trodden under foot the invisible spiritual values which bring light. We seem to be unable or at least certainly unwilling to move into this area of life and to seek some of our solutions here. We cannot seem to comprehend that the spiritual sickness of man cannot be cured with a few new gadgets. We still have no willingness to use spiritual cures for our sickness of Soul and the darkness deepens. The cross of Christ goes unheeded. His words of invitation, "Follow me," fall on deaf ears. Man is still hoping to walk a broad easy road which has no Gethsemane or Calvary in it.

Good Friday forever refutes the assumption that the highest; noblest, best, can be acquired by easy ways and an easy life. When Jesus came upon Gethsemane with the shadow of the cross upon it, he did not seek an easy way. He could have refused to go to the garden. He could have slipped down the back side of the Mount of Olives and gone back to the little town of Nazareth. That would have been an easy way. But he refused to take it. "Unless a grain of wheat falls into the earth and dies it remains a single grain. But if it dies, it bears rich fruit."

Our great refusal comes at this point. We want the seed to multiply, we want an abundant harvest, but we do not want to endure the darkness of being planted. We want a world cure-all without Calvary and the cross. We want peace without penitence.

The crucified Christ is the graphic statement of God that redemption is tremendously costly. The scene of Calvary is not only one of personal redemption but one of creative suffering. Reinhold Niebuhr says that the Kingdom of God must still enter the world by the way of the crucifixion. Man must come into the humbling self-abasing presence of the cross and then find that God was in Christ Jesus reconciling the world to himself. Only as man hears the footsteps of Christ in his own soul does the darkness of Good Friday begin to change to the dawn of Easter.

"I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America and that I will serve them faithfully and honestly against all their enemies whomsoever and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me according to the rules and articles for the government of the Navy."—U. S. Navy Oath as of September 1, 1943.

"Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."—Jesus Christ, as quoted in Matt. 5:44.

Man and Sin

by George Dick

THERE are three verses of scripture that come to our attention as we consider this subject. Of course there are many more that could be sighted. Ps. 8:5 I take, speaks of man: "For thou hast made him but a little lower than God . . . " Rom. 6:23 "For the wages of sin is death . . . " Rom. 4:7 "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, whose sins are covered."

Rev. John Thiessen, writing in India Calling, speaks of the growth in the Indian boys. As we read it we maybe feel that there was not much growth, but as he comes to his concluding remarks, we feel that there has been growth. The background of the boys of course was Hindi. They had been taught from youth that they could not sin. When these boys had stolen certain articles in our mission school, they were asked to make restitution. Rev. Thiessen had wondered if they would straighten things up or would they fall back on their former faith. One by one they came back and confessed their guilt. There had been growth.

The verse in the Psalm deals with man as God originally made him, "a little lower than God." What a wonderful creation God made when He made man. Man was to fellowship with God; man was to assist Him in ordering the rest of creation. Greater heights could not have been imagined by anyone. And incidentally for us as Christians today we have this admonition, Eph. 1:12, "That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ."

It is a sad thing that with man we have to associate the thought of SIN, instead of FELLOWSHIP with God. "The wages of sin" does not speak of something that is not in existence. Sin is a reality; it is with us; it is in us.

Sin is spoken of as iniquity—that which has been twisted, that which is no longer straight. Sin is spoken of as transgression. A more literal translation is rebellion, apostasy. Sin is also spoken of as missing the mark. It is the going beyond, or the coming short, or the going to the side. It might even be the going above, or going beneath. Sin is not merely the violating of a principle, but it is the going against a person, the person being God, the Creator. To rebel against one's country

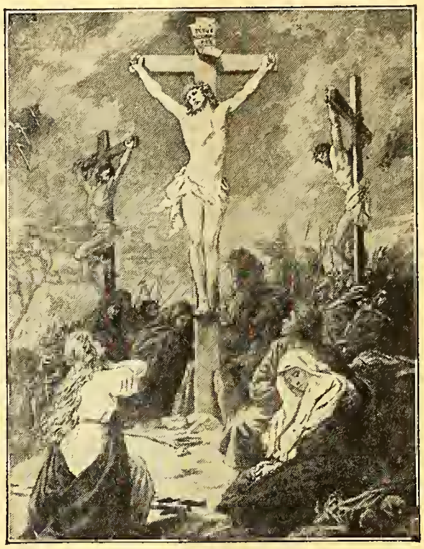
"In the Cross of Christ I Glory"

by Willard Claassen

On a visit to Macao in 1825, Sir John Bowring, then in the British diplomatic service at Hong Kong, saw the crumbling ruins of an old cathedral the Portuguese colonists had erected on the crest of a hill. Through the haze and the mist he saw the outline of a cross that had survived the assault of a typhoon some three centuries earlier. This sight provided the inspiration for the words of the great hymn, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."



"In the cross of Christ I glory,
  Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
  Gathers round its head sublime."

With true insight Bowring grasped the fact that the cross is the central, focal point of the Gospel. Like the scarlet strand woven into every rope in the British navy to identify it, so inextricably interwoven into Christianity is the doctrine of the cross. The apostle Paul gloried in the cross, e.g., I Cor. 2:2; Gal. 6:14; I Cor. 1:18. He declared that the preaching of the cross was to them who are saved, the power of God.

I

The cross reveals the power of God in dealing with sin. Our estimate of sin is too light and our feelings toward it are too complacent. The cross reveals sin in all its ugly blackness. The crucifixion is a familiar story that repeatedly sobs its way through the ranges of man's weary journey upon the earth. Who has not observed the horrible results of sin? It leaves broken homes, wrecked lives, damned souls, death, pestilence and destruction in its track! Yes, the cross teaches us the magnitude, the enormity of sin!

Disastrous as sin is and deeply ingrained as it is, God proposes to deal with it through the death of His son upon the cross. A haughty Roman said to an early Christian that Christianity could not survive because its founder was put to death upon a shameful cross. That is the very reason it has survived! It is through Christ's ministry upon the cross that we are forgiven, reconciled and retored. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth (keeps on cleansing) us from all sin." Through the cross God is able to cleanse our impure, defiled lives. The Mississippi river pours its dirty, muddy waters into the Gulf of Mexico, which absorbs and settles its sediment and all its uncleanness, and by the processes of evaporation and wind currents sends those waters purified back to the hills at their source as clean as when they first started fresh from the clouds. So we may cast our sinful lives upon God in Christ and find cleanness and a new life in Him.

II

The cross is the power of God in transforming the human mind. The death of Christ has power to change men's loyalties. It so utterly changes a man's point of view that the apostle Paul, for example, could say that the things he once hated, he loved and what he formerly loved, he came to hate! Count Nicholas Zinzendorf's whole life was changed after he looked upon a painting of the crucifixion by Sternberg in Duesseldorf. This man went forth to become one of the leaders and the protector of the pietistic Moravian brethren in Germany. The meaning of Calvary has been communicated to the mind of man in many ways, through art, through literature, through the spoken word, by example. And when something of the depth, the mystery and vastness of Calvary was comprehended, it radically changed people's lives!

The cross not only possesses the power to change men's loyalties, it is also a power that transforms and enlarges the faculties of the mind. It is marvelous what Christian people have been able to do with quite ordinary gifts! It is no idle boast when we remind the world that the great names in music, in art, and in literature were the names of those upon whom the Christ of Calvary had a great influence!

The cross is the power of God in cementing together human hearts. The cross brings all men down to a common denominator—the learned and the unlearned, the rich and the poor, the world's great and the lowly, the black race and the white race, Americans and Chinese. Whatever may be the artificial barriers men have erected to divide one another, the cross brings us together! There is no difference, for in one basic essential we all have the same need. All men stand in need of Christ's salvation. We make too little use of the fellowship—the brotherhood—the death of Christ has made possible! Two boys were trying to walk on the rails of a railroad track as boys often do. They walked a few feet and lost their balance and tried again, only to fail. Finally one of the boys had an idea. "Lets hold hands as we walk on the rails," he said. They reached out their arms and started walking and found there was no falling because they helped balance each other. The cross brings us together in a mighty fellowship, a fellowship that is a wonderful stabilizer in life.

IV

The cross is the power of God in transforming human conduct, (Gal. 2:20). Calvary is a compelling force calling forth our devotion and love. The saintly missionary to the American Indians, David Brainerd, gave this testimony to the practical value of the cross: "I never got away from Jesus and him crucified, and I found that when my people were gripped by this great evangelical doctrine of Christ and him crucified, I had no need to give them instructions about morality, I found that one followed—a sure and inevitable fruit of the other."

If the cross was inevitable for Jesus it is not the less so for His followers, for "the servant is not greater than his Lord." We like comfort and ease and are loathe to have the cross become a symbol of the Christian life! Someone has wisely said, "The Church is trying to share Christ's motive but escape his method." The cross was the Master's method. We will never face the cross in the unique way Jesus did, but on the other hand the Christian life does demand unselfish sacrifice. Jesus said, "Unless a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." Wheat found in the pyramids of Egypt a few years ago was said to be over four thousand years old. It was perfectly preserved and looked like the wheat of Egypt does today—but not one grain of that wheat will grow! It escaped the cross! The cross transforms human conduct and sanctifies sacrificial suffering.

"Bane and blessing, Pain and pleasure
By the cross are sanctified;
Peace is there that knows no measure
Joys that through all time abide."

"And Ye Visited Me"

(Rev. and Mrs. John Wichert were "let loose" to minister spiritually to displaced Mennonites in Germany. Here are some of their experiences.)

WE want to share with you, some of the experiences in Germany.

In the beginning of December we left Amsterdam to begin our work with thousands of stranded Mennonites in the western zones of Germany. Since the refugees live widely scattered it was impossible to visit each one individually. Therefore, we made plans to gather them into groups for services. So until Christmas we toured the districts of Westphalia and Ostfriesland in a German Volkswagen, with Peter Pauls, a refugee, as driver. Before we began our journeys Brother Siegfried Janzen, the director at Gronau, humourously remarked, "Now we will let you loose on Germany." Little did we know what that would mean, but we have learned since what he meant.

Our task is different from that of the other MCC workers. Whereas others work in the distribution of food and clothing or deal with the officials in the matter of processing people for emigration, we are called upon to visit the people and bring them a message of cheer and comfort.

This spiritual ministry gives us an opportunity to live, eat, and sleep with the refugees. Once we slept in a small room with seven others. In these days one is very fortunate to find a heated room. Most of them are not. Usually the mattress is just a sack of straw, which has to be puffed up every morning. At each place we hear the same story of broken families, lack of food and clothing, and lack of fuel. One needs to hear these stories and see in what condition the people live to fully understand their deplorable situation.

Broken homes. Here is a husband with his family missing, and there a mother with a few young ones, no father, no grown-up sons. Where are they? That's their greatest worry. Most of them are in cold Siberia from where anyone seldom returns.

Tears flow down their cheeks as they relate their terrible treks from their home country into Germany. We sit and weep with them that weep. We tell them about their relatives in U.S.A. and Canada, and how they are doing their utmost to help them. We speak to them of the love of God and remind them that He has not forgotten them. We give them the Gospel message. It kindles new hope in their hearts. The thought that they, too, someday might be able to migrate to their relatives in America brightens up their faces. This process is slow, however, and in the meantime they have to wait.

Clothing is very scarce in most cases, especially shoes. Children wear wooden shoes to school. The women wear "Schlorren." This is a wooden sandel with a strip of leather across the toes. Sometimes young boys wear high heeled shoes.

In many cases we see cartons from CARE packages. They smile as they point at them and remark, "If we would not have received help from America we should not have lived through it all." Some of the children are sickly, pale and lifeless, with sores all over their bodies. We sing a few songs with them and hand out a few sweets and cookies that we have brought along. How thankful they are!

We spent Christmas in Camp Backnang near Stuttgart, where some six hundred refugees are being cared for. In January, and in part of February we toured Wuerttemberg, Bavaria, and Hessen, with cities like Bamberg, Nuernberg, Regensburg, Ingolstadt, Augsburg, and Munich. The destruction is horrible. At places people have placed a cross and a wreath on some debris to mark the spot where one or more of their loved ones lies under the ruins. The public roads are filled with people in search of fuel and food. Broken old ladies may be seen picking up brush and pine twigs and cones and loading the fuel on a hand cart and slowly pulling it up the steep hills to the place of abode.

We are told of a refugee woman who is sick in an old people's home. She has suffered a nervous breakdown. Her sister lives in Canada. Will she ever be able to go and join her sister in this land of freedom? Hardly. She has no control over motions. Her mind, however, is

"I Know That My Redeemer Liveth"

by Paul R. Shelly

TWO approaches can be taken to any fact in history. One approach is objective; the other is subjective. In the first, one is concerned primarily about the facts involved and in the second one is concerned about the effect the facts have on us. As we think of the resurrection of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ we can also take these two approaches. The first is the fact of the resurrection itself. This answers the question primarly of what took place. The second is the meaning of the resurrection in our lives. Both of these approaches are suggested in the title of this article: I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." This title will be recognized as a part of Job 19:25 and also as the title of one of our familiar Easter hymns. The last three words speak of the fact of the resurrection: "My Redeemer liveth." The first two words add the other approach, the fact that we have experienced this in our own lives. We want to discuss these two approaches.

I. My Redeemer Liveth

Christians do not need a proof of the resurrection of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and yet it is helpful for us to examine some of the evidences for the resurrection. I want to list four of these:

1. The Appearances. In the Gospels, in the book of Acts, and in I Corinthians we have these appearances recorded. The appearances themselves give us concrete evidence of the resurrection. These are all the more important since the disciples were not looking for the resurrection of Christ. They had not fully comprehended his message and were not looking for him to rise again.

2. The Empty Tomb. The empty tomb is another evidence of the reality of the resurrection. There are only three ways to account for the empty tomb. The one is that the Jews stole the body. However, had this been true, they would have produced the body as the disciples proclaimed the Resurrection of Christ as the center of their faith at Pentecost and during the years that followed. The second is that the disciples stole the body. This, however, would not have been a firm basis for the transforming faith which was produced in the lives of the disciples. The only solution is that Christ arose from the grave as he had prophesied.

3. The Transformed Lives. All of the writers of the New Testament proclaimed that it was through the living Christ that they were transformed. They claimed that the living Christ produced their new life. Thus Paul said: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me . . . . " (Gal. 2:20)

4. The Triumphant Faith. The preaching of the early disciples centered in the resurrection. The burden of the message was that this Jesus who had been crucified had been raised from the dead and through belief in Him that people could have a newness of life. It was the resurrection that produced the triumphant faith. This was the culmination of the Gospel. The plan of God was now complete.

II. I Know That My Redeemer Liveth

It is well to know that the facts of the resurrection are true. However, we also need to take the second approach to the resurrection. We need to have the living Christ in our own hearts. We need to know from experience that our Redeemer liveth. Thus in the song: "He Lives" we have these words: "You ask me how I know he lives? He lives within my heart." The question comes to us as to the difference that the living Christ makes in the life of the Christian. Let us examine five of the appearances of Christ and see the difference that each made to the people to whom He appeared.

1. To Know the Living Christ means to have a new Hope. Mary came to the tomb on the first Easter morning with fear and despair filling her heart. When Christ met her she was filled with a new hope. The one who meant most to her was a living Person, who was going to be with her eternally. To know the living Christ aright means that the fear and despair in our hearts will be translated into hope that fadeth not away. For Christ said: "Let not your heart be troubled . . . . . I go to prepare a place for you."

2. To Know the Living Christ means to have Him with us at all times. Two people where walking to Emmaus and were discussing the facts of the crucifixion and that they had hoped that this man Jesus was the one who would redeem Israel. As they walked Christ joined them. As they reached their destination they invited Him to come into their home and He was made known to them in the breaking of bread. Christ said to his disciples. "Lo. I am with you alway." This can be our experience with the Living Christ to have Him ever with us to guide us and comfort us.

A CREED FOR LIVING

Let me be the self the potter dreamed I'd be;
Let me have the faith my tears demand of me;
Let me grow a love the world expects of me;
Let me find a cause that pulls the best from me;
This I make my creed, and let it plant the seeds
For a life God needs to save a world that bleeds.

—The Late Bishop Schuyler E. Garth

3. To know the Living Christ means to have assurance. Thomas brought his doubts to the place where he felt that the Risen Lord would appear. He didn't believe. He said: "Except I shall see . . . . I will not believe." Christ appeared the second time to the disciples, this time Thomas being present. Thomas had an experience with the Living Christ and could say: "My Lord and My God." We too have our doubts at times in life. Some people never seem to have had doubts. There are others who go through periods in life when they are not quite certain of some issues. With Thomas, as we bring these doubts to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ and experience anew the Living Christ, we can have assurance and with Paul say: "I know whom I have believed."

4. To know the Living Christ means to place Him first in our lives. Jesus met seven of the disciples at the sea of Galilee. All of these had followed Peter's suggestion and were fishing again. It is here that Christ appeared to them. After they followed the command of Christ and had caught the miraculous draught of fish Christ appeared to Peter. After Christ asked Peter three times whether he loved Him Peter learned that if he would truly serve Him he must give Him first place. To know the living Christ always means a loyalty of this kind. Christ is still saying: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God . . . "

5. To Know the Living Christ means to be a witness. Before Christ left this world He gave the final commission to the disciples. Matthew records it in these words: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations . . . ." Acts records it in the following words: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." To know the living Christ still means to be possessed by a power that enables one to be a witness to Christ in all of our activities in life.

Evangelical Mission Work In Colombia

AS SEEN BY A VISITOR

Miss Mary Becker, General Conference mission worker at Cachipay, Colombia, writes: "This article by Mr. Waldemar Bellon was sent in to some papers in Germany about our work here after he and his wife visited us last June. He sent us a copy of the Wochenpost in which it appeared last November 23, and upon request also gave us the permission to have it published in our papers . . . . The value of an article like this, as I see it, is that it is written by an outsider who has seen the work. Of course, the picture is too ideal and too perfect for any work where imperfect individuals work with imperfect individuals. But on the whole it gives a visitor's view of the work."

MR. STUCKY met us at the railway station with his station wagon, which can carry about a dozen passengers and quite a number of supplies besides. On getting in we looked somewhat critically at the steep, descending village street, which was paved with large, flat stones, and was more like a mule path than a street. But the car glided safely downwards; and upon leaving the village it took a narrower path to the right, which was just wide enough for the wheelbase, and in which at times one or more stones were missing. Carefully jogging along, the road led us over about three steep inclines and declines, past blooming gardens and heavily laden orange trees. And between the flowers and fruitful plantations there stood simple summer houses with wide verandas and large arched windows.

After a half-hour's trip we reached the goal. A two-story square structure lay before us. The house which harbors the children's home of the Colegio Evangelico has an airy appearance. Here about two dozen children, most of them the healthy sons and daughters of leprous parents, live and work; and when one hears the happy laughter and sees the lively activity, one immediately gets the impression that these children are happy.

Mr. Stucky, upon whose invitation we are here, is a North American coming from a family of Swiss origin. He opened the home in Colombia about four months ago under the auspices of the Mennonite Mission. But one might think that we were dealing with an organization that has been running according to schedule for years. When the gong sounds at 7:00 a.m. for morning devotions, the chairs have already been placed on the sunny porch, facing the fruitful tropical landscape which is closed off on the horizon by a zigzaggy mountain chain. The day is begun with hymns, Scripture and prayer. At the close the children put on the "Golden Gloves," a symbolic act, which, with the motions of pulling on a pair of gloves, combines a verse which reminds the children of their duties as Christian toward God and their neighbor. With the warning to be careful that the golden gloves do not drop from their hands the children are dismissed to go into the near-by dining room, and soon one hears them sing their grace at the table.

Fruit, which grows here in abundance and in unimaginable diversity, is served first. Then there is oatmeal and coffee with bread, which, spread with sweetened peanut butter, is liked very much by the children. Afterwards each one has his duties: washing dishes, cleaning rooms, washing the floors; and no one has to be reminded the second time what his duty is. And in this connection one must not forget that only a few months ago these children lived in poor and often disorderly conditions and that they had little notion of cleanliness and obedience. But today no child comes to the table without washing or forgets to brush his teeth . . . , and disappears punctually on the minute on Sunday morning to change for morning worship.

While we observe the life in the home, our way leads us past the kitchen door where we surprise the nurse who lives in the home, at work preparing carrots, for

by O.A. Waltner

Many of you know that through the efforts of Dr. R. C. Kauffman the Mission in India secured two 15 Kilowatt Diesel Electric Generating Power Plants. These were purchased from the American Army through the Committee of Surplus Supplies. One of these engines is to furnish electricity for the General Hospital and the Leprosarium in Champa. The other engine will furnish electrical power for the hospital in Jagdeeshpur.

The work of wiring the hospitals and bungalows in Champa was begun some time ago but has not been completed. Installation of the electrical plant in Jagdeeshpur has not yet been begun.

It is estimated that $8,000 will be needed to pay for the building of the power houses, purchasing of wire and supplies and payment of labor costs of installing and fitting electrical equipment. The needs of this project were presented to the Foreign Mission Board. The Board is agreed that this project be presented to the churches in America, asking them to contribute towards this project.

Dr. H. E. Dester took with him electrical equipment for the hospital which he can't use until the hospital is wired. Similarly, Dr. H. R. Bauman has some electrical equipment which is useless until the wiring job in Champa is completed. Mr. Willard Unruh is now in India to do the wiring of the buildings and to arrange for the completion of the power houses.

Since I am studying in the Seminary it will be impossible for me to present this project in person in the various churches. It is for that reason that I write this, hoping that communities will arrange to send contributions directly to the Headquarter's Office at 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

In behalf of the medical program in our mission field in India, I'm asking for your sympathetic consideration towards this project which will considerably increase the usefulness of our hospitals there.

there are no maids here. Mr. Stucky and his wife, the nurse, and the directress of the school do all the work alone with the children, and only on the parceled-out piece of land are there paid workers who plant coffee and banana trees, earn potatoes and corn, and see to it that the quickly growing underbrush does not return the cultivated land to its original state within a few months. For nowhere does the struggle of man against the powers of nature, against its wild growth, against torrents of rain and storms, require more vigilance and constant watchfulness than here in the tropical mountain country.

Certainly the self-understood working along with the children on the part of the leaders of this children's home has its share in developing in the children habits of order and obedience. But after we have been together with them a short while, we discover that it is the spirit that rules in this house, which no one can escape, the self-evidence with which Christian conduct pervades daily living and permeates everything—every word that is spoken, every direction that is given. There is no commanding, but only a simple mentioning of that which is needed, and the manner in which this is done is borne of love and consciousness of duty.

Everything sectarian that one might fear at first is absent in this small group, and one feels the uniting power of Christian living much more than the dividing. It may be that here in this Catholic land where the evangelicals from a disappearing minority, a uniting of all like-minded efforts is felt necessary. It may be that the tolerance towards those of other beliefs, which is practiced in the great democracy of the United States, has something to do with this. The fact is that we as non-Mennonites felt ourselves so free and naturally at home that, aside from the Christian thought that unites us, nothing divisive came to the fore. And it might be mentioned that in the conversation divisive questions, like infant baptism, were not avoided, but were discussed in all openness with due respect for the opinion of the other.

The evangelical mission of all the branches that work here in South America, many of them among wild Indian tribes and among illiterates, looks beyond that which divides to the common goal. That which often plays an overweighing role in the homelands of these missions, in the security of ordered existence, disappears here as out of place in the face of the important tasks. Helping each other in a material and spiritual way these people re-establish the spirit of Jesus Christ who knew no dogmas or Confessions, but only a large Church of those who want to be His disciples.

quite clear. She has to be assisted into her chair by helping her to place her legs. How thankful she was that we had visited her and left a word and verse of comfort.

But it is not only comfort that most of the refugees need; they need religious instruction. Much has been neglected in the past twenty to thirty years, through no fault of their own, of course. To help remedy this we held a course of instruction at Backnang. This was very much appreciated. The meetings were well attended by both young and old. When we left the camp the following verse was given to us, "Be ye strong therefore and let not your hands be weak; for your work shall be rewarded" II Chron. 15:7. We have begun similar work at Gronau. Such work is only possible in a camp where people can gather for daily meetings in larger numbers. On February 22, we held a farewell festival for the first group to leave for Paraguay.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The churches of the community are again invited to participate in the musical events presented on Easter Monday, the traditional College Music Day. The community choir program in the morning begins at ten o'clock. In the afternoon the Music Department presents a variety of musical organizations on the campus. This program starts at two o'clock, the evening program starts at eight o'clock. At that time the combined College and Academy choruses will present the "Seven Last Words of Christ" by Dubois. For the convenience of any visitors who wish to stay on the campus during the noon hour the Home Economics girls will sell lunches and coffee. The proceeds from this sale will be used to buy asphalt tile flooring for the sewing room.

Tryouts for the College Play, "The Magnificent Obsession," are being held this week. The Academy debaters debated the question of compulsory labor arbitration before the student body last Monday.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Mrs. Jerry Sauder, Grabill, Indiana, spoke before a joint meeting of the YM and YWCA Wednesday evening, March 10. Following this meeting Rev. S. T. Moyer spoke to the combined Men's and Women's Gospel Team groups. The Women's Gospel Team gave a program at New Stark, Ohio, Sunday evening, March 14. Rev. C. E. Kerr, Smithville, Ohio, spoke in the Vesper Service March 14. Rev. Kerr is director of Boys Village near Wooster. Rev. Paul Shelly and Carl Lehman were in Pennsylvania over the March 14 week-end. On Sunday morning Rev. Shelly spoke in the Fairfield Mennonite church in the morning and Carl Lehman in the evening. The choir sings under the direction of Miss Ruth Janzen, instructor of music at the Berean Academy. A program in song and testimony was recently given in our church by students and teachers of the Berean Academy.—Dorothea J. Dyck, Corr.

—Herold Church, Bessie, Oklahoma: The marriage of Ernest Harms son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Harms and member of our church to Ruth Louis Lambertus, Custer City, member of the Vicksburg Community Church, took place March 7. The week of special meetings with Rev. D. J. Unruh, Newton, speaker, beginning March 8, have been postponed.—Mrs. Herman Horn, Corr.

—The Schoenwieser Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba: On February 29 we had the pleasure of hearing Dr. Krahn of Newton, Kansas, at our evening service. On March 3 he showed slides of familiar places and people of Russia. Some of the pictures had been taken before the Second World War, and other in 1942-43. As a large part of the audience came from Russia originally it was permitted to participate in the explanation of the pictures. The remarks of some of our newly-arrived refugees proved very helpful.—Justina Hildebrand, Corr.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: Rev. Reeves, one of our colored brethren, gave us a short sermon on the evening of March 1. Some of the Colored young folks sang, and their music teacher gave a very beautiful poem. Our pastor, Rev. A. H. Peters, has been giving a series of sermons based on Voices from Bible Lands. On March 15 he gave The Voice from the Garden. We had as our guests for this service a group of Camp Fire girls and three of their guardians. The Christian, Methodist, and Mennonite churches will join in union Holy Week services. The Rev. P. E. Frantz family visited here recently. Rev. Frantz is a former pastor.—Corr.

—Spring Valley Church, Newport, Washington: The Ladies Aid made a wool comfort for relief and worked on some relief clothing. William Winskie, who is blind, played a special number at our communion service, March 7. He had memorized the number from his Braille sheet music.—Mrs. A. V. Krehbiel, Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kansas: On Sunday evening, March 7, the men's chorus gave a program of sacred music at the Burns Church. The Christian Endeavor meeting was held March 14 with Universal Military Training as the theme. Correction: Rev. John J. Esau is from Bluffton, Ohio, not Goshen, Indiana, as was previously stated.—Ella Voth, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: By special request our minister, Rev. A. S. Rosenberger, consecrated four children below one year of age. This service, usually held near Children's Day in June, was held March 14, as our minister leaves to start a new pastorate April 1. Kenneth Badertscher at the piano and Ronnie Sprunger with his sweet, youthful voice gave the musical number "Near to the Heart of God." Nine years ago these two boys were among the children consecrated. "Our Faith Must Be Passed On" was the title of the sermon following the consecration service. Stan and Iona Hostetter have been accepted by the Mennonite Central Committee for foreign relief work. Stan will be graduated from Bluffton College this year and Iona is at present an elementary teacher at Pandora, Ohio.—Corr. Mrs. Ivan Badertscher.

—Gnadenberg Church, Whitewater, Kansas: Rev. D. C. Wedel of Bethel College will give a series of pre-Easter services in our church, starting March 21. In January our C. E. Society had as their guest speaker, Robert Tully, coach at Bethel College. His topic was based on, "Youth's Venture's in Recreation." Dr. R. C. Kauffman, also of Bethel College, spoke to the C. E. Society in February about "What It Means To Grow Up."—Mrs. W. W. Harms, Corr.

When I Survey the Wondrous Cross

When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.

Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the death of Christ my God:
All the vain things that charm me most,
I sacrifice them to his blood.

See, from his head, his hands, his feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down:
Did e'er such love and sorrow meet,
Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all. Amen.

Hold Youth Meeting in Winnipeg

by Bill Dick

Wherever the Mennonites heve lived in the past centuries, since their origin, they have generally been known as "Die Stillen im Lande." Through their simple unobtrusive way of life, they have borne a living testimony to the world. As a matter of principle they have refrained from doing much agressive advertising of the concepts of their faith. As a result their fellow countrymen have often held a faint or even a distorted conception of their beliefs. Upon certain occasions the Mennonites have been called upon to give clear-cut clarifying statements of their actual beliefs.

We were privileged to witness such an occasion recently in the Bethel Mission Church here in Winnipeg. The local branch of the "Student Christian Movement," an organization of university and normal school students, had arranged for this meeting, to be held on Sunday night, January 25. It was their sincere desire to have the above question answered, "Who are the Mennonites?"

Rev. Arnold Regier directed a few welcoming remarks to the visitors. He briefly commented on the rich heritage in song that the Mennonites possess, especially in the great chorals of the Christian Church. The congregation then heartily united in singng two of the well-known chorales, "O Pow'r of Love" and "Holy God We Praise Thy Name."

As an opening Scripture reading a portion from the Sermon on the Mount, Matt. 5:21-42, was read. Rev. I. I. Friesen, pastor of the Bethel Mission Church, then gave an overview of the origin and beliefs of the Mennonites. He pointed out the date of the establishment of the Mennonite Church and also the name after whom it has been called. He mentioned the severe persecution that the Mennonites have suffered and briefly reviewed the various migrations that the Mennonites have made in order to evade persecution and in a quest for freedom of worship.

Rev. Friesen enumerated the following distinct doctrinal beliefs of our people.

(1) The belief in a triune God, the Creator and Sustainer of all things.

(2) The belief in Jesus Christ, as the Son of God, the Saviour of mankind.

(3) The belief in the Holy Spirit as indwelling and empowering the believers in this present dispensation.

(4) The belief in the absolute need of the redemption of man and in the only way of salvation through faith in Christ.

The points by which the Mennonite church seeks to make a unique and original contribution to the Christian church are: (1) The concept of a pure church patterned after the early Apostolic church which involves voluntary church membership, baptism upon confession of faith, strict church discipline and a democratic brotherhood manner of church government (2) The concept of a church regulated by the Scriptures and especially by Christ's teachings in the Sermon on the Mount. The beliefs of non-resistance and the non-swearing of oaths are included in this. Rev. Friesen brought out that the Mennonite attitude of non-resistance has been somewhat of a negative one, but that as a positive avenue of service, much relief work has been done by the Mennonites, directed by the M. C. C.

To close the service the congregation sang, "Faith of Our Fathers." Following this the members of the S. C. M., and others interested, gathered in the church basement for a discussion on the evening's subject. Leonard Siemens, a Mennonite member of the S. C. M., led the discussion and first introduced those who were to answer any questions that arose—I. I. Friesen, Rev. A. J. Regier, Rev. J. J. Voth, and Benj. Ewert.

On the whole the questions asked were very logical and pertinent. We will give a short summary of them as they were discussed.

1. What are the points of variance among the different Mennonite groups? Rev. Friesen explained that the various main groups (about eighteen in number) agreed in the essential points of doctrine but differed outwardly as in the form of baptism, worship and dress.

2. What is the difference between the Mennonites and the Lutherans? Rev. Voth pointed out that the two main differences were that the Mennonites held for non-resistance and adult baptism.

3. What is the connection between the Mennonites and the Hutterites? Rev. Regier stated that both of these groups had originated at about the same time and had various things in common, but that they differed in that the Hutterites hold for a communal distribution of all their goods, they live in closed colonies, are opposed to higher education, and have a very conservative mode of dress.

4. What attitude do the Mennonites take toward holding public offices? Rev. Ewert explained that on this point the Mennonites differed in opinion as groups and as individuals. However, at present the great majority were in favour of it, but comparatively few have succeeded in holding office thus far.

5. What is the Mennonite Church's present attitude toward those who have joined in active service in the last war?

Rev. Friesen discussd this matter as follows: "The Bill Dick is from Ontario and at present is a student at Canadian Mennonite Bible College. He is an active youth worker in the church and is Ontario representative on the Canadian Youth Peoples Messenger staff, a new youth paper published by Canadian youth.

Easter Sunrise Service

As the dawn breaks on Easter morn, many Christians over the globe will gather to worship and rejoice as the sun rises. These services have been broadcast for a number of years and you could follow by radio the rising of the sun across the nation as each group celebrates the risen Christ! Pictured here is a sunrise service in the Garden of the Gods just outside of Colorado Springs, Colorado.

action taken towards these again varies within the different groups. Some are very strict while others are perhaps too lenient. Yet generally speaking the church does not find the whole fault in these individuals, but finds it also by herself in that she has neglected to give efficient and extensive teaching on this matter in the recent past. However, it is expected of those concerned to come to the insight that they have committed a wrong, and should repent in order to again take up intimate fellowship with the church." This concluded the discussion of the evening.

We, as Mennonites who witnessed this rare occasion could not help but recognize the great significance of it. Was it not an inspiration, a challenge, a testing for us and for the church? Should it not behoove us to earnestly strive, to hold high the standards of our Mennonite faith?

Christian Service Conference Held in Chicago

Twenty young people gathered at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, March 5-7 for a Young People's Christian Service Conference. The conference was sponsored by the Education Committee of the Middle District Conference.

The main addresses of the conference were given on the following topics: "Achievements of the Christian Church" by Dr. S. F. Pannabecker; 'The Challenge to the Church from the Present Crisis" by Dr. J. Winfield Fretz; "Responsibilities of the Christian Gospel" by Don E. Smucker; "Personal Commitment to Christian Service" by Rev. A. E. Kreider. On Sunday afternoon at the regular vesper service held at the seminary, Dr. Winfield Fretz spoke on "Revival of Apostolic Christianity."

Besides the main addresses, the group saw a film "The Kindled Flame," depicting how the early Christians faced persecution. The numerous areas of Christian service were discussed, namely: the teaching ministry, the ministry of service, the pastoral ministry to foreign lands, the ministry of music.

On Saturday afternoon the group took a tour through the city. They saw the Negro section, the Old Mennonite Mission, Hull House, famous Madison Street, the street of down and outers, the Loop or central business and shopping district, Moody Bible Institute the wealthy north side, and the Planetarium.

The leaders who were present for the conference were: Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, Rev. Don E. Smucker, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, Rev. J. T. Neufeld, Rev. Marvin J. Dirks, Rev. E. J. Miller, Mrs. E. J. Miller, and Jacob D. Goering.

The young people present were: Joanne Vercler, Meadows, Illinois; Joanna Bowen, Topeka, Indiana; Lois Rich, Washington, Illinois; Len Smucker, Bluffton, Ohio; Alice Ruth Pannabecker, Chicago; Bob Ramseyer, Bluffton, Ohio; Burton G. Voluntary Service in Cuauhtemoc, Mexico

by Frances Funk

Way below just to the north at the foot of that smaller hill lies Cuauhtemoc, looking so small, neat and peaceful, with its imposing Catholic cathedral towering above all the rest of the little town. If one looks very closely, he can pick out the M. C. C. home, too. It looks just like a little speck of white from such a distance. That's where Walter Drudge keeps so busy building sheds, and storage cupboards and bookshelves; and where Adeline Heinrichs keeps the pot of soup boiling; and where Mel Funk directs and looks after the unit; and where all the workers manage to keep comfortable and happy, sharing in cleaning, dish washing, and week-end meal preparation along with their other work. That's home! There even the little beggar children came on Christmas morning and had a share in the abundance.

And look! One can pick out the little German Mennonite church, too, where unit members join in the worship every Sunday. There are a good many lively young people in that church. They often visit the M. C. C. home to play different games, and seem anxious for creative things to do during their leisure time. Most of them were at the Christmas party the unit gave and seemed to have a big time. Mel directs a little choir at the church and Clara Schellenberg has a nice little schoolroom in the back, where she has German school every day with eighteen lively Mennonite youngsters. She works hard with the school, and it's beginning to bear its fruits.

Oh, and there's the city plaza, too—every Mexican city has its plaza. And on the corner are the little general stores of Mr. Redekop and Mr. Renpenning. These folks are Mennonite folks, and very friendly and helpful to the unit. The Redekops became everybody's adopted parents over the Christmas holidays, since the group was so far from their own homes. Fran Funk does much of the unit buying at these stores, and certainly enjoys going there and practicing her meager German. These folks cater much to the Alt Kolonier Mennonite folks who live in this area. During the weekdays there are always many horses and wagons tied up at the front, and blond, blue-eyed colonists standing around—they are such a real contrast to the dark-haired and dark-eyed Mexicans. One can always pick them out, too, by their blue denim overalls, and beautifully embroidered head shawls; the married ladies wear black shawls, and the little girls and unmarried ladies wear white ones.

It's great fun for everybody to pick out his favorite haunts. There's the post office where Harold keeps a lookout for everybody's letters from home; there's the store where the man works who wants to teach his daughter English—almost everybody in town wants to learn English; there's the little meat market where the crude little meat wagon makes its regular stops, and where the unit gets wonderfully fresh meat at surprisingly low cost; and there are the two Chinese fruit and vegetable markets; and there's the Salubridad, or Mexican Health Department, from which Erna Klassen, one of the nurses, and Randall Heinrichs worked to start a vaccination and diphtheria inoculation program among the Mennonite villages; and there's the little Methodist mission church, where Ruby Edwards, the other nurse, who speaks Spanish, hopes to make a contribution.

Yes, that is the little frontierlike town of Cuauhtemoc, where the sun shines most of the time, the dust flies part of the time, and the snow falls only once in a great while; where the little poor children run barefooted even on the coldest days of winter, the pigs roam the dusty, rocky streets, wallowing in the slop thrown from the doorsteps, and the reliable burros plod with their heavy loads of wood and wares, or wander about the streets.

Beyond the city, all the way to the north, as far as the eye can see, is the beautiful San Antonio Valley where the 12,000 Alt Kolonier Mennonites live in their neat little typically Russian villages. Village after village, and fascinating patchwork patterns of tilled and irrigated fields in between. It's a real sight to behold! And on down to the west of the big hill and a little south are the newest villages, all with their beautiful patchwork fields, too. And on either side of the magnificent plains are tall purple mountains, standing as if to guard and protect the valley between.

Then, away to the east is the road leading to Chihuahua, through valleys and over hills and through mountains. That is the larger city, less frontierlike, and more Americanized, where nine Mennonite young people came for the first M. C. C. summer unit in Mexico last year. They helped the Methodist missionaries in their hospital and educational program, and seem to have been greatly appreciated.

The sun is slipping down toward the western horizon now; so everybody takes one last longing look in all directions: out over Cuauhtemoc, and the Mennonite valley; off toward Chihuahua, and finally to the south out over the deep purple mountain ranges as far as the eye can see, toward the many little sparkling lakes which look so refreshing in this semidesert land. It is different, but it is beautiful. It is a part of God's land, and these are God's people. It is good to look out over the valley and hills and dream of the future—the hospital, the vaccinations, recreational activities for young people, classes in English, and perhaps even music and crafts, and something for the poor little Mexican children—a Bible school? a playground?

It is good to be able to answer in the words of the poet's "Are Ye Able":

> "Lord, we are able! Our spirits are Thine!
> Remold them, make us like Thee, divine.
> Thy guiding radiance above us shall be
> A beacon to God, to love and loyalty."

Grace -- Form or Experience?

by B. Bargen

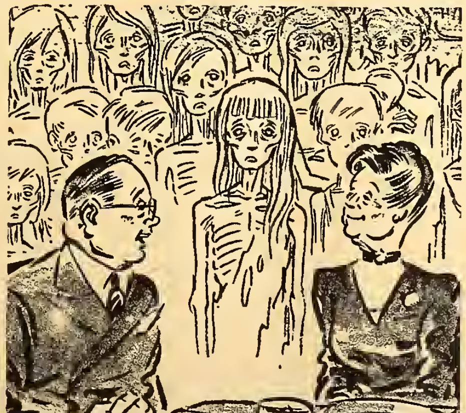
GRACE at table may be a form. It may be an experience. I recall vividly one afternoon when our family moved from a non-Mennonite community into a Mennonite community after having been separated from our people for some six years. It was in the month of August, and we had been unpacking our goods and trying to set up housekeeping. It was a hot muggy day, and we were tired, dirty, and uncomfortable, when our nextdoor neighbor, a whitehaired, venerable grandfather knocked at our door and invited us to have supper over at their place. We washed up quickly, and made the most necessary changes of clothing, and walked over to our neighbor's where supper was ready; and almost immediately we were ushered into the dining room where we sat down—our family and their family together, making quite a large tablefull.

Our venerable host was seated at the head of the table; and with hands resting on the edges of the white tablecloth, his stately face, looking silently about the assembled group commanded that silence—that precious moment of silence when we pause, even before we bow—and said in a voice never to be forgotten, "Lasst uns danken!"

We bowed—bowed our tired bodies—bowed our heads— and bowed our hearts, as we felt ourselves once more slipping back into the spiritual vitality of a Mennonite home in a Mennonite community where grace IS something. The prayer that followed I shall never forget. The voice—Oh, what a voice!—so full, so resonant, so throbbing with vitality, each word falling from his lips like the ringing blow of the hammer which he had been swinging in his blacksmith shop all day: "O grosser Gott und lieber Vater: Aus tiefstem herzen danken wir . . ."

When that grace had been said, the meal was half over We had had bread which the world knows not of. When that grace had been said, we had had an experience.

"Shall We Say Grace?"



Cut courtesy, "The Washington Post"

But some of us don't put that much into the saying of grace. We jingle our grace like a man jingles his coins in his pockets when he stands in idle conversation. Or, as one of our pastors used to observe: "Und dann beten wir den lieben Gott noch schnell etwas vor."

What makes grace at table effective? Let us venture a few suggestions:

First of all, the father in the home is the usual one who leads out with grace at table. And, personally, I question whether that function should be permanently delegated, as it sometimes is, to children, like an unpleasant duty. This it seems to me, while there may be frequent and notable exceptions, yet as a general rule is something which the father reserves to himself. He is the priest in the home. In the second place, he doesn't relegate it to a subordinate position in his thinking. Already ten minutes before the table service he is thinking precisely what new slant he can give to the saying of grace which will keep it from ever becoming a mere form. If it is a grace at breakfast, he has read in advance the scripture passage or the devotional message to be read at the breakfast table and has prepared, in addition to the printed prayer something pecularily his own—unique. If the printed prayer is read, he goes smoothly from the printed prayer into his own, the creative prayer of his own spirit, so that the family cannot even perceive the difference.

This is to suggest that what he reads he reads creatively and what he prays he prays creatively, so that with selfsame spirit he reads and prays and his family is scarcely aware as to what is being read and what is being poured out from the depths of his own soul.

In the third place he never congeals it into a fixed form. Never quite the same from day to day and never exactly alike two meals in succession. It breathes a spirit of praise and adoration, but it breathes also the spirit of true and honest confession.

Fourth, he adapts it to the occasion and to the group. When the children are small, his language and the length of the prayer are appropriate to the little ones, yet with swift and penetrating insight he inserts what the olders ones need. As the children are growing up, he must realize that he is running competition with a strong appetite, pre-occupation with prior interests, and perhaps a heavy schedule of activities. The clock, the playground and the stomach, are all operating against him, and grace, to be effective, must outrun them all.

All of the above, of course, is not to say that no other members of the family say grace. To be, truly, an experience of each and every one, each member of the family must, at one time or another, of course participate in it. It is neither the exclusive duty nor the exclusive right of the father to say grace, but he will exercise caution to make sure that it does not become mechanical. It can become mechanical by children taking turns by meals. And these turns become as mechanical as the turns of a wheel and become, sooner or later, nothing but an odius duty with no meaning attached to them whatever. But the father, assigning grace by an advance appointment, encourages and helps children, and when guests arrive, makes advance arrangements rather than to call on someone at random at the moment of being seated.

The above suggests that there is grace often said at large gatherings. And one is often impressed at such gatherings more by the monontony of stereotyped form than one is by the genuineness of the prayer as such. If it is nothing but a form, it might as well be dropped; if it is something more than a form, then it deserves the same care and thought and preparation which one would give to any other meaningful work. Most people, one is afraid but forced to confess, have listened to stereotyped prayers at table so long that they have come to the conclusion that it is the former and not the latter, and acting sensibly have dropped it.

EDITORIALS

SOMETIME ago we ran an editorial mentioning how a new law in the Central Provinces of India required that all conversions to Christianity could take place only in the presence of the district magistrate, who is to satisfy himself that the person converted has voluntarily embraced the new religion. As much as we have been able to learn about the General Conference mission work in India, the conversions are going on unhindered and the government of India is furnishing a large degree of religious freedom which is very encouraging to the missionaries.

THE U. S. is reported as sending hundreds of shiploads of food to Italy as part of the program to keep it from going Communist on April 18. The feeding of people is indeed praiseworthy, but a good deed is at its best when it is freely done, rather than under compulsion. What has happened in Italy in the months since it was "liberated" to make Italy such a seedbed of Communism? Did the United States fail to follow through the "liberation" and with constructive measures establish the Four Freedoms in Italy? If with opportunity in its hands in these past months, the United States failed to establish such a foundation for democracy, can the United States expect in the future to bring about governments that function effectively for the welfare of the people? If it cannot, then it would seem that though the United States should be victorious in war, it might very well not be able to establish governments which would keep the people from looking for some such form as Communism. All of this goes to show that the real problem for governments is not that of winning wars, but that of helpfully solving some of the difficult problems of living that people face in this world. The meek peacemakers will be making contributions along this line.

IT LOOKS as though there are attempts on the part of some to prepare psychologically the great mass of American people for a war with Russia. Some official can say, "We must not go to war with Russia if we can possibly help it," and thereby put into the mind of the average citizen the very idea that war with Russia is a very real possibility. Talking about war makes people think about it and get used to the idea. Recently an Associated Press dispatch from Washington said, "The conflict between Russia and the western powers under American leadership is now building up tension so rapidly that responsible administration officials say they do not dare predict where the crisis will lead." A more objective way of news reporting would have been to state the factors which are supposed to be building tension, and perhaps a listing of concrete situations would not be far so alarming as such general phrasing as that of "building up tensions." One midwestern editor frankly admits that the American people are psychologically unprepared for war and that they would make empty words of any formal notice upon Russia that it can go so far in Europe and no farther. As long as the United States government insists upon telling Russia "so far," it stands in need at the same time of preparing the American people for war. That the newspapers are full of such aggressive persuasion should be one fact that Mr. Citizen remembers as he reads the newspapers these days. Let the Christian prove all things—even the newspapers.

In This Hour of Crisis

WHEN we listened to President Truman's message to Congress a good many of us may have thought, 'Now what? What is to be done in a situation such as the President says we find ourselves in? Surely we do not want Communism to overrun America." n so desperate a situation as the President described no one would want to sit by idly. The President and hose who see eye to eye with him envision only one possible course, namely, resistance by force. They say we must stop Communism, contain Russia and thus keep Communism from spreading. Isn't there a better and more promising approach to the problem?

As those who strive to seek first the kingdom f God and his righteousness, we are not interested n only stopping Communism and containing Russia. Ve think in terms of overcoming Communism by life that outshines the ideals and dreams of a Communist. Communism professes to deal with the wrong onditions in the world. The inequalities among men re so unjust and flagrantly opposed to the human ense of fairness that the Communists have set themelves to eradicate this evil by a program of viomence, intrigue and war, if no other method works. ommunism tries to eradicate an evil in society by iolent methods when considered necessary.

Would the effective method of meeting this crisis ot lie in the direction of removing from society those nequalities on which the hatred of Communists feeds? hose who are unwilling to go along with President ruman's program should not refuse to face the issue. hey should commit themselves to a course that is aimed removing the cause for Communism. It is in this rea where those who pray to be kept true to Christ this hour should look to make their contribution. ather than sit back and refuse to face the crisis, hristians should now redouble their efforts to build r peace. Senator Robert Taft is right when he dvocates that we should make our plans with eace in mind, rather than make plans with war mind.

In obedience to Christ and the teaching of the ew Testament our efforts in this crisis should llow along two lines. One is the line of a ministry of reconciliation. The wounds that were cut in the last war are still bleeding. The bruises that were made are still festering with hatred and vengeance. The shattered homes are still in ruins. A ministry of loving helpfulness will do much to change the attitudes of people. The advocates of Communism seek to stir up and encourage discontent, for they know that they can win adherents to Communism among those who feel cast out, among those who are left to perish. We, on the other hand, desire to help people to feel that they are loved and wanted.

The second line of effort should be in the direction of removing the inequalities among man, inequalities in land, in natural resources, in opportunities, in living standards. This calls for revolutionary changes that should be voluntarily made. Here we deal with the real causes of Communism, and "this kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer and fasting." Isn't sharing one of the principles of Christianity?

Far from feeling that war preparations are the only course to persue in this crisis, we feel that Christ's method of love and justice, mercy and sharing is the most promising and hopeful direction to take. This is no time to fall back into hopeless resignation and say, "We hate war, but there seems to be no other way." There is another way. It is the Christian way. It is the old way of overcoming evil with good. If we must be stampeded, let us be stampeded into acts of mercy and justice.

IF YOU DO NOT WANT U.M.T. THEN WRITE TO YOUR REPRESENTATIVES IN WASHINGTON, etc.

An Associated Press dispatch recently declared, "A majority of senators remain to be convinced that congress should write into law President Truman's proposals for universal military training and revival of the draft." Congressmen will watch the citizen's reaction to the President's speech. The congressmen need to be convinced that a great many people are opposed to U.M.T. That opposition must be registered. If you have written, do so again. Your senators may be addressed: Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C., and your representatives: House of Representatives Office Building, Washington, D. C. Some papers permit letters to the editor. Such letters may be a very effective approach in reaching the newspaper reader.

Our Respect to the Dead

by John T. Neufeld

(The following article is a reply to the two preceding articles, "Our 'Christian' Funerals," in the issue of January 27, and "In Respect to the Living," in the issue of March 9.)

The Bible has taught us that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Spirit. This would imply that we hold them sacred in life and in death. The separation of the Spirit and the body is a great struggle at times. The soul does not give up this body without a struggle. Loved one's too find the separation one from another very hard. Even when we know that their souls have gone to their heavenly home do we cling to their sacred bodies.

The thought that loved ones should be put aside immediately after their death is revolting and almost makes one shed tears. Let us here state two principles that should govern our practices in connection with the departure of the loved ones:

1. The time between the death and burial should be sufficiently long enough to ease the separation which at times is almost unbearable.

2. All practices and rites should be Christian in character and beautiful, with due respect and loving sympathy to the bereaved.

In order to make the time between the passing of the soul and the laying aside of the body long enough, it requires that the body be embalmed. This practice will also do away with the fear that even today is found among some people, the fear of burying alive. This duty is not a pleasant one and should be performed by someone not immediately connected with the family. Such a person deserves a due compensation for his services.

Recently we had the sad experience of laying aside one who had been the victim of an accident. Thanks to the services of a good funeral director the body lay in a beautiful coffin, lined with white satin, symbolic of the white robes of the saints. All traces of the accident had been removed. Loving friends also came and not only viewed the body but had time to sit and mourn with the bereaved. Many tokens of friendship were expressed with beautiful flowers. These also added to the beauty of the services. The reading of God's word and the message of the organ was in keeping with Christian ideals and practices. The trip to the cemetery was made in comfortable cars in spite of the severe winter weather. There was a tent over the grave to protect from the cold and snow so that even here we could take time for a prayer and reading of God's promises. As a minister I did not have to worry over the transportation or the opening of the grave or other incidental things. The services in connection with this funeral were all done for a reasonable compensation. The man who performed these services has an investment equal to that of a good sized farm and deserves due profit for his investment of time and material.

The materialistic view has seemingly even grippe our Christian people. Jesus definitely taught agains this. Even Christian institutions do not have a righ to rob the dead and bereaved for a few extra dollars The expenses in connection with a funeral can easily be taken care of by various insurance plans. A minis ter can advise here as well as to direct the family t a fair and competent funeral director. In life an in death let us hold our bodies sacred.

$3,000,000,000 per year for Universal Millitary Training

OR

$3,000,000,000 per year to do All of the following:

To construct a 10-room modern school building in every county in the United States each year

To construct a $50,000 library in every county in the United States each year

To construct annually a $150,000 hospital in each county

To employ 10 doctors and 10 nurses full-time for schools and public health services in each county

To purchase 10 new, modern school busses in each county in the U. S. each year

To maintain one psychiatric and behavior clinc in every county in the U. S.

To provide 10 full-time recreation and juvenile guidance workers in every county in the United States

To bring all schools of the country up to a reasonable standard efficiency

To meet the pay roll of one juni college with 10 instructors in eve county in the United States

To provide free education for the million children under 18 who a not now attending school

To pay all expenses of a 3-year po graduate course for 10,000 studen and scientists each year o pay one year's expenses at col-ege or technical school of the 900,-00 boys conscripted o erect a $750,000 trade and tech-ical school in each congressional istrict each year.

his would leave an unexpanded balance of $15,300,000 annually. If in the second and subsequent years additional busses, hospitals, and libraries were not needed in each county, and a second technical school were not needed in each congressional district, the cost would be reduced to less than $2,000,000,000 a year.

While there are various possible plans of spending $3,000,000,000 annally for the social improvement of the United States, the above proposals indicate methods by which our national welfare and defense could be tremendously improved for less than the amount that would be wasted on the proposed compulsory military training.

Bethel College Bible Week Lectures Liked Very Much

Jesse H. Ziegler and W. W. Adams Speakers

Every tenth to seventeenth person, depending upon the state in which he lives, will sometime see a psychiatrist or go to a mental hospital, declared Dr. Jesse Ziegler in his last afternoon talk when he spoke on the subject of "Steering Clear of Nervous Breakdowns." After the speaker had complimented Mennonites for building mental hospitals, he went on to say that there is a step which is much more important than the building and support of mental hospitals. He referred to the prevention of mental illness. Pointing out that there is now a lot of distilled knowledge of what makes people break down, Dr. Ziegler went on to give ten suggestions for steering clear of such breakdowns.

Roughly these suggestions are: (1) You need some other center of your personality than yourself. Have God as your center. (2) Give up the delusion that we are perfect or anywhere near perfection. When we feel nearest to perfection, we stand in the greatest need of God's grace. Giving up this striving after perfection helps one to relax. (3) Also give up the delusion that everybody else is better than you are. You are not the littlest worm in the dust. Get the courage of imperfection. When you are feeling smallest God is most able to use you. God expects only your best. (4) Learn to laugh. Laugh at your bald head, littleness of stature, and the increasing girth of middle age. A laugh at the right moment can prevent church splits. (5) Learn to handle your love wisely. It is from God. It pulls people to each other. Mothers, let it be mother love and not smother love. Girls, do not give love cheaply. (6) Give huge portions of your life in service to other people. (7) Learn to handle resentments and hostilities. All of us develop them when something blocks our efforts toward a goal. Do not repress them but express them in a constructive way. Couples who at marriage promise to each other never to say a cross word are unwise. Recreation and work are means of working off resentful feelings. (9) Learn to deal consciously with the difficulties that come up. Never let a decision go by default. Face all difficulties. Make your decisions discriminately and then stick by them. (10) Talk to an objective person. Everyone from the college freshman to the college president must absolutely have someone to whom he can talk. In about 75 per cent of the cases it is enough just to talk to some objective person without being given specialized, professional help.

On the preceding Thursday afternoon, Dr. Ziegler talked on, "Taking Advantage of the Doctor's Bargain—Old Age." Pointing out that young people can prepare for happy old age, Dr. Ziegler gave ten suggestions. (1) Choose a life work in which the skills can increase with age, for example, like those of a doctor, the judge, the minister. (2) Develop devices for liesure time which will continue into old age. (3) Develop creativeness and appreciation now of, for example, music, art, etc. Cultivate the imagination. (4) Develop flexibility of emotion and attitudes. Enter new experiences with a thrill. Youth is a matter of flexibility. (5) Enter into experiences of "roughing it." Learn to sleep in different beds and really sleep. Acquire "give and take" of emotion and attitudes. (6) Live out the emotional needs of a period as you come through it. Do not carry childhood needs into adult life. (7) Children's questions should be answered sincerely and honestly in such matters as death and suffering in order that when they become old they may have the right outlook on these subjects. (8) Be willing to compromise on non-essentials. Be willing to die for some things, but not for everything that comes up. (9) Put aside economic resources for old age so that you do not have to look forward to living with the children. (10) Make your life philosophy one of spiritual values—laying up treasures in heaven.

Speaking to the people already older, Dr. Ziegler suggested that a good book is, Aging Successfully, by Lawton. The ten points for this group then follow: (1) Why not admit that you are growing older? Youngsters want you as a father or mother and not as a young person. (2) Recognize age has its plus qualities, as well as its minus qualities, for example, maturity of judgment and ability to be constructively critical. (3) When told that you are too old, ask "To old for what?" You may not be too old to bake a cheery pie or to accept a new idea. (4) Realize that long life is its own reward. Homage is due older people not just because they are old, but because they can make the past serve the present and the future. (5) As opportunities for self-expression lessen in the relationships of the home and in work, keep the imagination alive. (6) Remember that pity is no substitute for love and approval. Get love and approval by learning to be independent. (7) Continually make new friends. (8) Acquire some new knowledge each year. As one becomes older, contemplation, etc. can become some of the greatest pleasures. (9) Old age is especially valuable because of its strategical capacities. (10) Remember the one ultimate peace—that from being completely in harmony in God. This comes as one seeks to apply one's knowledge of God's will in all the relationships of life.

A Fellow Needs a Friend

Among the hundreds of thousands of juvenile delinquents in the United States—all products of our elementary schools—specialists have found scarcely a one who had a friendly and understanding adult—teacher, parent, or friend—with whom he could talk things over with mutual respect, on his own terms, and without fear.—Malcolm MacLean, in the California Journal of Elementary Education, May, 1947, Page 151.

A bill of rights, given by Dr. Ziegler for older people, included: (1) The right to be treated as persons. (2) The right to be treated as adults. (3) The right to a fair chance on the basis of one's own merits. Dr. Ziegler suggested that some older pastors are much more worthy of a pastorate than some younger person. (4) The right to say about their own life. (5) The right to a future. If one lives to sixty-five, one has an average life expectancy of another twelve years. (6) The right to fun and companions. (7) The right to be romantic. Let the widower or widow remarry, and let the one who never has been married get married, if they wish to, with the provision of approximate ages, of course. (8) A right to the help of younger people in becoming interesting people to younger ones. (9) The right to professional help when necessary, including the help of doctors, ministers, counsellors, etc. (10) Old people have a right to be old. They have a right to be given patience and understanding when they are slow. Old age can be looked forward to with joy, if we all work together, concluded Dr. Ziegler.

"Learning to live together—Husband and Wife," was the subject of another address. Marriage is a matter of 100 per cent giving. It is not a matter of only the love that runs from toes to head but it also includes the love of sharing one's mind. The Church can foster better married life by: (1) Courses for marriage in local churches and in the church college. (2) Better preparation through pre-marital counselling. (3) Restoration of the significance of the marriage ceremony. (4) Help in the beginning of family life. (5) A more adequate recreational program for young people so that they may have opportunities of meeting one another and associating. (6) Greater opportunities for inter-church and inter-Christian fellowship.

In his talk on adolescence, Dr. Ziegler pointed out that it is very normal for adolescents to revolt, but that this revolution can be passed through in a more constructive way if young people are given a chance to develop their independence in the home, in the school and in the church. Adolescents need the opportunity to do many things in all three of these institutions if they are to grow into mature men and women in a harmonious way.

In his talk on "Looking at the Roots of Personality—The Child," Dr. Ziegler pointed out that psychology's contribution lies what it adds to our understanding of human nature. He suggested that the inter-personal relationships which a child has in the first five years of his life are the basis of his religious conceptions later on, just as the Bible suggests. What one is counts ten times more than what one knows. What one is in later years is largely determined by how certain needs are met in childhood. The infant needs love. A child from three to six needs to have its questions answered in a very honest way. The child from six to twelve likes to play in gangs—to pal—and begins his education. It is in this age that a boy needs a lot of companionship with his father.

The above is a rough sampling of Dr. Ziegler's lectures in the afternoon. In the evening, he spoke on such great words as, "Reconciliation," "Prayer," "Love," etc.

Dr. Ziegler teaches Christian Education and Mental Hygiene at the Bethany Biblical Seminary, Chicago. Young college people, as well as older people, especially appreciated his lectures on the general theme of "Dynamic Psychology and the Christian Worker." "He left us with such a cleansed feeling; everybody is so friendly; he made us so relaxed," was the comment of one of the students after the lectures. After the beginning of the week students and others practically filled the large section under the back balcony of Memorial Hall.

More usual, but also much appreciated, were the lectures given by Dr. W. W. Adams, of Central Baptist Seminary, Kansas City. In his lecture on love and forgiveness, Dr. Adams suggested that he thought that Mennonites were better than Baptists in observing the admonition in Matthew 18 of going directly to the person against whom one has something. One hopes that Dr. Adams was right, but certainly there must be room for improvement among the Mennonites. Dr. Adams suggested that love and forgiveness was very, very characteristic of the truly converted life. Remarkable was the interest shown by this Baptist Seminary president in meeting constructively the challenge of UMT. He indicated that he was spending several hundred dollars in fighting the measure, and he very strongly urged that people write to their representatives and others in Washington to insure defeat of this bill.

The first morning of the Minister's Conference, Dr. J. H. Langenwalter spoke on "Maintaining Our Spiritual Enthusiasm." He suggested that "Enthusiasm is the breath of God expressing itself through the action of people." He suggested that enthusiasm and inspiration consists of breathing on the spiritual level. How one breathes depends upon the position which one takes. Breathing begins with new birth and after that it is largely unconscious. Right breathing takes (1) gratitude, (2) prayer, (3) faith, (4) hope, (5) willingness to know the will of God, (6) love, the solvent of human problems. Dr. Adams, in his talk on, "Studying the Bible devotionally, suggested that one do not permit the New Testament to become a new law, that one understand the words and the context, that one apply suitable portions to life and make it natural, and that one remember that the writers of the books remained normal individuals when they wrote.

In the second forenoon session, Rev. Sam Goering spoke on, "The Task of Our Church." He spoke particularly on the work of the local church and pointed out that just as we must abide in Christ and have Him abide in us, so we must have that love towards one another that "combines" us into one. He suggested that we see sufficiently in each other the things on which we can agree, so that we may be united. He touched upon such needs as those of better homes, stronger Christian education than is provided in the short time spent in Sunday school each Sunday, the need for missions, evangelism, etc. He also suggested that Christians do something about local evils, such as liquor stores. Notable in Reverend Goering's message was a strong emphasis upon acting so unitedly as Christians that we really can deal effectively with the evil in this world. Dr. Ziegler, in his talk on pastoral counselling, pointed out that counselling is an old function and that Jesus practiced it when he brought healing to individuals. He suggested that ministers have been partly crowded out of this field and that they need to assume their rightful function in it. He then discussed the educational and information giving kind of counselling and also the "active listening" or non-directive type.

A radio was provided so that the ministers could all listen to the President's speech on Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Anna Isaac, Mrs. Arthur Friesen, and Mrs. Henry Buller, spoke at the Women's Missionary meeting on Wednesday.

RUM, REVENUE, WRECK AND RUIN

The above heading is that of a little pamphlet put out by U. S. Royer, Wichita, Kansas. The writer says:

"Dimes for crippled children and dollars to cripple. We give our dimes to relieve and spend our dollars for narcotics, which produces many more cripples on the highways and byways . . . We build school houses and churches to educate and develop character and make good citizens, and then license the sale of narcotics for revenue to tear down and destroy. The revenue does not pay one-tenth of the damage it does."

UNITED STATES AND RUSSIAN RELATIONS

Achieving peace with the Soviet Union will require patience, determination, and a willingness to judge our actions by the same standards to which we subject hers. It will require clear and calm recognition of the real difficulties which exist. We urge that the United States should press unremittingly for mutual disarmament, for keeping differences of policy and opinion within the realm of discussion inside the framework of the United Nations, for discouraging violent attacks on Russia in the press and on the radio.

We should cease using food as a political weapon and make honest and generous offers to aid in reconstruction within Russia and in Eastern Europe. Russia suffered disastrously from the war, and we believe that the people of Russia do not want war any more than do people of the United States. Nations are now in the grip of fear and armament races which intensify that fear on all sides. Efforts to "contain Russia" should be replaced by measures to aid Russia in restoring her economic welfare and by endeavors to create an undivided world community.

What the world desperately needs now are programs of healing and reconciliation instead of rivalries of power and arms which threaten to plunge humanity into the futile disaster of a third World War.—Friends Committee on National Legislation

ORGANIZE PROTESTANT RADIO COMMISSION

NEW YORK CITY, March 17—Formal organization of a Protestant Radio Commission, a cooperative agency of fifteen major denominational and eight interdenominational bodies, was completed today at the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America's headquarters, 297 Fourth Avenue.

Commission spokesmen said the major purpose of the newly created organization is to encourage a wider and more intelligent use of radio for religious purposes; to maintain Christian standards of public decency and good taste in commercial programs; to serve as Protestantism's representative before the Federal Communication Commission; to represent Protestantism on inter-faith broadcasts; to further cordial relations with the radio industry; and to help ministers and church leaders to make more effective use of radio.

Our
Colleges and Seminary

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Rev. Walter Gering, who is conducting meetings at the North Church, spoke to a joint YMCA-YWCA meeting on Tuesday. Rev. Gering was a former pastor in this community as well as a former teacher at the College. His messages are always a blessing and our only regret is that his visits are not more frequent. Dr. Unruh made a business trip to Iowa and Minnesota in connection with the campus building program last week. Prof. Orlando Goering was in Chicago for several days this week. Miss Preheim led chapel on Wednesday. On Monday LaVerne Hofer, a pre-ministerial student, had charge of the chapel period. Practice on the College play, "The Magnificent Obsession," has begun, and it will be presented April 8 and 9.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Our College family has recently been blessed by a series of messages by Rev. J. H. Janzen of Waterloo and Rev. Walter H. Dyck of Newton.

Rev. Janzen continued his expositions on the letter to the Galatians. In the evenings he forcefully challenged us to reconsider our basic beliefs.

Rev. Dyck devoted his morning messages to the work of the minister and in the afternoon he discussed the scope of our General Conference work. In cooperation with the Bethel Mission Church our College took part in a series of evangelistic meetings, Rev. Dyck speaking each evening.

March 21, the College Choir joins the Bethel Mission Choir in the rendition of the cantata "Victory Divine." A string ensemble will accompany the combined choir under the leadership of Mr. J. Conrad. Rev. H. Wall will give an inspirational message based on the theme of the cantata.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Westminster Choir was received with great enthusiasm by a capacity audience on March 20 on a return engagement in the Memorial Hall Series. Under the direction of John Finley Williamson, the Choir gave superb renditions of early and contemporary church music and a wide range of American folks songs. Holy Week services for the campus community began with the twenty-sixth annual Palm Sunday presentation of DuBois' "The Seven Last Words of Christ," ably directed by Professor Hohmann. The A Cappella Choir was assisted by a number of alumni choir members and by the College Orchestra. President Kaufman served as reader. Soloists participating in this very fine rendition were Dorothy Holman, soprana (University of Kansas); Theodore C. Owen, tenor (Emporia State Teachers College); and Charles I. Sager, baritone (Washburn University). Communion services were held in the chapel for the student body and the church congregation on March 23, the last evening before Easter recess.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Bishop George J. Lapp of Goshen College Biblical Seminary presented eleven lectures to the student body this week. Perhaps the most interesting message was delivered Wednesday evening on the title, "The Unity of the Mennonite Church." Bishop Lapp declared that we are all one Mennonite church and no one branch has all of the truth. He suggested the Dortrecht confession as the doctrinal basis for any program of unity in the Mennonite church. Bishop Lapp then mentioned various things indispensible to our church, namely, an inconspicuous simplicity, non-resistance, non-secrecy, mutual aid, adhering to scriptural practices.

The student council of Mennonite Biblical Seminary held a special reception for the newly elected President, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, and his wife. Arnold Nickel spoke on behalf of the students, indicating the support of the students for this decision; John T. Neufeld spoke for the staff and offered prayer on behalf of the new President. Following this the seminary choir, under the direction of Marvin Dirks, presented "The Crucifixion" by Stainer. Later on at the Seminary home Mrs. Pannabecker was presented with a bouquet of flowers, and Dr. Pannabecker was presented with an overnight bag as a gift of the entire seminary family.

Immediately following the message of President Truman calling for universal military training, President Rufus D. Bowman spoke to the students and said, "I am sure if we do the will of God a million Christians in America will rise up and say, it can't be. Living or dying I shall herald this great message of Christian peace." He then asked the seminary family, first, to write their congressman expressing their opinion on ths matter, second to undertake great seasons of prayer, and third, to distribute literature to those who are seeking to make up their minds on this question.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Faculty Club had a pot luck supper Friday, March 19 at the home of Rev. and Mrs. S. T. Moyer. The meeting was in the nature of a farewell. Men's dormitories had open house Saturday evening, March 20. The Administration Committee of the college is sending out mimeographed circulars to all alumni of the institution asking them to give serious thought to the problem of Universal Military Training, and suggesting that they contact their congressmen, giving them their ideas concerning the proposal. Spring vacation began at 4:00 P. M. Wednesday, March 24 and ended at 8:00 A. M. March 30. The International Relations Club had an unusually large attendance Wednesday evening, March 17, to discuss the implications of President Truman's massage to congress on that day. President Ramseyer spoke before the Findlay College student body at chapel, March 17, and at noon addressed the Findlay Kiwanis Club. On both occasions he used the experiences of the past summer in Europe as a background to stress international understanding and peace.

BETHEL COLLEGE BUILDING PROGRAM

Bethel College has on hand $20,000 towards its new library, and $19,000 additional have been promised. It is expected that the library may cost $200,000 or so. Construction is to begin this year, if at all possible, with the cornerstone laying in October, when Bethel College will commemorate its sixtieth anniversary. Bethel College also hopes to build a new women's dormitory. This project has been taken on by the Bethel College Women's Association. A word about the Farm Shop which was finished last year. The shop is a great success. Classes are crowded. So many students want to take the classes in the shop that not all of the students can get into the classes. The shop is known as the Franz General Shop, in honor of the Franz family of Lind, Washington, which made generous contributions to the shop.

Refugee Group Arrives in Buenos Aires

The General Stuart Heintzelman, with its load of 860 Russian Mennonite refugees, arrived in Buenos Aires March 13. The ocean voyage was made according to schedule, and with no special difficulties except for a few cases of minor illness.

Of the group of 860 immigrants, a small number left on March 15 by railroad for Paraguay, while the remainder left for the same destination by river boat. Several individuals are delayed at Buenos Aires for a few days on account of mild contageous illness, but will follow the immigrant group to Paraguay in a short time. The distance from Buenos Aires to the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay is about one thousand miles, and requires approximately a week of travel.

New Consideration Given Military Training

The question of military training legislation is again being considered seriously in Congress. The Senate Armed Services Committee was to have begun hearings on March 18, to hear presented the arguments for and against military training. The Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee is planning to give testimony before this Senate Committee about March 31.

EDITOR RESIGNS

I have resigned as editor of The Mennonite and plan to go to school. The resignation will take effect in August, 1948. A hearty "thank you" to all of you who have been helpful to me in the past seven years of editorial work.

The new editor is in the process of being chosen. Nomination ballots containing eighteen names and making provision for additional nominations have been sent to all members of General Conference boards and communities. The members have been asked to nominate three individuals for the editorship of The Mennonite, with the provision that the General Conference Board of Publication make the final election on the basis of the results from the nomination.—Reynold Weinbrenner, Editor.

"DEE FRIA"—A LOW GERMAN PLAY

Arnold Dyck's Koop enn Bua op Reise and Dee Millionaea von Kosefeld have been enjoyed immensely by those who have had the opportunity of reading them. He has now given us his first play entitled, Dee Fria. It depicts customs and practices among the Mennonites of the Ukraine prior to World War I. Dee Fria is Hendrik who is being encouraged by his stepfather to call on a certain lady. When in attempting to carry out this suggestion Hendrik accidentally arrives at the wrong home where he none-the-less finds a girl that he likes, matters become very complicated. The play affords many a hearty laugh and in its setting, speech and practices, reminds the older generation of the days gone by. Young people will find in it real insight into the background of their spiritual and cultural life. Dee Fria will be given April 2 and 3 in Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas at 8:00 P. M.

IN REGARD TO THE CATECHISM QUESTIONNAIRE

To Our Pastors: Christian Greetings!

Recently you were sent a questionnaire on a postal card concerning our Catechism. To date a goodly number of these cards have been returned to the undersigned. Many of you sent additional helpful comments. The committee will appreciate very much if those of you who have not yet sent in the card with the desired information will do so as soon as possible. Please, do not delay or wilfully neglect to take care of this matter.—Respectfully, H. N. Harder main auditorium for the morning worship. Rev. Waltner's text was taken from Matt. 19:13-15. "Jesus said, suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pa., On March 14, our church was favored by a visit from Paul Shelly who delivered the morning sermon. He was accompanied by Carl Lehman, who presented an illustrated lecture on the Mennonite Central Committee projects in Puerto Rico. Rev. Geo. Stoneback was confined to his bed with the mumps and because of this could not share these privileges with us.—Henry Burkhard, Corr.

—First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kans.: Despite the very unfavorable weather, our church and the West Zion Church combined in a Christian Workers School at which Rev. D. C. Wedel and Dr. H. A. Fast, both of Bethel College, discussed with us new methods for teaching and conducting our Sunday school. Our Church Building Committee has signed the contract for our new church building, and work will begin as the contractor completes his present job. Our pastor has suggested the following as the motto: In the Name of Christ, "Let us rise up and build." Neh. 2:18.—Mrs. Myron G. Stucky, Corr.

—First Church, Colfax, Washington: The revival meetings conducted by Rev. Harold Burkholder were a great success. Many of the young people accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal savior. Our church took an active part in the World Day of Prayer in Colfax. A supper and program was given at the church March 17 in honor of Rev. and Mrs. P. D. Unruh. The occasion was their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. A chest of silver was presented.—Corr.

—First Church of Garden Township, Halstead, Kansas: Menno Schrag presented pictures and gave an interesting report on Palestine as it appears today, and the Buhler Mennonite Senior Christian Endeavor served with an interesting program in the local Christian Endeavor during February. Our Endeavor plans on giving a return program at Buhler, April 1. The Women's Mission Society mended and repaired clothing March 9. Part of the group, with the secretary, Mrs. Paul Vogt, went to the relief center at Newton, and the rest met at the home of the president, Mrs. Luke Bartel. Mr. Puran Banwar will have charge of Good Friday services, while Rev. A. J. Dirks will conduct communion services at the Friedenstal Church.—Corr.

—Zoar Mennonite Church, Goltry, Oklahoma: The Oklahoma Bible Academy gave an Easter Cantata on March 23. Rev. Paul Barkman, of the Grace Children's Home, Henderson, Nebraska, spoke and showed pictures on March 24. Plans are that Rev. J. J. Gerbrandt, of Meade, Kansas, will speak to us March 25-28.—Corr.

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pa.: Miss Wilhelmina Kuyf arrived home from China on March 9 for a brief furlough. When Miss Kuyf was unable to return to China at the expiration of her first furlough, she counted it a privilege to re-enter China under the Mennonite Central Committee to do relief work. For three years she served in various capacities. She hopes for an early return to China to take up missionary work again.—Mrs. H. S. Weiss, Corr.

Book Notes

THE CHURCH AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION. By Paul H. Veith. (Bethany Press, $2.50) A valuable and readable volume for those interested in the present status of Christian education. The author has devoted his entire professional life to work in Christian education and is now Horace Bushnell Professor of Christian Nurture at the Yale University Divinity School. He served as chairman of a committee of sixty outstanding religious educators and specialists in other fields of the church's life and work which spent two years in the study of church's program of education. The book presents the conclusion of this study. It tells us where Christian education has been, where it is today, and where it appears to be going, and why. Pastors, Sunday school workers, and vacation church school workers will find it a source of help and encouragement. The chapter titles are:

"Christian Education—Yesterday and Today," "The Foundations of Christian Education," "The Church's Program of Christian Education," "The Curriculum of Christian Education," "The Family in Christian Education," "Leadership for Christian Education," "A Community Approach to Christian Education," "Agencies for Promotion and Supervision," "Christian Education—Today and Tomorrow."

An extensive bibliography and an exhaustive index add greatly to the value of the book.

THE NEW VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL. By W. Dyer Blair. (Harper and Bros. $1.50)

At a recent institute for vacation church school workers, this book was recommended by Miss Ruth Murphy, of the International Council of Religious Education, as the best available on the subject. It is written out of the actual experience of the author. After showing the kind of school we ought to have, Mr. Blair proceeds to describe how to create a desire for such a school in the community and how to organize and conduct it. Vacation church schools have had a phenomenal growth in the last decade, thousands of churches enrolling hundreds of thousands of children each summer of religious instruction. This book, written clearly and simply, gives a sound educational approach to this great task.

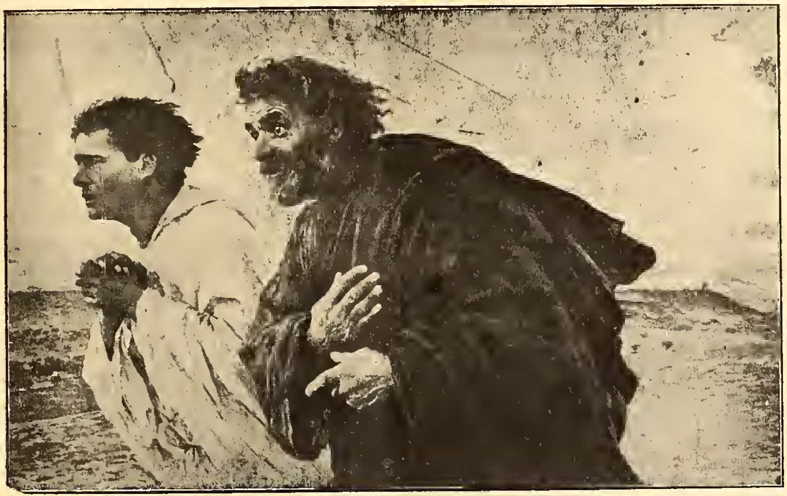
Does He Live?



Cut, courtesy "Gospel Messenger"

Peter and John

Something had happened. They did not know what as they ran to the tomb that Easter morn. After what had happened the days before, anything could happen now. They ran to the tomb with dread, fear, and a faint hope gripping their hearts. Does he live? Or has someone stolen his body? Or . . ? The first Easter morn was not one of glad rejoicing. It was not one of lilies and finery. It was one which ran the full range of emotion and feeling, of confusion, dread and hope. Those first days after that first Easter were baffling and perplexing. What did all this mean? Was He the Master or was He just another man? What meant all this?

Likewise, what does it mean to us?

Central District Young People Reorganize

For some time our conference young people's organization, known heretofore as the Christian Endeavor Union, has felt that its relation to the life and work of the young people of our churches should be more intimate and contributive. In course of time it has come to be that a number of our churches do not have organized C. E. societies. Some have found that the C. E. type of organization does not properly meet their immediate situation. Others do not have enough young people to set up an organization on the C. E. pattern. Thus the C. E. Union has found itself unrelated to too many young people, individually or collectively, in many of our churches.

The executive officers and advisory committee of the C. E. Union met some time ago with the executive committee of the conference and later in session by themselves to consider this matter. In the consideration such questions as these arose: Is the C. E. type of organization and program no longer applicable as it once was? Can any one type or organization be expected to work effectively in all of our churches with their variations in size, situation, and number of young people? If not, should a set of objectives be substituted for the C. E. standard which was formulated and adopted some years ago? What should be the basic objectives for all young people in personal or group life and work, whatever the form of their local organization?

The attempt to determine the answers to these important considerations led to the following conclusions: (1) That the C. E. type of young people's organization and program does not seem to be applicable to all of our churches in equal measure, nor can any type of organization be expected to work equally well in all cases. (2) That a set of basic objectives should be set out as guides or goals, rather than a fixed standard based on one type of organization. (3) That each local church or group of young people should work out the matter of the kind of organization which best fits their case. (4) That the pastors must be depended upon to serve as key figures in getting this new approach transmitted to and operative among their young people. (5) That some name should be chosen for the central, or conference organization which would not seem to limit participation in its program to any particular form of local organization, but that all young people and all local units might feel themselves a part of it.

A committee was appointed to think further along these lines and in particular to revise the former C. E. Standard to serve as a statement of objectives for the new organization and its program. The committee submitted the results of its thinking and work to the ministers present at the Central Conference Ministers' Conference in Chicago on Feb. 11, and asked their opinion regarding this course of thought and planning. The ministerial group expressed their approval and gave encouragement to the committee to go on in their chosen course.

The statement of objectives with guiding comments as formulated by the committee follows. The matter of an appropriate name for the new organization is yet to be determined.

Cool Heads and Not Fear

Cool heads are needed in these tense times. As fears are aroused in peoples of many lands and the road to peace grows in weeds, we all need to be cool-headed.

Twenty-five years ago, after the first phase of the present series of wars, men remained hopeful perhaps desperately, but nevertheless hopeful that war was ended. Many were greatly optimistic over the new pacifistic spirit sweeping the world.

Since this conflict, such hopefulness has not had a chance to show its head. The grim game of power politics, fear-mongering, and all that goes with it, loomed up almost immediately after the last shot was fired. The cry today is to be firm, talk tough, show your muscle!

Yet, both eras are basically the same. They both represent areas of uncertainty, distrust, and the game of power politics. This can be said because in the midst of the great era of disarmament in the twenties, over twice as much was spent for armament than at any time previous to 1914! At no time has the settlement of disputes by peaceful means been seriously attempted. Always behind the so-called "peaceful means" there have been sufficient goods of war to give the "peaceful means" power and force! Love and the fruits of love have never blossomed where the divorce proceedings were already under way.

Universal Military Training represents not just a great expenditure of money and the interference in the lives of young men. It represents as well a philosophy of life, a way of living which runs counter to the way of living proclaimed in the life deeds and words of Jesus. Until we see that, our position regarding militarism is pale and thin. We need cool heads to see it and to say it.

Retreat Leaders Go into "Huddle"

by Helen Hiebert Miller

Interesting things can happen when sixty-five individuals with a common purpose gather under competent leadership to learn something of an important work which is theirs to do.

The Retreat Leaders Workshop, sponsored by the Western District Retreat Committee on Saturday, March 20, was such an occasion. The leaders of the workshops were qualified by training and experience to direct the thinking of prospective camp counselors in the discussion of specific problems which are a part of every camp.

Jesse Ziegler, who has had much experience as a counselor in Christian camps, spoke very informally about the need for counseling and what can be done in camp to help children and young people in situations where they need help. He defined counseling as "one person meeting one or more other persons and, through the process of communication, changing each other." He stated that the "method of contagion" rather than that of injection should be used in camp: persons with good, wholesome ideas rub shoulders with others, and that is "catching." Dr. Ziegler stressed certain factors which should be developed or utilized in a camp situation: the beauty of God's nature about us; informality—not cruidty—in the atmosphere of the camp; and democracy in camp life, which is determined by the attitude of the director and counselors. The method of the counselor in camp should be one of sharing, not preaching or formal teaching. If counselors help campers to discover early in the period that there is a structure to camp life, the campers will learn to delight in becoming a part of that structure. Dr. Ziegler also suggested the wisdom of moving away from a "formal" program at retreat to fewer classes and sermons, and much more in the direction of personal relations—rubbing shoulders over crafts, on nature hikes, and in the working together of camper and counselor at daily camp chores.

Menno Harder spoke briefly but effectively on the importance of recognizing the human drives or needs, emphasizing particularly the personality needs of individuals. He mentioned the needs for response, the need for new experiences, the need for recognition or status, the need for freedom, and the need to be in tune with God; stating that it is essential for the needs of others.

"The Leader's Relationship to the Camp's Total Program" was discussed by Bob Tully. He pointed out special areas in the camp program where counselors need to be alert to opportunities and responsibilities: the importance to campers of the first day at camp; the participation of counselors in all activities—from promptly rising in the morning when the bell rings to wholesome table conversation, attendance at all classes, crafts, and games.

Albert Gaeddert, who will serve as director for both the Young Peoples and Intermediate Retreats, summarized the days work by singling out two ideas which had dominated the discussion—counseling and democracy.

When we can have as camp counselors consecrated Christian people who are adequately prepared for counseling and democratic living, our young people will have a Christian retreat experience that is worthy of the name "Christian."

My Home Is in Echhupur, India

by Zachariah Gardia

A man does not stay at one place forever. If he is poor, then he wanders from place to place for his daily bread. He searches jobs to produce money and food. Every man does not change his place, but mostly the poor people do like that, for his poverty. Some people leave their birthplaces because of some misunderstanding with another. According to the above written facts, I am going to describe my native place.

My forefathers were living in a village named Sarsarah. This is situated nine miles away from Sohela, on the north of it. This village is very backward in civilization and in education. The people do not know how to behave with each other brotherly. The mother-tongue of the people is Oria.

After my father's birth, my grandfather left that place and came to Girolla. There they lived for several days and left it and went to Kena. After the marriage of my father, he took his share from his family and came to Echhapur. This village is my birthplace.

This village that is Echhupur is situated four miles away from Saraipah. This village is situated on the upland. You can see many miles before your nose. Water is not available in that village. Due to the scantiness of water, villages have dug two or three tank to supply plenty of water. On the east of it there is a river. This river supplies water to the farmers. People grow bringals and groundnuts on the bank of it. Sugarcane is also grown on its bank. There is a small jungle on the south of it. The grass grows high in the jungle. The farmers take their cattle to this jungle to rear them.

The most of the people are uneducated hence they are not civilized. There are very few people who are somewhat educated and are in the line of civilization. The people do not take care of their children and cattle, etc. They do not keep their children in control, therefore the children are disobedient. They do not send their children to the school; hence the children are wild. Some farmers do not keep their cattle in good sheds; hence the cattle get old very soon as they have to suffer from many diseases. The people do not keep themselves neat. They take their bath without soap, therefore they suffer from fever and aches.

Many people gamble in our village. There is no serious rule for them. The headman of the village is careless. Many people drink wine. These foolish people drink this poisonous thing and quarrel with each other, and call each other bad names.

But I thank God that there is a Primary school in Girolla one mile away from this village. Now-a-days the people are sending their children to study. They are improving in cultural methods also, not rapidly but slowly. Now-a-days these people are recognizing our Heavenly Father. Day by day they are following.

A Homebuilder's Retreat

In the church program, it is frequently heard that the young married people or the 'older, young people' are a neglected group. They are too old for the retreats, programs, conferences and socials held for young people. They are too young to hold church offices and be active in the program and leadership of the church. This young 'homebuilder' group was personally considered in a retreat held by the California churches.

Last September a week-end retreat was held for the young 'homebuilders' of the churches. The retreat was held at Camp Gaines by Lake Sequoia. A report by Alfred Heer states that they dealt with the problems that face young home builders. "We had on our staff two young Christian doctors who dealt with the physical problems. We also had on our staff a Christian public school health nurse who dealt especially with the physical dealings and questions between parents and their children. Also on the staff was a Christian public school teacher who dealt with coordinating school and home. Then one of our layman lead a discussion on the family altar and family devotions. We obtained the strongest spiritual speaker we could obtain to bring us our two evening messages and our Sunday morning message."

This is suggestive of a way to vitally serve the needs of those who stand between being adult workers and active participants in youth retreats and programs.

Spring Stirs the Soul

The scent of spring is in the air,
The grass is wet with rain,
And in the distance chalk-white dots
Move bleating down the lane.
Red tulips push their saucy heads
Through rich black garden sod.
Such beauty stirs the soul of me
And turns my thoughts to God.

EVANGELIZE THE KREMLIN - AND WASHINGTON

An Editorial

Is it possible that we are so busily concerned about influencing legislation—and this duty as citizens we should not shirk—so busy with this that we forget a more far reaching and fundamental mode of influencing legislation by winning legislators and the individual voter to a personality wide acceptance of the Gospel of Christ?

Is it possible that we will become so much engrossed in the problem of "containing the Russians" and stopping the spread of Communism that we will forget that the only force that can "contain" any individual, Joe Stalin or John Q. Public in America, is the expulsive power of a new affection—the "love of God which is shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Spirit."

Make no mistake about the supreme necessity of this! Paul had a concern about penetrating the household of Caesar. Undoubtedly, it must have seemed as impossible a task to him as the penetration of Godless Washington or the atheistic Kremlin might seem to a modern Christian. But where men like Paul are literally burning their lives out to light the lamp of Christian character and witness the world over, a light or two is bound to be lit in the high places; and, this can set the stage for a conflagration. Unquestionably the lamps that Paul lit in the household of Caesar helped ultimately to give the Church a clean sweep in Europe.

At a time when Christians may be tempted to become more and more dubious about efforts in relation to the world situation the methods and attitudes of Paul are most refreshingly helpful. First, he was not at all concerned about maintaining the status quo of any earthly nation, whether the Pax Romana or the Jewish people. This was far too small and restricted a mission. He was concerned about winning people to citizenship in the Kingdom of heaven in which there is room for all peoples and nations.

Second, Paul used every available method to accomplish this end. He was a great educator, a great orator, a great preacher, a great author, a great administrator, a great philanthropist, as well as a great evangelist. It is clear that though God has only one Gospel, he nevertheless desires that that Gospel should shine forth through lives of men of varied occupations as well as through the various activities incidental to the well-rounded fulfillment of the Great Commission. In this respect it is evident that through the carrying out of our world-wide program of relief and missions the Church is offered an unusual opportunity to witness not only to those who are the direct recipients of the program but also to all those who must be contacted relative to the carrying out of the program.

Third, Paul never backed down when his endeavors ran counter to the program of the state, whenever the interests of the Kingdom of Heaven and the earthly kingdoms collided. This can always be expected because nations are interested only in their own welfare, while the true Christian disciple is interested in the welfare of all men. And because he is interested in the welfare of all men, even the enemies of his own state, he may even be labeled pro-this and pro-that. The state may even take him over as it did Paul; but, as usual Paul made this an opportunity to reach key-people, the household of Caesar itself! In some ways the C. P. S. program followed Paul's experiences.

Fourth, Paul was a man of one supreme and central conviction—namely, that the Kingdom of God is to be equated with transformed people. This conviction led him to regard every contact he made as a potential strengthening of the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ by the addition of another candle to the spiritual lights in a morally blacked-out world. The world forces use every means to swell their number; how can the forces of righteousness be satisfied with anything less?

Finally, Paul was not disturbed if he did not convert the whole Roman Empire in his day. He saw his work from the timeless perspective of God which reveals the certainty of the triumph of Jesus Christ. To him the Gospel was ever young and virile. He could also see the true spiritual dimensions of every act done in the name of Christ. It is like a great man of our time has said "One who has learned to love perfectly can neutralize the hatred of millions."

After such a portrait of Paul can Christians—dare Christians give up even though the forces of hate and lawlessness and godlessness seem to be running rampant again. Dare Christians think it is impossible to reach the last and the least from the man in the slums to the man in the Pentagon and the Kremlin with the redeeming Gospel?

Religion in the School—Yes or No?

While there may be some good reasons why the Supreme Court was justified in its recent rulings with respect to teaching religion in public school, one thing on the other hand stands crystal clear—atheism, the faith of that one who wanted religion out, continues in essence to be taught in an unhindered way. Of course, it is usually referred to by the more palatable name of secularism; this faith propagates itself by the completely unsuspected means of simply talking about and teaching everything but God and morality. It has been more thoroughly and systematically taught in our schools than any religion has ever been taught. Is it not becoming increasingly evident that religious freedom also includes freedom from the subtle tyranny of secularism, the mask of atheism? Is it not true, that the only way religious freedom can be preserved is by acknowledging the absence of religious teaching as a negative though none-the-less religious faith and be honest enough to give the others a satisfactory hearing?

"Agree with Thine Adversary Quickly"

Senator Pepper's appeal that President Truman "make" a last dramatic effort for peace in a personal meeting with Generalissimo Stalin." sounds like a rather belated note in government circles when another fact is considered. That fact is that, according to Between the Lines, "this country did receive peace overtures from Russia a few weeks ago." Russian spokesman are said to have conveyed "the information to our Government that Stalin was desirous of a conference with President Truman." At the time of the proposal Czechoslovakia had not fallen into complete Communistic control. It is understood that the State Department and the White House gave Moscow an emphatic "No." Furthermore, it seems that much effort was exerted in this country to suppress the news of the Moscow offer. Is our government pursuing a policy that will result in us paying "the uttermost farthing" in money, freedom, and lives?

The Easter Parade in Germany

A relief worker writes, "I remember a woman who finally chose a black dress from the clothing, because she felt she would need it for the funeral of her husband, a newly returned prisoner of war. I remember the woman who cried because she couldn't have both shoes and coat. She had neither in the middle of January . . . . I didn't know that hunger for clothes could be like the hunger for food. It is." Does it seem right that the fashion designers and the clothing industry bigshots should create such a hunger for the "new look" while fellow human beings hunger for clothes to wear? Is this one instance where the profit motive does not make for human welfare?

Shall Perish by the Sword

In the midst of the talk of war comes this "reassuring" report: "Forrestal said flatly that the Russians do not 'as yet' have the atom bomb." Once long ago someone said, " . . . .for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." General Douglas MacArthur has said, "No thoughtful man will fail to recognize that with the development of modern science another war may blast mankind to perdition, but still we hesitate, still we cannot, despite the yawning abyss at our very feet, unshackle ourselves from the past. Therein lies the childlike faith in the future—a faith that, as in the past, the world can somehow manage to survive yet another universal conflict. In that irresponsible faith lies civilization's greatest peril." People's thinking in these days may indeed constitute their own greatest peril. Might all the supporters of more and more "armed might" consider the insight of Jesus just a little.

A Year Has Passed

by Mary Becker

March 4, 1948—This is our first anniversary, the anniversary of the beginning of school activities in the Colegio Evangélico Colombiano near Cachipay. One year ago today I gathered around me for the first time the little flock of nine pupils which during the year grew to nineteen. I looked into their inquisitive faces, some of them eager, others a little dubious, but most of them curious of what this new life and this strange person would do to them during this year. They looked into my face in which perhaps a mixture of the same sentiments was reflected—eagerness, dubiousness, curiosity. It was a new adventure for them; it was a new adventure for me.

As we began our tasks and the barrier of language got into my way all too often, I realized anew how utterly dependent I would have to be upon my Lord for strength and wisdom, and I made a new resolution to conquer this barrier with His help. They realized—I suppose—that the new teacher might know a lot in English (of this they had no proof), but that there was still a lot she didn't know in Spanish. But they, in true Colombian fashion, let courtesy have the upper hand, and so we began.

Perhaps the knowledge that in the plan of God I was filling a definite need in the lives of these children, regardless of these short-comings, caused me to begin with courage and faith. For many of them, coming from evangelical homes, this was the first opportunity of attending an evangelical school, which should be the privilege of every evangelical child. For many of them, coming from leper parents, this was the first time they had the privilege of being cared for physically as every child has the right to be cared for.

And now as the past year passes before my mind's eye, there are many memories that crowd in—most of them routine, some comical, other serious, some causing joy, others fraught with pain. And, strange as it may seem (to anyone but a psychologist), there are impressions of sight and sound connected with these memories.

The clock strikes 8:00. This means school and school means many things. It means the struggle to mpart knowledge to those who seemingly cannot absorb it, with its reward of finally seeing the eyes of even the dullest light up with the satisfaction of having grasped something. It means the joy of seeing the bright ones advance from one height to another as they pursue their insatiable desire for more and more knowledge. It means the satisfaction of seeing those of mediocre abilities faithfully plodding to acquire the knowledge required of them.

My ear catches the sound of the chimes. How often have not these chimes called hungry bodies to the table to partake of the physical bread provided for them! And how often, too, have not they sounded forth the invitation to partake of spiritual food as Sunday after Sunday they announced "Time for Sunday School" at ten o'clock in the morning and "Come to the Evening Service," at seven o'clock in the evening; as well as their call to join that world-wide company of saints gathered around the throne of grace on Wednesday evenings.

To my ear are wafted the songs of the children at work—washing the dishes, setting the table, cleaning the house. They are singing the "songs of Zion," interspersed with choruses and a few popular songs. They love to sing, and during the past year their storehouse of songs has undergone a radical change as they learned one after another of the old songs of the church, translated into Spanish. These are the ones that are on the tips of their tongues and on the tips of their fingers as they try to pick out tunes on the little folding organ.

Next there comes to my ear the shouts of the children at play. They may be out on the playground playing baseball; they may be in the backyard swinging; or they may be even be playing at bull-fighting, for regardless of our sentiments on the subject, this "sport" plays a large part in the life of any Colombian child. But these shouts to us spell "happiness" on the part of the children here in our home.

A train is pulling into the station of Cachipay. I hear the whistle and am reminded of the many times when this whistle announced the arrival of friends and the joy we experienced during the year in the fellowship of both American and Colombian friends, as they came to spend a day or a week-end or perhaps a whole week with us. What refreshments and relaxation these times brought! The Lord certainly has been good in providing friends.

Upon my ear falls the sound of "Taps" played on the chimes, and immediately my mind reverts to the one week spent as counselor and leader at the Presbyterian young people's camp in July and the blessed time of fellowship and retreat this experience brought. As so often at our retreats at home, we laid ourselves to rest to the sound of the words, "All is peace, God is nigh."

There are other sounds, perhaps of minor significance. The rooster crows, recalling the time when one of his tribe literally awakened us at a very early hour because due to an oversight he had spent the night downstairs cramped in a sewing basket in which his owner had carried him while coming to Cachipay on the train. But despite his cramped condition he did not fail in his duty of announcing the dawn, and his voice, at first rather weak, got lustier all the time until his owner removed him from the premises. Faithful under all circumstances, God's dumb creatures often put to shame those whom he has enduced with higher powers.

The sound of rain brings back the vision of the schoolroom left in chaos, Oh, so many Mondays! It is washday, so naturally the house revolves around the clothes on the line; and many were the times when the shout went up that it was beginning to rain; so everybody, teacher included, dashed to save the clothes from getting wet, for that was tragedy in the family wash for thirty members.

Perhaps the most unwelcome sound was the sound of the music box, sounding forth its notes of an old Swiss song at six o'clock every morning. And even though the birds had already sent forth their sweet melodies of adoration for a long time, their song floating in through the open window was just a herald of the definite call to get up that was to follow.

But not all sounds are happy sounds. There are the sounds of children fighting, of children crying, either because they have been hurt or have had to be punished. But these unpleasant sounds are drowned out by the happier ones. And so it is in life, the bitter is mixed with the sweet only to make the sweet stand out all the more by reason of contrast.

And as another year of work is begun these very same sounds continue. And they begin to take on symbolic meaning. For as they sound forth their invitation to work and play, to study and worship, to fellowship and friendship, it is our prayer that from the lives of the children who live under their sound may also ring forth the invitation to these activities as they dedicate their lives to serve God and their fellowmen here in this country, for through the lives of consecrated Christians work and play must take on new meaning; study must be made the privilege of not only the few; worship must be saved from the dead ritualism and be given life and power in the faith in a living Saviour and Lord; and fellowship and friendship must be lifted from the base and low to that which ennobles and enriches life.

Immigrants Becoming Established in Paraguay

On his return from work in the Paraguayan Chaco, Edwin R. Schmidt visited the Volendam colony, and reports his observations as follows: "During my three-days visit there I made it a point to see all twelve of the dorfs (villages), and I got a glimpse of what hard pioneering is like here in Paraguay. They had progressed to the point where in some of the dorfs most of the families were living in their own houses, although many of the houses had only the frame work with a roof over it. With the coming of the winter it will be necessary that they also close up more of the walls. In some of the dorfs very few were as yet living in their own houses. However, in these dorfs more work had as a general rule been done clearing land and getting a garden planted."

Volunteers Help at Material Aid Center

Young people from various Mennonite groups have recently been participating in "youth day" work at the Newton, Kansas, material aid warehouse. Local leaders from the several Mennonite groups assumed responsibility in enlisting volunteers for work on each Thursday from February 26 to March 25. A typical "youth day" included packing and processing work at the center, and also a devotional period and talks on relief and service themes. This type of activity is recommended not only to young people living near other relief centers, but also to any local young people's groups which may desire to engage in some relief or service activitiy. One example of such a local relief project is the Shoes for Relief drive held at Scottdale, Pennsylvania, on January 10, 1948, by a Mennonite young people's group.

MENNONITE WORLD CONFERENCE

Mennonites throughout the world are to be represented in a conference at Goshen, Indiana, on August 4-5 and at Newton, Kansas, on August 7-10. About fifty Mennonite delegates from Europe and South America are to attend. The overall planning for this conference is being coordinated through the Mennonite Central Committee, with various committees assisting in working out the details of the conference. Prior to the actual conference, the delegates from Europe and South America will meet at Akron, Pennsylvania, for initial orientation on Mennonites of America, their activities, the function of the MCC, etc.

A number of subjects have been outlined for discussion during the conference such as: Relief, Nonresistance, Institutions and Mennonite Life, Young People, Christian Education, Resettlement, Worldwide Missions, and Nonconformity. Conference sessions will be open for attendance by local people, but primary concern will need to be given to the accommodation of guests from foreign countries and from various other parts of the United States and Canada.

This will be the Fourth Mennonite World Conference. The occasion for the first such conference was the four hundredth anniversary of the Mennonite Church, and was held at Basel, in 1925. The second was a "relief conference" related to the relief ministry for Russian Mennonites, and was held in Danzig in 1930. The occasion of the third was the four hundredth anniversary of the conversion of Menno Simons, and was held at Amsterdam in 1936.

ADVOCATE DEMONSTRATION FOR PEACE

The Fellowship of Humanity, with headquarters in Oakland, California, suggests that Sunday, April 11, be set aside as a day of public demonstration in which all people who do not want to die in a war march with banners and floats and confer at mass meetings on a program for peace, education, and action. The call is given in a little leaflet called, "The Walden Round Robin." This is edited by Phillip and Eleanor Mayer.

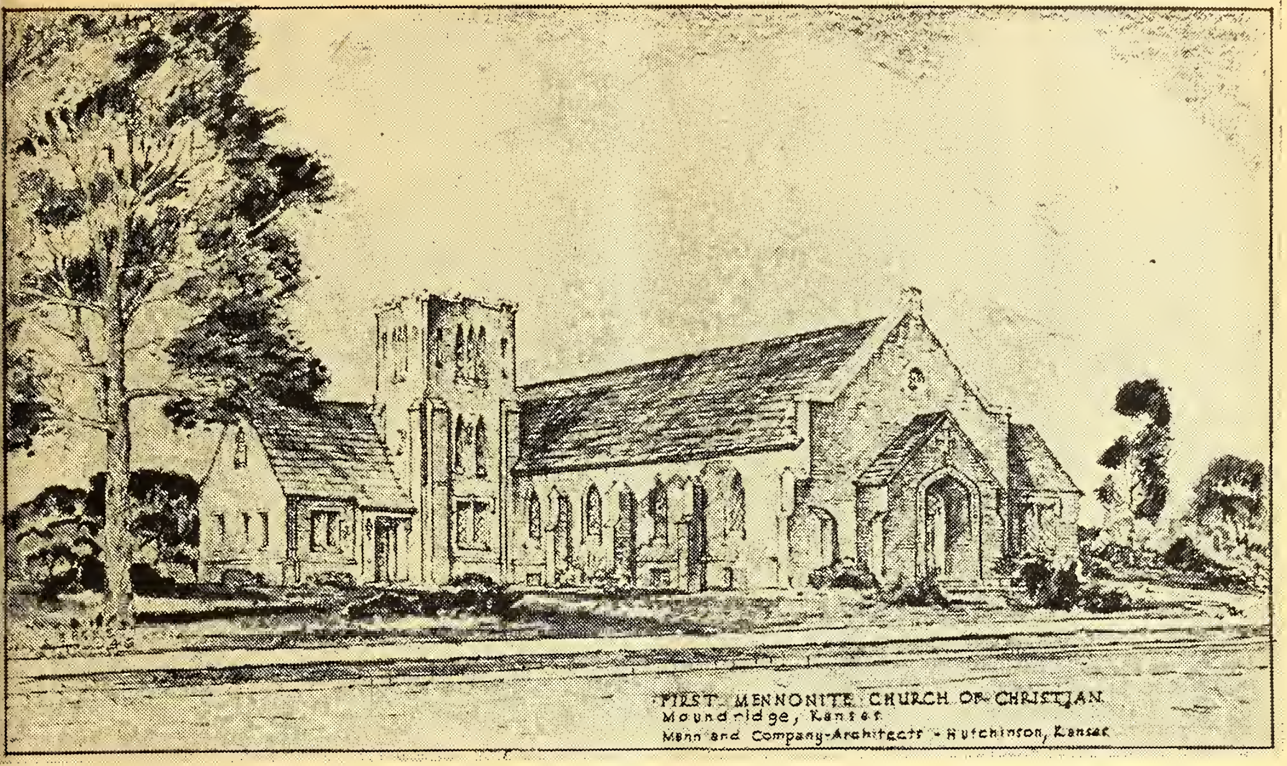
LET CONTRACT FOR BEAUTIFUL NEW CHURCH



FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH OF CHRISTIAN
Moundridge, Kansas

FIRST CHURCH, MOUNDRIDGE, TO BUILD NEW HOUSE OF WORSHIP

Pictured above is the architect's drawing of the new church to be built by the First Mennonite Church of Christian in Moundridge, Kansas. Work is to start before August 1.

Last week the Church Building Committee of the First Mennonite Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas, signed the contract for the construction of a new church building, which this congregation will start to erect this summer. Frank Roupp of Fall River, Kansas, is the contractor.

Mann & Company, architects of Hutchinson, have designed the structure. It is to be a brick veneer in a Gothic design. The estimated cost is $100,000.00. The main building will be 37 feet by 94 feet with a seating capacity of 400 people. Wings on either side will provide for Sunday School and educational facilities. The three-story tower will be an integral part of the building. The full basement will have a kitchen, a fellowship hall, heating and storage rooms, etc. The main floor will house the sanctuary, the pastor's study, library, mother's room and other features.

The new building will be erected on the grounds now occupied by the congregation and a little north of the present church building. It is planned to continue using the present building until the new church is ready.

Actual construction will start as soon as the contractor completes his present building projects. The contract provides that it shall not be later than August 1, 1948.

The present church building is one of the early landmarks of this community. It was built in 1883-84 by the people who settled this community and when built was located one mile south of the present town of Moundridge in the town of Christian. When the railroad was built and the town of Christian disbanded and the new town of Moundridge started, the church building was moved to its present location in 1908 and has served the congregation and the community well since that time. When incorporated it was given the name of First Mennonite Church of Christian and continues to use that name in its official proceedings.

For a number of years the members of the church have been planning and giving of their material goods toward a fund to make this fine new edifice possible.

Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Sunday evening, March 21, three students conducted a panel discussion in the Wadsworth. Ohio, church on Universal Military Training, the Christian Attitude Toward War, and Christian Service. Those participating in the discussion were Myrtle Wasser, Marvin Dress, and Richard Berky. The semi-annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held Friday, April 2. A colored motion picture of Switzerland, with a lecture by Byron de Prorok, was given in the college the evening of April 2. Students belonging to the Peace Club conducted a campaign among students to get them to write their convictions concerning conscription and UMT to their Congressmen. The college Administration Committee has sent circulars to all alumni concerning the Universal Military Training proposal. Dr. C. C. Ellis, President Emeritus of Juniata College, has been selected as the commencement speaker May 31.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Please note the change of date for the College Play from April 8-9 to April 15-16.

Miss Preheim, Professor Lichti and Bill Gering attended a concert by the Westminster Choir at North Newton, Kansas, this week-end. Professor Lichti formerly was a student at Westminster Choir College and knows Director Williamson personally. Miss Elvera Voth of Walton, Kansas, has been secured as Music Director for the coming year. Miss Voth is a graduate of Bethel College. She has had three years of high school teaching experience and is at present studying at Northwestern University where she is to get her Masters Degree in Music this spring. Prof. Ernest Lichti who has held this position for the past two years resigned, his resignation to be effective in June.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Classes were resumed on the morning of March 30 after five days of Easter vacation. During this time the Men's Octet made a singing tour into Nebraska, South Dakota, and Minnesota communities. The Octet, directed by Dr. Suderman, has been visiting many churches and high schools during the past quarter and also sang from station KWHK in Hutchinson. The Student Volunteers also sent out two deputation groups during vacation, the one going north and west and the other southwest as far as Perryton, Texas. Leo Goertz and Lawrence Templin have been appointed by the Student Council to serve on a committee with Willis Rich and Harry Martens to formulate plans for the Central Park project. The Council also discussed a more extensive program of student convocations. These meetings have been held periodically in the last few years during lengthened chapel periods to give an opportunity to the student body as a whole to discuss topics of special interest.

Visual Aids

As previously noted in these columns, the Board of Education is beginning work toward the formation of a library of visual materials which will be made available to churches. Pending the formation of such a library, we would like to call your attention from time to time to materials which are available from other sources.

The Mennonite Central Committee has materials available for payment of expenses, which includes postage and insurance. A 16mm sound film is available. The making of this film was sponsored by the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. This film describes the various types of CPS work, including soil conservation, forestry, mental hospitals, guinea pig projects, etc. Another picture of similar content is available without sound.

Kodochrome 2 x 2 slide sets are available on General C.P.S., Terry, Denison, Ft. Collins, Tiffin, Ypsilanti, CPS Crafts, Smokejumpers, Gulfport C.P.S. and Gulfport Voluntary Service, Puerto Rico, Powellsville, Relief in China, MCC Material Aid, and MCC Headquarters. A set of 100 slides in black and white on Mennonite Heritage is also available.

Reservations for film or slides should be made three weeks in advance. For further information or to make reservations write to Publicity Office, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.—L. L. Ramseyer

Ordain Elder for Mennonites of Curitiba, Brazil

A Translation by A. J. Neuenschwander

In the seventeen years of Mennonite life and history in Brazil, we have observed many festivals, which have brought us joy frequently, but some have brought us into serious hours before the Lord. Until now we did not have any elder ordination. The Mennonite Brethren Conference churches together with General Conference churches came out of Russia with four men ordained as elder and settled in Brazil. In the General Conference group there was what is known as a leading minister, namely David Koop, who had held a similar office for a number of years in the congregation at Orloff in the Molotschna colony. Rev. Koop has served the pioneers here in Brazil with commendable zeal and devotion in spite of many hardships, first at Stoltz Plateau. St. Catarina, and more recently here in Curitiba.

Electing an Elder

For a long time, the local congregation felt the need of an elder. Since the undersigned offered himself as minister, the congregation felt the proper time had come to have an election for an elder. After much earnest prayer the congregation, with a deep sense of satisfaction, selected Rev. David Koop as elder.

Since the local congregation, with the two congregations in the vicinity of Witmarsum, had been received into the fellowship of the General Conference, at Berne, Indiana, last August, we turned to the leaders of the Conference for aid in planning for the ordination. The direction was given that Elder John E. Kaufman, serving under MCC in Brazil, might be in charge of the service. Almost at the same time, the Canadian Conference informed us that Elder G. G. Neufeld, who would be leaving in January for a half-year stay in South America, should have a part in the ordination. We therefore had the pleasure of having two North American elders present.

The Worship Service

Sunday, January 25 was the date set for the happy occasion. The large church in Bouqueirao, near Curitiba, which the Mennonite Brethren and General Conference congregations built together, and which has room for seven hundred people, was filled to capacity. The reporter of this event was the chairman of the day, and he used Psalm 100 as a fitting note to open the service. Two choirs served with appropriate selections. The main speakers were the visiting brethren from North America. Elder Kaufman used Psalm 118:24-28 as basis for his message. Isaiah chapter 6 was chosen by Elder Neufeld as his text. In his message a special warmth was noticable because he and the one to be ordained had been schoolmates in the Central School, Orloff, Russia. Both speakers made reference to the rare blessing of such a day, but they also alluded to the serious responsibility that would devolve upon the new elder, in the cry: "O thou Eternal, lend thine aid! O thou Eternal, prosper us"! (Moffatt) In spite off all difficulties, Brother Koop could answer the question of the Lord: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" with a firm: "Here am I, send me." The congregation was charged to stand solidly with their elder and be constantly ready to serve. The application was made to Mrs. Koop as well as Brother Koop, and the two mothers, who live with the Koops were included. In the Kingdom of God there is the general responsibility for everyone to serve.

The Ordination

After the singing of a hymn and an appropriate poem, Elder G. G. Neufeld directed the usual questions to Brother Koop and his wife. These were answered with distinct "Yes," The elders both laid on hands in the act of ordination to the eldership. The hushed congregation followed every step of the sacred act and promised God and the new shepherd that they would remain true and faithful.

After the ordination was completed the ministerial

What It Does for YOU

It gives you a weekly visit with friends far and near on things that matter most. It keeps you up-to-date on what your church and other churches are doing and thinking. It helps you to interpret and evaluate from a Christian point of view the trend of world events. Short, concise, well-thought-out articles and devotionals bring you regularly food for your spiritual life.

What It Does for YOUR CHURCH

By keeping the entire church membership properly informed, it helps the church to know where its efforts will count for most in the Kingdom of God. It helps to distribute the burdens between those who are relatively more and those who are relatively less able to be regular readers of their church papers. It keeps your church in contact with what the leaders of the Conference whom you have elected are attempting to do through the activities of their various Conference boards and committees. It helps your church secretary through a systematic reporting system to keep up-to-date on your membership lists. "Those friends thou hast and their adoption tried, grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel."

What It Does for the CONFERENCE

It is a fast-working system of communication by which the churches are simultaneously presented with current information. Between need and supply there is a quick connecting link—between those who plan and those who help to get it done. By presenting continuously ALL the needs of the Conference our contribution to the building of the Kingdom of God becomes increasingly effective. Our church publications are Conference publications and therefore cannot be at their best until every member of the Conference becomes a regular reader.

With so much being said about the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN of church publications, one hears the question every now and then, "Just which ones are the churches which are on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN?" That is a good question, and for the benefit of all who may have asked that question, we give the answer on these

DO MORE FOR LESS

The average farmer knows that "dead heading" never pays. He tried to keep the truck loaded—coming and going. It costs about so much to run the truck whether you have anything in the box or not.

The same is true of Conference publications. It takes just about so much office overhead to keep these publications going and an additional 5,000 subscribers wouldn't cost the Conference a great deal more. For example: The total cost of putting out the MENNONITE is about $2.09 per year, of which 18 cents is for general overhead. A careful study of our total church population indicates that instead of having 7,300 readers (of whom about 5,900 are on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN), we could have approximately 12,000 readers. The additional 5,000 readers thus secured would reduce the overhead from 18 cents to 11 cents per subscription. And this is the difference between having a publication put out at a loss or breaking even.

Editorial Note.—Of course, a $1 contribution, specially designated, "For Publications" would do a lot too. Another way to get it done would be to have 5,000 readers who now enjoy it, get a gift subscription for 5,000 friends who would probably enjoy it just as much if they only had it! From the standpoint of economy, the larger the circulation, the less is the cost to the Conference for all its promotional work. Through increased circulations of our weekly papers, we reduce correspondingly the burden upon our Sunday school publications.

brethren from the churches in Curitiba and in Witmarsum were given opportunity to bring words of greetings and congratulation to Elder Koop. A letter of greeting was also read from the pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Curitiba. The cablegram from Elder J. J. Thiessen arrived too late for the meeting.

We are filled with gratitude to the Lord of the church that He has granted to us in Brother Koop a shepherd, and it is our desire from this day henceforth to serve Him more sincerely as well as the church and all men. On behalf of the congregation, Peter Klassen, Curitiba, c. p. 328 Brazil. (Translated from the German by A. J. Neuenschwander)

Note: The Board of Home Missions was the agent of the General Conference that assisted in making the arrangements for the ordination and shared the greater part of the cost of Rev. G. G. Neufeld's trip with the Canadian Conference.

From a letter dated, March 10, 1948, from Elder David Koop, we take the following quotations: "For my first sermon after ordination I used Exodus 33:13-14 as text. On February 29 we had baptismal service. Nine souls were baptized, among them our children, a son and daughter-in-law. In the course of one year, our congregation grew sixty to eighty-five members. In both of the other Conference churches, baptismal services were held." From the second last sentence it is to be concluded that many friends and neighbors attended the ordination service.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Home Mission Board.

—Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, reknowned pacifist minister of Detroit, Michigan, appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee on March 21, and gave a very outstanding testimony. Unfortunately, there were only three senators who heard Henry Hitt Crane's testimony, and two of them only part of it.

—Grace Church, Enid, Oklahoma: The rebuilding of the parsonage is almost completed. The congregation contributed toward the purchase of a beef which was canned at Meno for relief. Rev. H. N. Harder, former pastor, stopped here recently for an evening service. After the service we had a fellowship meal and informal group entertainment. Guest ministers recently have been Rev. Robert Rogers, of Phillips University, and Rev A. Regier, Meno. The OBA students gave an Easter cantata in our church.—Corr.

The Washington Scene

by Paul Goering

(With this issue we are beginning the weekly feature, "The Washington Scene." It will be written by Paul L. Goering, who is in Washington and sits in on congressional committee hearings, etc. For example, at present Mr. Goering daily sits in on the hearings of the Senate Armed Services Committee and issues a daily digest of these hearings. Mennonites were to appear before this committee on March 31. Mr. Goering has had long experience in C. P. S. and is now Administrative Assistant for the National Service Board for Religious Objectors and also observer for the Mennonite Central Committee. We are happy to present to you these direct reports from Washington.—Editor)

March 27. Congressional reaction to the President's message on March 17 has been mixed. General hysteria has risen to new pitch, but many congressmen are mad because Truman ignored congressional leaders beforehand and bluntly demanded UMT and Selective Service. Truman's speech put Congress on the spot. If they turn down his demands it implies that they favor appeasement and unpreparedness; if they vote his program, it strengthens his political position.

Administration and defense strategists have decided to concentrate on the Senate in their efforts to get UMT and a draft. Secretary Marshall and Forrestal convinced the Armed Services Committee in secret session. Opposition witnesses in current open hearings are largely ignored. Chances for passing a draft are good: UMT less likely but could be forced on us by Administration warmongering.

"Grass roots" opposition to President's speech is strong. Congressional mail is running 9 to 1 against UMT. Rep. Allen (R-Ill.) is holding firm against bringing out the UMT bill holed up in his Committee on Rules. Only twenty-five of the necessary 218 signatures are on the petition to bring UMT up for an immediate vote.

Special to "The Mennonite"!

March 28. Yesterday's New York Times quoted Senator Taft, majority policy leader and steersman on legislation, as saying that UMT and Selective Service will be given the right-of-way for a vote in the Senate sometime during the week of April 12. The Administration will exert tremendous pressure to get these measures approved.

This means that letters and telegrams should go immediately to your own senators and key leaders urging them to reject both UMT and the draft. Individually written letters giving your own reasons for opposing these measures are best. Taft, who has been against UMT, should be urged to oppose the draft also. Suggest that Congress stop trying to answer our complex international problems with increased military preparations and make determined efforts towards universal disarmament, strengthening of UN and rebuilding of devastated Europe without Truman-Doctrine strings.

Key senators are Robert Taft, Arthur H. Vandenberg, Kenneth Wherry, Wallace H. White. Address them at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

services conducted by Rev. J. J. Esau during the Passion Week proved to be a great spiritual blessing. Ten young people expressed their desire to accept Jesus as Saviour. On Easter Sunday a union Easter sunrise service was held at the Methodist church. This was well attended. The choir composed of both Methodists and Mennonites, contributed a major part in the early morning service.—Ella Voth, Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: An Easter program was brought to us by the Grace Bible Institute quartet. The Hoffnungsau male chorus brought us a program in song on March 21. Rev. Howard G. Nyce will hold a service here, Wednesday evening, March 31.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Pulaski Church, Pulaski, Iowa: A special service on Easter Sunday took place here under the direction of Rev. Vernon Sprunger, African missionary at home on furlough. Our new pastor, Rev. Verney Unruh, now at a seminary in New York City, will arrive to take up his work the first Sunday in June. His ordination will be held here on June 20, with Rev. A. E. Kreider in charge. During the vacancy in the local pulpit Don Forbes, a student at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, has been making week-end trips here to conduct services.—Victor E. Swartzendruber, Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: Rev. Schmidt had pulpit exchange with Rev. Stucky of Goessel and Rev. P. A. Wedel for two evenings as devotional Easter messages. The choir sang an Easter cantata Easter Sunday evening. Easter Monday Rev. J. J. Voth brought the message. Next Sunday Rev. Zimmerman of the Northern Bible Society will be our guest. The funeral of Rev. C. Frey was on Saturday before Easter.—D. S. Thiesen, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois: Rev. E. J. Miller was the speaker at our special meetings held on March 14-18. One evening was devoted to colored slides and a talk about the Mennonite Semiary at Chicago. A cantata, "The Glory of Easter," was presented by the girl's choir on Easter night. At a recent Christian Endeavor meeting the subject of Universal Military Training was discussed.—Miss Kathryn Ruth, Corr.

—The Schoenwieser Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba: Our congregation has sent five hundred dollars for the needy in Paraguay. A sum of $150 has been contributed by the Jugendverein for school purposes in Friesland. One of our suburban sewing circles has sent 124 parcels to Europe in a year. The other sewing circles together send from seven to ten parcels per month. Some of these have gone to Mennonite boys in Canadian lumber camps.—Justina Hildebrand, Corr.

—Emmaus Church, Whitewater, Kansas: Rev. Walter H. Dyck is serving our church two Sundays a month as temporary pastor. On Palm Sunday the churches of the Whitewater Community rendered the cantata, "The Crucifiction" by Steiner. Total offerings of our congregation for the past quarter were $3,855.34. Of that amount $1,978.35 was given to foreign missions.—Mrs. C. J. Claassen, Corr.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: The planting of five hundred pounds of potatoes, provided profitable entertainment for a group of about fifteen young people on Good Friday afternoon. They are engaged in a potato raising project, the proceeds of which are to go towards the purchasing of the Western District Retreat grounds. Rev. Waldo Harder observed the activities of this group through his movie camera.—Dorothea Dyck, Corr.

—Greensburg Church, Avon, South Dakota: Rev. Theodore Epp will conduct services in the local high school auditorium from March 22 to March 28. Rev. Paul Dahlenburg and family, from Cordell, Oklahoma, were here recently for the funeral of Mrs. Dahlenburg's father. Members of the church are re-decorating the interior of our house of worship.—Corr.

—Alberta Community Church, Portland, Oregon: Harvey Leisy showed pictures of Arizona, Nevada, Oregon, and California, at the annual dinner of the Ladies Missionary Society. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bowner, radio artists gave four appropriate numbers.—Mrs. Frank Penner, Corr.

—First Church, Monroe, Washington. Our pastor, Rev. Kopper, held meetings at Lynden for a week. Sunday Rev. Toavs and a group came from Lynden and gave us two messages and special music. The Washington State Temperance Union gave an inspiring talk.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Our Christian Endeavor joined the Dalton churches Sunday evening, March 21, at the Dalton High School to view the film "Beyond Our Own," produced by the Protestant Film Commission. The film is the story of two brothers, one of whom early in life gave himself to Christ by deciding to become a medical missionary. The other brother, because of personal ambition at law, did not realize how he crowded Christ out of his life until a great emotional and physical shock overtook him. The evangelistic appeal, appropriate at all seasons of the year was especially effective as a part of Holy Week services.—Corr. Mrs. Ivan L. Badertscher

Majestic Moments

I gazed in wonder at the massing clouds.
The dying sun touched their majestic crowns
With blended vermilion and burnished gold.
The masses piled higher and towered above me,
Mighty, triumphant, with no splendor lacking.

But the sky darkened and the glow faded;
The majestic ceased to be—
I thought to myself of how like us
Are those memorable mountains of mist.

We, too, reach pinnacles in our lives
Of lofty heights, of moments supreme;
We shine and glow with burning endeavor.
But the moment passes, the spell is broken
By worldly cares, the fire of life cools,
And we cling to past memories of glorious hours,
Until we breath the majestic again.

Alone with the Birds

by Jimmy Rich

The creative experience of a hobby is often of permanent value. This is the experience of one person with his hobby.

I had been fond of birds when a small child, but it was when I was about fourteen that I became a real bird watcher.

Each season will have new meaning to the bird watchers. Spring will not only reveal opening buds, but also a brave migrant from the South, daring the chilly winds of March and often in dire need of the hospitality we have prepared in sheltering evergreens and well-stocked feeding stations. Day by day, all spring, the interests will increase as the male birds arrive and pick out their homes. Then the arrival of the females, the courtship and the summer of domesticity, will be followed by the delight of greeting fall migrants. Thus, to those aware of birds the year is full of glad surprises.

Cut courtesy the Gospel Messenger

One early April morning I lay on the cool moist ground waiting for the sun to rise. I had started out from home while it was still dark to reach a woods where there was an abundance of bird life. Running through the woods is a spring-fed, creek. Over the dark surface of the water I saw what at first appeared to be a gray vapor slowly rising from the water's edge and suspended about twenty feet from the surface. As I watched I saw first one and then another gray shape emerge and then vanish in the darkness. At first I could not imagine what these ghost-like shapes were, and then, there came a gruff "quawk, quawk," taken up by one and then another of the shapes until the place echoed with hoarse cries. I realized that the Black-Crowned Night Heron was taking his final morning sail before going to roost in some nearby tree for the day. Like the Owl, he preferred the night for his activities. Gradually the noise subsided as the Herons settled on various branches.

Now was the time to arise. In a very little while the woods would be filled with flying, feeding birds, and the best time of day for bird observation would be at hand. Several times off to one side a clear-voiced little White-throated Sparrow gave his beautiful spring song. I look forward to his singing from one year to the next. Then in the tree tops I saw a cluster of very small birds that were flying from one twig to another without any pause in their activities. Among the most prominent of the small birds were the female and young Redstarts. The Myrtle Warbler was very largely represented in the tree tops. The little Yellow Warbler and the Black-throated Blue Warbler were also there. As I watched, a Screech Owl glided overhead on noiseless wings. I saw a Nuthatch climbing down a tree intently searching for insects. Someone has described the song of this bird as being the laugh of a very old man. As the Nuthatch pauses from his work to inspect you, he may suddently decide that you are no longer worthy of his attention. With a harsh little " yank yank," he will then continue his insect hunting and leave you to marvel at his action. Then right before my eyes I saw the welcome sight of a flash of white and gray. It was the little Slate-Colored Junco.

Another bird I couldn't help noticing was the Downy Woodpecker. In the spring when the mating season comes, the Downy takes a new interest in life, becomes more active and generally shows himself to be very well aware of the fact that soon he must expect to work upon his new home. Hopping along on a low branch only about six feet from me

I saw a little brown bird. It was a new bird to me. It had a flash of yellow on its tail and wing and its size and action resembled the Goldfinch. I looked under Finches in my field identification bird book, "A Field Guide to the Birds," by Roger Tory Peterson, and I identified him as the Pine Siskin. There is always a chance of seeing a new bird which adds to the glad surprises of the year. Pine Siskins are rarely seen around here except in the woods so I doubt if I would ever have seen him if I hadn't gotten up early in the morning and gone to the woods. Above on a high open branch I am attracted by "the king of song." Yes, the Mocking Bird with all its various mimicking songs. It seems to be as "happy as a lark," because it leaps into the air, takes several flips and then returns to his branch. With this gesture I started off into the woods in quest of the birds that were calling.

I heard a bird at break of day
Sing from the autumn trees
A song so mystical and calm
So full of certainties,
No man, I think, could listen long
Except upon his knees.
Yet this was but a simple bird
Alone, among dead trees.

Talpader, India is My Home

by Arjun Pandou Chauhan

In this world all the people are not created equal. One man is born with a silver spoon in his mouth and another with a wooden ladle. I am not born a king's son to destroy others; but really I am born with a wooden ladel in my mouth. The name of the village where I was born is Talpader. This village is in Oria province; also my mother-tongue is Oria.

This village is situated on the highway to Bargarh. But the people are illiterate and are devoted to their past customs and traditions. My father was one of the illiterate people and a devotee to the past customs and traditions of this village. My father was quite a big land-holder. He had sufficient provisions for his home. He had also enough money. In spite of these hand-full of wealth, my father was yet discontented. He used to get very much money from cloth which he wove. But all these worries were intended to back him down. So from that day he was intended towards a new and a true religion.

After a sharp day an invitation came from a missionary of Mauhadih. In that invitation it had been informed us that God is ready to give us holy energy and blessings if we act according to His will. This invitation was for us and for my paternal uncle and maternal aunt. My father thought and caught the idea of this invitation. Then we both the family members came to Mauhadih. Rev. P. J. Wiens gave us baptism. Then we took up our abode there. Suddenly in 1937 a big flood came and swept away the village. Mauhadih is situated at the confluence of the Mahanadi and the Hasdo rivers; therefore this somber recollection is always remembered when both the rivers run with a gurgling sound in the rainy season.

Mauhadih, as its ordinary meaning is, is full of mauha trees. If we see the previous condition of this village and compare it with the present-day condition, then there is left a vast and deplorable difference.

Then I was sent to school. At that time middle and primary, both the schools had been built. But after the great flood in 1937 a part of the Indian English middle school was transferred here. At last I succeeded in the fourth Hindi class. There was no hope for me for my further studies. But God gave me very fine chances of studies. So I came here for studying in the middle school. And as I grew up and my knowledge too, I succeeded class by class.

I am very much grateful to God that he has given a golden chance to a poor scholar. Now my father, as he has entered into the Eternal life, was too poor to help me with money for my higher education. But thanks to those missionaries who took care and take care up to now of a poor scholar.

Mauhadih is a very good place, but it is also undesirable due to its situation and location by the river side. I was brought up in Mauhadih from the days of my childhood. The people at present are a few in number. The orange castered apple and guava orchards make a man imicable to settle down there. I like this environment very much.

Jimmy Rich is a high school student. His home is in North Newton, Kansas. He is a member of the Bethel College Mennonite Church.

Former Italian Exchange Student Goes C. O.

Sandro Sarti, a Waldensian student from Italy who attended Bethel College in 1946-47, and during the summer served in the MCC Voluntary Service Unit at Cleveland, Ohio, has taken the C. O. stand. He returned to Italy in the fall of 1947. Already while in this country he expressed a deep interest in the non-resistant or Christian pacifist position. When he returned to Italy he made clear that he thoroughly believed in the non-resistant teaching and that he planned to promote it among his people in Italy.

The following is an article taken from Peace News, the publication of the Peace Pledge Union in England. It tells what is happening to Sandro Sarti in taking his C. O. stand.

"Italian CO Refuses Call-Up—Given exemption he did not want"

"Sandro Sarti, an Italian pacifist in Turin, has recently refused to undertake any form of military service. He has been given temporary exemption as a student while his case is being dealt with by the military authorities.

"Conscientious objection is not recognized in Italy, although an attempt to provide alternative service for COs and also to write into the new Constitution a recognition of CO rights, has in the past received siderable support.

"Sandro Sarti, who is a member of the Fellowship of Reconciliation and the Italian organization for War Resistance, has written the following account of his stand in a letter to an English friend:

" 'I was called for military service on Dec. 21, and I should be in uniform from Jan. 21, but I am not. I received a "conscription card" which I rejected without signing, and on the following day I wrote a letter to the military district of Turin explaining the reasons for my refusal to accept military service in any form.

" 'After a few days, I received a "curteous invitation" from the commanding officer of the district. He said I was the first of such cases and that the present law does not recognize the right of conscientious objection, but that I could, anyway, obtain a temporary exemption as a student and as a former member of the resistance movement. I replied that my position was one of refusal to accept military service for conscience sake, and that it was not my intention to ask for any particular privilege from an organization to which I was opposed (i.e., the military).

" 'His rather unexpected answer was that he could not judge the case, which he was going to forward to the "superior authority," and that in the meantime he was applying the law and giving me temporary exemption without my request.

" ' . . . I am still free. I do not think this depends on the mildness of the military district, but rather on the fact that the Government does not want to go on record as imprisoning a member of the resistance movement while so many fascist war-criminals are being amnestied. We'll see the development of this affair; I'm anyway preparing my case.' "

WOULD YOU HAVE BEEN HAPPY IF?:

You had been a hospital patient in a large city of Europe during the month of February, and not having very much to eat, would have received a food package?

You had been sick with an open case of T.B. during February and had received a food package?

You had been an old person in a large city during February and had received some food to supplement your meagre rations?

Undoubtedly you would have. The MCC did just that very kind of thing in Vienna, Austria, during February, 1948. It gave food packages to 5,487 patients. By giving food packages to blood donors the MCC gave a new spurt of life to the whole blood donating program in Vienna, according to Bertran D. Smucker, head of the MCC Unit in Vienna. The MCC gave packages to eight hundred T.B. sufferers with no income. It will donate approximately seventy-eight tons of food to feed one thousand old people for six months. Walter Adrain is in charge of this latter project. Miss Elizabeth Boehr is overseeing the manufacture of flour sacks into useful articles of clothing. It is hoped that Margaret Epp will soon join this unit. The unit also supplies food and clothing to Mennonite refugees.

Judging Others

by Jacob Goering

God has endowed each individual with a native urge to achieve and excel. When properly channeled, this urge is a blessing, but if not kept under proper guidance, this gift becomes harmful to ourselves and others. The proper use and functioning of this urge is really normal and also consistent with Christian profession and conduct so long as there is no invidious comparison. But so often, when we fail to achieve, we allow ourselves to adopt instead a deep inferiority feeling.

Now a mild sense of inferiority is common to most of us and is probably not damaging to personality. Far too often, however, we dwell on this inferiority until it becomes a complex and actually masters us. When that happens, we are in trouble, and abnormal behaviour ensues.

We don't like to be considered inferior, and so feel compelled to compensate in one way or another and thereby prove that we are not really inferior. This compensation often takes on the nature of some sub-Christian standards of conduct. One of the worst of abnormal ways of compensating for this inferior feeling is the habit of gossip. Since we feel inferior, we need to gain a higher opinion of ourselves than of our neighbor. We can either raise our own estimate of ourselves or we can lower our estimate of our neighbor. We do this, of course, not because we maliciously wish to injure him, but because by calling enough attention to his faults, we, as well as others, will come to think more highly of ourselves than of him—so we reason unconsciously—and place him beneath us. To be sure, we are not interested in hurting others, but we feel such a strong compulsion to help ourselves that we agree to do so even at the expense of others if necessary. This is unmistakably seen when we observe that gossip is restricted to and includes only those who belong to our own social set. We never gossip about those who are on a lower social scale.

Gossip is an abnormal way of trying to overcome the inferiority complex, and always falls short of its aim. The desire to excel is normal, but the attempt to cover up an inferiority by means of gossip is decidedly abnormal and doomed to failure. It has long been recognized as sin, but its nature has not always been understood.

Very often when we gossip we condemn in others the very characteristics of which we ourselves are guilty. Paul spoke of such projection when he said, "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest, for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same thing." (Rom. 2:1). Thus we may be suspicious of the honesty of another because we ourselves secretly know of our own dishonest dealings. The liar never believes his neighbor's story. This amounts to judging others by ourselves. When we have a fault we do not like to admit it and so shove it out of our conscious mind. Unconsciously, however, we then attribute this fault to others. Interestingly enough, we attribute only our bad qualities to others, never our good ones. It is usually true that one can judge a person by the way he judges his neighbor adversely.

Another aspect of adverse judgment is that the object of gossip usually replies in kind. Hate begets hate. That means simply that when we gossip we not only make an enemy, but we weaken his character as well for we have caused him to experience and express hate. Thus both parties involved have damaged characters.

Now what does Jesus say about this matter? In Matthew 7:1-2 we read, "Judge not that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Some folks have taken this to mean that we should be indifferent and unconcerned about others; mind our own business. But this is hardly in keeping with the tenor and spirit of Christ's life and teachings taken as a whole. Furthermore, when we look at the Greek word which is translated "judge" we find that it actually means "judge adversely." So Jesus is really saying, "Do not judge adversely alwayh looking for the worst in men," but instead He urges the positive injunction, "Forgive and ye shall be forgiven."

In this "forgiving" Jesus encourages an attitude of loving regeneration. He does not condemn an honest estimate of another, but he would encourage us to be careful of the attitude with which we judge others. The Christian attitude is one of love towards our fellow men. By forgetting ourselves in our effort to be of service to others, we become as a parent towards a child and see in every fault of our fellows an opportunity to change them for the better. The inevitable result of such an attitude and such a course of action is that our fellows begin to trust us and love us, which in turn makes us stronger and lessens our inferiority feeling. At the same time it strengthens and lifts up our neighbor, and so makes life more pleasant, more Christian for all concerned.

AMERICA IS THE LAND OF OPPORTUNITY. The public school is free and open to all and boys and girls may go as far as their ability and ambition will take them. This is what the average citizen believes, but there is another side to the picture. For many people, America is not the land of opportunity. According to a study made by the National Education Association and the American Council on Education, three million adults living in the United States have never attended any kind of school and there are more than two million children, aged six to fifteen, who are not in any kind of school now. They live in communities where the schools are so poor, or so meagerly financed, that there is little incentive to attend. School officials do not have enough money to pay for the adequate education of children already in attendance and are not inclined to enforce compulsory attendance laws. Ignorant parents see no importance in schooling for their children and put their children to work as soon as they are able to add something to the family income. And there is the vicious circle. Children who do not go to school become ignorant parents, and ignorant parents tend to keep their children out of school.

America is the land of churches. It was founded by people who believed in the church, the school, and the home. But there are sixty million people in the United States who are not attached to any church. Only half of the children and youth in the United States receive religious instruction. The moral foundations of our national life are crumbling and it is no wonder. If democracy is to flourish, if our society is not to crumble and decay, we must wage a war, not upon a foreign foe, but upon ignorance and irreligion. Well trained preachers and Christian teachers and millions of devoted lay workers are needed to stem the tides of evil that threaten to engulf us.

ONE OF THE FALLACIES of militarism is the doctrine that the way to peace is to prepare for war. We hear this fallacy repeated over and over today by men in high places who seek to fasten universal military training on our country. History seems to show the opposite to be true. The countries steeped in a long tradition of military training and which had the largest standing armies were not insuring the peace. The money and effort spent in military preparedness were worse than wasted. They resulted finally in defeat and ruin. The elaborate armor of Goliath only gave him a false sense of security. Encountering the cunning of a simple shepherd boy, the giant with the sword went down in ignominy. Preparation for war only induces fear in other nations and stimulates the vicious and senseless armament race between nations. They that take the sword shall perish by the sword is an eternal principle, a law of God. Its violation can only bring upon us the wrath and punishment of God. The road to peace is not the rattling of swords or the display of military might but in earnestly pursuing peace. There is no nation on earth whose people want war. The Russian people, like ourselves, desire nothing more than to live in peace and security. If we were to pursue peace with a fraction of the money and intelligence and seriousness that is now used in the preparation for war, is it not reasonable to believe that the way to peace could be found?

MENNONITES with money to invest may able to do something for freedom of speech by buying stock now being offered by the Cooperative Broadcasting Association. Freedom of speech is being undermined today by false advertising on the radio, by refusal to present all sides of a controversial question, by presenting programs that harm the character, tastes, and ideals of children, and by programs full of militarism, while the opposite voices go largely unheard. Radio station WCFM is to give voice to men who speak up for civil rights, who attack discrimination, who defend labor, who take the part of the consumer, who oppose militarism, who fight reaction, and who are inspired by ideals of tolerance, cooperation, economic justice and world unity. It is felt that this FM station could have a very profound influence upon listeners in Washington, where so many of the policies of this country are determined. On the national campaign committee of this station are such men as Jerry Voorhis, Mordecai Johnson, Marquis W. Childs, and so on. Those interested in securing information may write to radio station WCFM, 2621 Virginia Avenue, NW, Washington 7, D. C. If you feel that you would like to do something to better the radio situation in the United States, then you may want to find out about this station which is to go on the air in 1948.

WRITING LETTERS to the open forum in the newspaper can be an effective way of Christian witnessing. Readers frequently find such letters very interesting. Such letters also help to convey the impression that righteousness is a stronger power than sometimes reckoned. It is the kind of witnessing which can be carried on from in the home in spare moments. We believe that the following letter which appeared in the Hutchinson News-Herald, and evidently written by a Mennonite, is a good example of how effective such letters can be:

"I Have No Faith in the power of conscription nor any accoutrement of war, to save the world from Communism or from anything else. Some people believe the Russians understand nothing but force. It seems to me they also understand the power of an idea. In a clash between two opposing political philosophies, I believe the sword will never solve the dilemma. It would be the simplest solution; we are tempted to accept it. But it would not accomplish the job.

"The only way is the way of world brotherhood world disarmament, a federation of the peoples of the earth. If we have faith, nothing is impossible. —D. D. S., Inman."

Mennonites Testify before Senate Armed Services Committee

Special by Paul Goering

Washington, D. C.—Over three hundred Mennonites quit work on their prosperous farms in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland and crowded into the Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on March 31 to express their alarm over the increasing militarization of the country.

They came in support of the MCC delegation appointed to testify on the position of the Mennonites against UMT and Selective Service. Rev. Don Smucker, teacher at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, told the Committee that "few Christians have known the sting of war and the crushing effects of conscription better than the various groups of Mennonites."

The large group of Mennonites, most of them "plain-dressed, comprised the biggest part of the audience which filled the entire room. Smucker, after introducing the other members of the delegation who went forward with him to the witness table, called attention to the Mennonites in the audience.

During the testimony the Committee chairman, Senator Chan Gureny (South Dakota), who has many Mennonites in his own state, listened perfunctorily without interrupting the witness. The absence of any other members contributed to the lack of the usual excitement and drama of full Committee hearings. Gurney has sat through most of the testimony of opposition witnesses alone. After the prepared statement was read, he thanked the witness without further comment or interrogation.

The testimony was based on the historical experience of the Mennonites in other countries where the growth of the military idea swept those countries to eventual disaster and on the Biblical, religious foundation for Christian peace-making. No nation, Smucker warned, can be exempt from God's judgment. "Whatever the short-term situation", he said, "the long-term answer is clear: they that take the sword perish by the sword."

Smucker said that Mennonites are sympathetic for the men of the state who face profound dilemmas and agonizing challenges. "No answer including Christ's answer is easy or safe," he said, "but the safest place in the world is the doing of God's will as revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ."

What the hearing lacked in the way of color and interest on the part of Committee members was provided by the impressive sight of the large number of Mennonites who sat quietly in the audience during the hearing. At least one Mennonite bishop who read the announcement of the hearing in the Gospel Herald, came all the way from Indiana to attend the hearing.

The MCC was represented in the hearing by P. C. Hiebert, Hillsboro, Kansas, chairman of MCC; Albert Gaeddert, Inman, Kansas, vice-chairman of MCC Peace Section; Amos Horst, Akron, Pa. and Don Smucker, Chicago, members of Peace Section; C. N. Hostetter, Grantham, Pa., Brethren in Christ Church; Ernest Lehman, Akron, Pa., and Paul Goering, Washington, Peace Section Staff.

It Will Take Something More

by Charles Wells

Just as the world has learned that Christian truth could not be stamped out with persecution or guns, so we must learn that Christian democracy cannot defend itself against communism with guns alone. A Communist military force might be checked or defeated by a democratic army but that would provide very inadequate assurance against a Communist revolution. Such a social upheaval does not come riding on gun carriages; it comes pouring out through the bitterness, despair and hatreds in men's hearts. Where selfishness and greed have kept the common people impoverished and oppressd, social revolution is bound to seep in like water runs down hill. The only way to stop communism is through the spiritual transformation of the hearts of men. Only the forces of religion can reach the long embedded roots of greed and heal the wounds of poverty festering with hatred.

Don. E. Smucker spent Tuesday and Wednesday in Washington testifying before the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate. His testimony was on behalf of the Mennonite Central Committee against selective service and universal military training. His report on the very disturbing drift toward war and compulsory military training was given at the chapel service Friday morning and to the non-seminary students here on Thursday evening. May Christian people everywhere join in prayer that America may be spared from the ravages of war so soon after the recent costly struggle.

Twelve hundred people responded enthusiastically to the presentations of the Low-German play, "Dee Fria," by Arnold Dyck of Manitoba, given April 2 and 3 under the direction of Dr. Krahn and Bertha Fast. The Junior Class is presenting Miss Ruthabel Rickman, soprano, in a concert in Memorial Hall on Monday evening, April 19. An alumna of Bethel, Miss Rickman has been studying voice for several years with Sloan Alberti in New York City and is making a splendid record.

NEGRO LEADER SAYS THAT MILLIONS OF NEGROS MIGHT NOT REGISTER OR FIGHT

Washington.—The Senate Committee on Military Affairs, in its recent hearings on U. M. T., was told by A. Philip Randolph, Negro president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, that millions of his race would refuse to register or serve if there is a draft and U. M. T. unless racial segregation and discrimination are banished from army policies. When the Negro leader was told by Senator Morse that he and other millions of Negoes would face treason charges if they carried out the proposed civil disobedience campaign, Randolph replied that he and other Negroes are "willing to pay that price." In speaking of the United States, Randolph said, "If it does not develop the democratic processes at home then it is not the type of country worth fighting for."

"THESE NECESSARY THINGS" for 1948

With 25 per cent of the Year passed
Only 14 per cent of the Budget has been raised

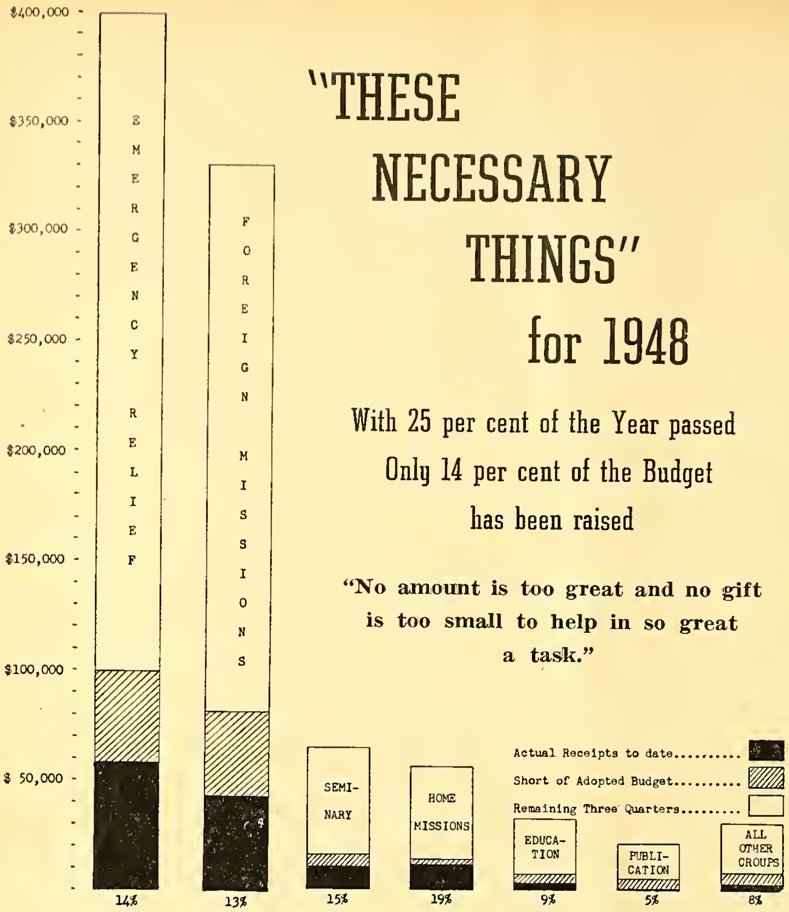
"No amount is too great and no gift is too small to help in so great a task."



We Pause for Inventory at the close of the first quarter of 1948. The accompanying graph illustrates our findings as of April 1.

We have undertaken in faith a budget of about $950,000. The needs are greater than ever. The lives of millions of men, women and children are now at stake. They are starving both physically and spiritually. They need bread: they need the Bread of Life.

Speaking reverently, your 1948 Council of Boards adopted its budget in good faith. We are able, if only we are willing. "It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things."

We have remembered home missions best by granting it 19 per cent instead of 25 per cent which they need. Publications has been remembered with only 5 per cent. On the average we have reached 14 per cent of the goal in 25 per cent of the time.

OBSERVING CONFERENCE SUNDAY

by Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary of Conference

April 25 is Conference Sunday. We urge upon every congregation the appropriate observance of the day. We do not suggest a definite form of service, either for the morning or evening. Every pastor or church leader, young people's leader, every member will find ways of enriching the fellowship, voicing praises to God for His leadings with our people, praying for the various missionaries, relief workers, local church workers who are laboring in the various fields. Also giving opportunity for a devoting of time, talent, and treasure, in order that our work might be extended to the uttermost part of the earth.

We Would Make a Few Suggestions. Leaders would do well to provide periods for expressions of praise, remembering that our heritage comes to us at a tremendous cost: to the Savior who died that we might live, to our forefathers whose firm convictions led them into exile. Our's is a bountiful spiritual and cultural heritage. Material resources have come to us, opportunities to spread the message of peace and good will to all men, to live fearlessly consistent in this hour of uncertainty. Special prayer should be made for all men everywhere, especially for those in authority. Pray that the curse of militarism might not permanently engulf our nation.

Suggested Sermon Themes: "Building on a Firm Foundation" (I Cor. 3:11); "Lengthen thy Cords, and Strengthen thy Stakes" (Isa. 54:2); "Looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our Faith" (Heb. 12:2); or "Learning the Art of Christian Stewardship" (Titus 3:14).

"Hymns that Mother Taught Me" might be suggested and sung at the evening service. Testimonies might be given as to why certain hymns were remembered longest and best. Note the permanence of the good old hymns.

Christian Endeavor or Young People's Meetings might wish to use the theme: "These Necessary

Things" (Acts 15:28). Short talks or meditations might deal with (1) The Necessity of a Plan of Redemption (I Cor. 9:16-17); (2) The Necessity of Saints—Caring for One Another" (Rom. 12:13; I Cor. 12: 18-26; I Tim. 5:8; I Pet. 3:8); (4) The Necessity of Giving Bountifully (I Cor. 16:1-2; II Cor. 9:1-8; Gal. 6:10) or (5) The Necessity for Teaching Christian Stewardship (Titus 3:14). Someone might be assigned to review "These Necessary Things" for 1948 (Mennonite, March 16, p. 5) or "What Happened at Chicago" or "Some Goals for our Conference" (Mennonite, March 2, p. 1 and 5) emphasizing plans and needs of the various boards and committees of our conference for the current year.

A Special Offering Should Be Received for a purpose which the congregation has not remembered adequately this year or in previous years. Young people might discuss plans for a local project. At one of the services someone might interpret the bar graphs in this issue of The Mennonite covering contributions received during the first quarter of 1948. Remember: We need at least $25 per General Conferenme Member during 1948.

Please Send a Brief Report as to how "Conference Sunday" was observed in your congregation. Which of the suggestions in recent issues of our Mennonite was most helpful? What information is still lacking for a fuller appreciation of our work? What suggestions have you for a more meaningful observance of "Conference Sunday" in the future?

"Let us not grow weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we do not lose heart."

A GROWING, WORKING FELLOWSHIP

Almost ninety years ago, in the spring of 1859, a memorable meeting was held in the Zion Mennonite Meeting House, Lee County, Iowa. Representatives of the West Point congregation had joined those of Zion Mennonite group in what later proved to be the first of our conference sessions. The original minutes "Protokolle ueber die Verhandlungen der Allgemeinen Konferenz der Mennoniten von Nord Amerika, beginnend am 21ten Maerz, 1859" begin with four significant words, "Im Namen Jesu! Amen." The first paragraph of the minutes follow:

"The purpose of this conference is to seek ways and means whereby through centralization both in and among separate Mennonite congregations, as also especially in behalf of scattered Mennonite families, the message of salvation might be sent forth."

The first resolution passed deals with "Mission Sundays . . . . . . on which monies might be gathered not only for foreign, but also home missions." The second conference held one year later, May 28-29, 1860, at West Point, Iowa, added a third rallying point for conference endeavors namely, "Traktat-Verbreitung" (tract distribution).

Since that time some twenty equally worthy phases of service have been added to these original three, such as education, publication, relief, peace, doctrine and conduct, missionary education, missionary pension, minister placement, minister's aid, minister's pension, student loans, foreign student exchange, seminary training, resettlement aid, mutual aid, preservation of historical material, retreat, voluntary service, mental hospitals, and other projects sponsored individually or jointly by boards, standing or temporary committees, or one or more of the three auxiliary organizations.

More recently when the office of General Conference Executive Secretary was establishd on a full-time basis, one of the special assignments was "to coordinate, integrate, and promote all conference work." to "coordinate" means to make of equal rank or importance. To "integrate" means to form into one whole. To "Promote" means to contribute to growth. Involuntarily one's mind goes back to the resolution adopted at West Point (1860) urging that the "Missionssache" shall be carried on in the future according to ability, willingness, and insight.

At this time, when we have just totalled the giving for the first quarter of 1948, it is my privilege to urge upon our constituency the equal importance of each of the various phases of work. "Equal importance" does not mean equal budgets. Two phases of our work need several hundred thousand dollars annually; others need only one thousand each. But using the familiar proverb, "For the Want of a Nail . . . ," we find that our larger endeavors are becoming increasingly more dependent on seemingly less important ones. The measure of our insight, willingness, and ability will lag if we do not place a larger emphasis upon supporting phases of work. A weakly supported education or publication program means the eventual breakdown of our foreign mission and relief work.

Two or three spokes can hardly carry a wheel. Each are equally important. Integration helps the wheel go around in a systematic way. "Promotion" endeavors to lay upon the hearts of as many of the members of the constituency as possible the growing importance of our mutual task.

If our General Conference is to trust the Lord in simple faith, rest in the hope of our calling, and practice a consistent testimony of love to all men everywhere, it must be with "Einsicht," a vision of what God requires of us today; it must be with "Willigkeit," a willingness to enter upon open doors before us; and it must be "nach Kraeften," to the best of our ability. Anything less is unworthy of our Lord and Master.

Will you, dear pastor or church leader, friends of our Conference, make every effort to use this "Conference Sunday," April 25, as well as the balance of the year, for a more strenuous effort to honor the Lord with time, talent, and treasure? We need your special help during the second quarter of 1948.

A Word of Appreciation and Challenge

Robert M. Hopkins, Executive Director of the National Stewardship Institute, New York City, wrote to your conference executive secretary on March 16, 1948, as follows:

"We have your letter of the 10th instant and are delighted to learn the General Conference of North America is launching a stewardship educational campaign. We have much to learn from you in the field of stewardship and we are eager to get the benefit of your plans and programs . . . .

"Following the recommendation made in the National Stewardship Conference held in Washington last November, we are undertaking a six year stewardship educational campaign program and I wonder if your three year program might not be extended to cover the six years. I dare say that it would take fully six years to succeed in such an enterprise and we would welcome the utilization of the full six-year period by your General Conference . . . . . .

"I wonder when your Conference will be meeting and whether it would be possible for me to attend. As I say, I should like to come as a 'learner' as we feel we have much to learn from you good people in the field of stewardship, and if we have anything to contribute we will be delighted to render any service you think would be helpful . . . .

"Wishing you all good things in your work and trusting that we may be of some assistance to you in it, I am Cordially Yours, Robert M. Hopkins"

Refugees To Enter Canada

Another group of Russian Mennonites have been able to leave from China for Canada. This group consists of four family units, all of whom fled at one time or another from Russia. The group includes the following persons: Maria Gooszen, Elsa Gooszen, Maria Wiebe, Edward Wiebe, Erene Wiebe, Victor Maier, Frieda Maier, Alfred Maier, Almina Maier, Nickolai Gooszen, Agatha Gooszen, John Gooszen, Nickolai Gooszen (Jr.), and Martin Slager. They are scheduled to arrive at San Francisco about April 19. It is expected that the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization will assist in ocean transportation costs.

More Refugees To Leave for Paraguay

The vessel which is scheduled to carry the next group of Mennonite refugees to Paraguay is the PRINCE DAVID, a British ship with capacity of over 700 passengers. The sailing date of this vessel is expected to be between April 5 and 7. Plans for receiving this group of refugees at Buenos Aires and transporting them inland to Paraguay are similar to previous arrangements.

Worker Observes Need for Shoes

Madeline Garber, working in the British Zone of Germany, reports acute needs for shoes in that area. "The shoe situtaion is one of pathetic reality. May I describe a few cases which I took special notice of. Little wooden-soled sandals, nothing save strips of leather on their feet. One child's were old felt pieces neatly sewed and tacked to wooden soles Another was more fortunate in that he had leather, no doubt, cut from a large old shoe, which was likewise tacked to wooden soles. Perhaps one-half of them have real soles, a very few of which are good quality."

The Washington Scene

April 3. Pressure is on to vote for draft before the Italian elections. Proponents say we will need it if Communists win, but passage before the elections will swing votes away from the left. Today's Washington Post reported Speaker Martin as saying that the draft must be voted this year. Congressmen are afraid to oppose the military drive for fear they would be called unpatriotic. Chances for passing draft are increasing. Inductions would probably start after November elections.

Hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee ended this morning. The Defense Department bill for both UMT and Selective Service was brought over to Congress yesterday. Provisions for C. O.'s in the new bill are similar to the 1940 Act. Pay, dependency, and compensation added. Weakness of CPS system from church point-of-view still remain. Selective Service control, definition of conscience, opportunity for overseas service, etc., unchanged.

Marie Duerksen Ordained Missionary

April 4 was a day of rejoicing and blessing for the First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas. One of the members of that church Miss Marie Duerksen was ordained to the sacred office of a Christian missionary by Rev. D. J. Unruh, pastor of the church and vice-president of the Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference.

Miss Duerksen is the daughter of missionary parents and was born on the mission field at Oraibi, Arizona. Her parents Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen served as missionaries to the Hopi Indians for about twenty years.

The service opened with a piano and organ prelude after which Rev. Sam J. Goering, a member of the Mission Board, led in an invocation. The congregation sang "O Zion Haste Thy Mission High Fulfilling" after which Rev. John Duerksen, teacher at Hesston College and brother of Marie Duerksen, read the scripture, Acts 26:16-18. Rev. J. E. Entz elder emeritus of the First Mennonite Church, led in a fervent prayer of gratitude and prayed for the blessing of God upon the service and upon His handmaiden, Sister Duerksen. A young men's quartet from the church sang. This was followed with a sermon by Rev. Phil A. Wedel, pastor of the Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church and also a member of the Mission Board. Rev. Wedel used as his text Matthew 4:19, emphasizing the need of the world and our responsibility to be soul-winners. It is the greatest thing that we can do. Jesus set the example and commanded us to do so. The seriousness of the times in which we live emphasizes the urgency of this task. The choir of the church sang an interpretation of Psalm 121.

After this Rev. D. J. Unruh, read John 15:16 and I Cor. 1:26-31, and spoke on the call of God to prepared persons to bring forth fruit to the glory of God. He then turned to Miss Duerksen, instructing her in the responsibilities of her office and receiving from her, her expression of faith and her willingness to devote herself to this service as God would enable her. Then asking her to kneel, she was consecrated to the holy office of a Christian missionary. Rev. P. A. Penner, veteran missionary to India, and loved and respected by all, was able to be present and extend greetings in behalf of India, which he still loves to call his home. Rev. Penner emphasized John 20:21b "As"—"So" "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

Miss Duerksen responded feelingly as she read several select passages of Scripture and told of her joy in the call of God and her desire to serve Him in bringing the knowledge of salvation through Jesus Christ to India. She asked for the prayers of all who were present at this service.

After the singing of the hymn, "Lord Speak to Me that I may Speak," an offering was taken for foreign missions, and then Rev. J. R. Duerksen, the father of the newly ordained missionary, led in the closing prayer. The pastor pronounced the benediction, and a most blessed service of consecration and worship came to a close.

WALDENSIAN STUDENT OPENS PACIFIST LIBRARY IN ITALY

In last week's issue we reported about Sandro Sarti, who studied at Bethel College as an exchange student during the year 1946-47, and then returned to Italy and there took an open non-resistant stand. Sarti believes in telling about non-resistance and in getting others to read about it. Consequently he has opened a pacifist library in cooperation with a young people's book store in Torino. He thinks that it is the only one of its kind which has been established in Italy. The aim of the library is that it be a center for pacifist study and activity. Already the library is receiving material from various sources and it desires additional pacifist literature or other religious literature. The library would also welcome material on general news of political, social, and literary events in order to give people a general view of the situation.

MEDITATIONS FOR MEN. By Daniel Russell. (Abingdon Cokesbury, Nashville; $1.)

Do you need a few strong words to help you start a new day; here is the source of them, Meditations for Men. Look at these gold nuggets. "Who likes to be told that his troubles are doing him good? No one, yet likely enough they are . . . . The wisest man may ask to be let off . . . . Better, let him ask strength to bear his burden." "Failure does something for the building of character. It rescues us from arrogance, keeps us humble, makes us possible to live with, impels us to seek—if we have the right stuff in us—success by other roads."

"Forever in national and international affairs, the choice is between Christ and collapse. The same is true of personal affairs. Whenever men grow desperate enough to cry 'Who is sufficient for these things?' there is only one answer—the Man who was crucified."

"God keeps the Emmaus road always in repair." "Christ's first imperative is: 'Come unto me.' His second is: 'Abide in Me.' His third is: 'Go.' "

" 'Sir, we would see Jesus.' This is the desire of all decent men and the vague, unconfessed, unconscious desire of multitudes not so decent."

Easter asks every man, "What response are you making to life?"

Meditations of Men was written by Daniel Russel, who has served the Presbyterian denomination as pastor, his last church being Rutgers Presbyterian Church, New York City. He is now pastor emeritus of this church. In this booklet he has given to the world a source of inspiration designed for personal growth.

"No follower of Christ can be a slacker or shirker. Whether it be doing our daily tasks or contributing in some wider field to the world's betterment, we cannot 'be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease.' We must work if we would be like him. When we follow his program of life his energies are available for us. We can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us."—D. C. Wedel

How Much Is a Child Worth?

We saw a picture, in one of our national magazines, of a small child left in an old wooden box outside the ruins of a home in Germany, its hands hanging on to the top edge of the box, only its head and shoulders appearing above the edge of the box—the picture of abject fear, desolation, and abandonment.

Who can fathom the impression of such a child left there by his father while he makes his escape—if he escaped! Was the child left there in that ash can because he was worth so much or because he was worth so little?

How much is a child worth, anyway?

Just now, for example, we have before us a report of publication expense covering our two Conference CHILDREN'S PAPERS—our English weekly children's paper THE JUNIOR MESSENGER, and our German bi-weekly paper DER KINDERBOTE, and our quarterly publication for our children, THE JUNIOR QUARTERLY. What story does it tell? It shows total costs of publications for these three CHILDREN'S PAPERS, $4,261.73. That includes a pittance for our editors, and practically only printing expense—less than 7 per cent of our general overhead expense.

It shows an income for these three splendid little papers of $1,749.81.

You figure the difference and see if you get the same figure we get $2,511.92. Right away you begin asking a few questions, don't you? You ask, "How come?" We answer, "Because we don't have enough readers to cover basic printing costs."

You ask, "What is the circulation of our children's paper, THE JUNIOR MESSENGER?" We answer, "It now stands at 3,750."

You say, "How many could we expect?" We reply, "With the total church population of 42,000, not counting children, and on the assumption that our Mennonite homes average five persons, at least one of whom might be in the age range to whom our children's papers would appeal, normally, we say a circulation of 10,000 would be more nearly correct. Therefore, who is neglecting the other—the remaining—6,350 (Formula: estimated maximum 10,000, minus present circulation, 3,750, equals, 6,350, the neglected majority)?"

In Europe they leave their children in ash cans, their bodies to shiver and die, and we think that's terrible. In America, we leave our children, psychologically, in the ash cans of pulp-magazine publicity, gun play, detective stories, salacious filth, and neglect to avail ourselves of the best that our Conference writers are able to do for our children.

We are still at the question, "What is a child worth?" Beyond the financial report, showing costs of production and income from sales, are the children themselves. The question is not to be answered by saying, "Children's literature—good literature—costs too much. Cut your costs." It is to be answered by placing our sense of obligation and the light of our Christian evaluation of the child against the tragedy of Europe, the darkness of paganism and materialism and sensualism which is constantly threatening the child every waking hour of his day.

German and American Shoe Sizes

Sending shoes to Germany can be simplified by the following comparison of German and American sizes. Shoe sizes for men correspond as follows. (The first number given is always the American number and the second number is the German number.) No. 6 equals 39½; 6½ equals 40; 7 equals 40¾; 7½ equals 41¼; 8 equals 42; 8½ equals 42½; 9 equals 43¼; 9½ equals 44; 10 equals 44½; 10½ equals 45¼; 11 equals 46; 11½ equals 46½; 12 equals 47; 12½ equals 47¾; 13 equals 48 ¼; 13½ equals 49. Shoe sizes for women can be compared as follows: (The American size is always given first.) No. 2 equals No. 34; 2½ equals 34¾; 3 equals 35½; 3½ equals 36; 4 equals 36¾; 4½ equals 37½; 5 equals 38; 5½ equals 38¾; 6 equals 39½; 6½ equals 40; 7 equals 40¾; 7½ equals 41¼; 8 equals 42; 8½ equals 42½; 9 equals 43¼. The American and German widths can be compared as follows: A equals 1, B equals 2, C equals 3, D equals 4, E equals 5, F equals 6, G equals 7, H. equals 8.

This information was secured and contributed by John J. Kroeker, Newton, Kansas. It will undoubtedly prove very helpful to many who have been wondering how to get exact shoe sizes to friends and relatives in Germany.

Migrant Harvesters

Your food on your table grows on America's broad acres from New York to California, from Maine and Michigan to Florida and Texas. Much of it is harvested by nomadic armies which vary from 700,000 to 1,500,000 depending on seasons and business conditions. They follow the crops, and their living and working conditions were dramatized in John Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath. This migrant army roams over three-fourth of the States.

Cotton, oranges, prunes, peaches, strawberries, apples, peas, sugar beets, melons, wheat, onions, grapes, truck crops—those and others are the crops these migrants help pick. On Thanksgiving day, when you eat a bounteous meal with cranberry sauce imagine if you will, who was it that picked those cranberries. Likely it was a migrant. None of us are far removed from the migrants, because their hands doubtless have touched much of the food that we have in our kitchen.

Imagine, if you will, an army of 700,000 to 1,500,000 people whose home is wherever the harvest is from Florida to Maine or from Texas to Canada or from California to British Columbia. The children go to half a dozen schools in a year. Everyone, children and all, work long hours when there is a harvest. A dilapidated house trailer and a rickety car is the family's only property. It is such a life the migrants live who carried the grapefruit you had for breakfast from the orchard and started it on its long trek to your breakfast table.

Imagine, if you will, the sort of religious ministry such people have. They have no church home. The churches in the towns where they stay are too respectable for them, they feel uncomfortable in them. Many of the church people in those towns maintain their distance from the migrants — they don't want such people to stay long. What sort of spiritual ministry will the families and children of migrants receive?

Eastern District C. E. Banquet

by Mrs. Robert Landis

The Young People's Christian Endeavor banquet of the Eastern District Conference was held at Trainer's Restaurant Saturday evening, March 6, with 303 in attendance. The special project in connection with the banquet was an offering to purchase Bibles in different languages to be sent to the various countries. The offering received totaled $187.76.

Ralph Lewis of Perkasie, President of the Eastern District C. E., was master of ceremonies, and John Fretz of the Lansdale Church was toastmaster. Rev. A. H. Schultz, pastor of the East Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, directed the singing with Mrs. Harold Benfield as pianist. Rev. Howard Nyce of Allentown offered the opening prayer. A musical selection was given by the ladies trio from the Springfield Church, entitled "The Friendship of Jesus" and "The Garden of Prayer," The Trio consisted of Mrs. Harry Landis, Mrs. Leroy Meyers, and Mrs. Gordon Ahlum. Electrical guitar selections by Rev. A. H. Schultz included, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Ship Ahoy," The Stranger of Galilee," and "Then Jesus Came." Grace Moyer and Leroy Weidner from the Allentown society rendered a vocal duet "Rock of Ages." Schultz, Clarence Carbaugh, Clarence, Walter and Robert Landis, Wilmer George, Walter Jenkins, and and Leon Schanely. Anna Mae Gross gave a report on the Young People's Conference which was held in the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago recently. Announcements were made on coming events in the Conference.

The guest speaker of the evening Rev. Abe Wiebe, pastor of the Lancaster Mennonite Church, gave us a challenging message. Rev. Walter McDowell of Mechanics Grove Church offered closing prayer and benediction.

"Camp Life"

[Hilda Penner is a Russian Mennonite girl of twelve years of age. A very sweet, gentle child—one of those who will make a success and spread happiness wherever she goes. Also the type that MCC can be happy that they were privileged to help.—Irene Bishop]

My name is Hilda Penner. I was born in Konteniusfeld, Russia, on May 30, 1936. Now I am together with my family and relatives in the camp only my dear father is not with us. He was taken from us into exile, on March 21, 1937, by the Russians. In 1942 we had to leave our home, so we fled to Poland. We were in Poland until August 25, 1947, when we came here to Gronau. At present we are still here.

We are all here in one big room. Each family

Some Quotes on Universal Military Training

"I don't like to think of it as a universal military training program. I want it to be a universal training program, giving our young people a background in the disciplinary approach of getting along with one another . . . ." President Truman to President's Commission on Universal Training, December 16, 1946.

Of the Civilian's Military Training Corps, "We do not expect . . . to accomplish much in the way of detailed military instruction . . . but we do believe a great deal can be done in the implanting of sound military policy." General Wood, founder of C.M.T.C., The Road to War, Walter Millis, Houghton-Mifflin, 1935, pp. 94-95.

U.M.T. plans are "insidious." "It is an admission that it is not the military skills that are important, but the indoctrination of attitudes." Dr. Francis J. We are very thankful to all for what they have done for us and that we are permitted to live in this MCC operated camp.

Each morning at seven o'clock the rising bell rings and at eight o'clock it rings again for coffee. At twelve o'clock we eat dinner and go to school at 1:30 o'clock. We learn: German, Religion, Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, and two hours during the week we learn English. At six o'clock we come back from school. One day in school, we were visited by Uncle Siegfried and Aunt Margaret Janzen. They gave each pupil a school bag, filled with school supplies, that made us very happy! We thank the pupils in Canada and United States for this love gift.

Supper is served at six o'clock. After supper we play outside a bit, and then we do our studies, and at nine o'clock we go to sleep. The lights are turned off for the night at eleven o'clock and then—only then—all is quiet! Good-night.

Are We a Superior People?

A quartet of swimmers made their first appearance at the quarry. The beautiful little lake bordered on one side by rock-ledged cliff was no more than fifty feet from the main highway. Everyone who passed could notice two things behind the wire fence: the attractive diving equipment and a two-worded sign on the tower, "Gentile Clientele."

With hesitation the boys paid the fee and enjoyed an hour of recreation. As they left they questioned the manager, "What does your sign on the tower mean?" It was explained that Jewish people were excluded from the grounds and lake. "That sounds like Hitler," replied the fellows. "We've had that sign up for twenty years," was the proud answer, "and it is there for a purpose. They would come in truckloads from the city and take over our place. Our patrons would not stand for that low-class bunch."

The boys learned that Negroes were also barred. It set them to serious thinking. "Low-class bunch." What makes a person low class? As they reviewed the Gentile clientele they wondered what made them superior to some Jewish friends they knew. In the dressing room they heard loud profanity. They heard atrocious music amplified from the store radio.

"Our patrons would not stand for it." Who are the patrons? Why do they stand for ridiculous discrimination? If there were enough objecting on the other side, would they be just as insistent upon social equality? Where are the "Protestants"—protesting segregation? Twenty years is a long time.

What about the millions of Gentiles who worship a Jew? To be consistent, should Christians be allowed to contaminate the area. What about those who have Jewish ancestry? If Albert Einstein offered them thirty cents, would he be excluded as low class? Strictly speaking, a Gentile is any person who is not a Jew.

Such practices are growing in our country. There is cause for alarm that we may take over in anti-Semitism where Germany was forced to stop. Is there religious liberty in your community? Is there social equality where you live? Can you be comfortable without making protests aganist that which is undemocratic, un-American and non-Christian.

Is It Time To Read Prophecy?

An Editorial

"God, send us a prophet for our time," so one might pray when one stops to consider the confusion and darkness of our time. But no one would believe a prophet. We have more of God's word now than we believe or accept. If we do not use what we have what point is there in getting more. Can we rightfully ask God for more?

Dark was the year 626 B. C. and those that followed. The sad voice of a young man was heard as he spoke about a coming judgment of God. The people had sinned. Sinned because they loved it, sinned because they wanted satisfaction and did not know how to get it, sinned because they wanted ease and comfort. A life without discipline. Superstition, sensuality selfishness, these were the sins of which they were guilty. These are the sins which make up the suffering of the world in our day. As the Jews long ago believed that nothing could happen to their beloved Jerusalem with its temple, so we believe the superstition today that nothing can happen to our own United States. As people practiced sensual worship in their "high places" so we believe that life reaches its apex in sensuality. We make every move with but one idea in mind—self. Power politics is the game of selfishness in which the willingness to spend other people's money and sacrifice other people's sons for a dominant position, however much it may cost in the end.

Zephaniah said God would bring punishment upon the people of Judah. He has no call to repentance. It is too late to repent. The day of Judah's grace is past. No social reforms will help. These would not in any way change the punishment which must fall on Judah for her sins.

Do we find ourselves at this point in history? Is the day of grace past for the United States? Have we played fast and loose with God and man so that an impending judgment must break over us? Is God looking for some nation which he will use to punish us?

But surely God could not do that! He is a God of love. How could he punish a nation, a people so good and so religious as we are. We have millions invested in church buildings and are everywhere investing more. We have large crosses in our churches, at least on Easter Sunday. We have all kinds of church programs designed to fit the people to whom we minister and to attract many outsiders. Surely a God of love could not, would not punish a people so active in church work.

We have talked so much about the love of God that we have ignored his attribute of justice. This has allowed us to forget His hatred of evil. We need to remember that we still have a God of righteousness before whose wrath the wicked shall not stand. The emphasis on the mildness of love only has made our religion thin and flaccid. We cannot forget its sternness. Nothing is clearer than that the dreadful days in which we find ourselves have come over us because of the corrupting power of sin. The terrible catastrophes with which we are threatened cannot be interpreted otherwise than the judgment of God upon our world for its political and social sins.

Salvation lies in character and trust in God. Salvation does not come by slow social reformation as we believed in the past generation. It comes through flashing judgments, where man must fall on his knees. It comes through the gentle wooings of the still small voice. It comes in times of national calamities, it comes in the lone moments in the far country. It comes wherever and whenever man is ready to say: "Father I have sinned," "God be merciful to me a sinner." "Seek ye the Lord .... seek righteousness .... it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Zeph. 2:3

"PEACE CALLS for a grand effort on a scale comparable to war effort. It should be an effort in good will, however, instead of in hate." So said John Foster Dulles in a recent address. Kirby Page, in his book, Now Is the Time to Prevent a Third World War, writes, "A third world war can be averted, but only by a titantic effort on the part of a mighty movement of people in response to the yearning and pleading love of the living God." It would be comparatively simple to point out how the Christian Church is guilty of too little and too late for the cause of peace. It is more difficult to point out just what ought to be done and how people can obtain the power to do it.

The following are examples of how some people attempt to do something significant for the prevention of a third world war. Paul Studebaker, a minister in Modesto, California, got the idea that a great many peacemakers should make up a Peace Train and go to Washington to plead with members of the government to undertake conciliatory measures in international relations in an effort to avert war. This train was scheduled to leave San Francisco on April 21, and is probably now headed towards Chicago. Members of the train also are to stop off in New York City and have interviews with delegates to the League of United Nations. A group of Brethern farmers are interested in spending at least four months working shoulder to shoulder with Russian farmers. They would take with them as much machinery and tools as possible and return empty handed. These Christians of Indiana believe that one should show in deeds that one does not want war with Russia. Young Mennonites have gone into a Pierre Ceresole Work Camp in Mulheim, Germany, there to work with all kinds of young people, including former Nazi officers, some of whom sometimes tell how many Jews or other men they have killed. The Mennonites clean and cart brick with such men. The result: Hardened fellows have turned pacifist and feed on the pacifist literature that is being sent there by American and English pacifists. A Mennonite college student gave political expression to his C. O. beliefs by traveling to the state capital to help organize a Wallace Party. A young couple has decided to take a month this summer and work full-time on peace. They are considering purchasing a trailer house and going out from their half acre home base, mentally and emotionally free to take up whatever they can do to advance the cause of peace. One of them says, "I don't blame those who are so tied up in the problems in daily living that they aren't aware of the catastrophe descending. I have done that too, and it's an easy pitfall. And though we do not have cut and dried answers, we are finding some confidence that we may be able to do something to help mold people away from the war psychology." This couple is cutting down their food to as near subsistance as they can. Unsolicited and unexpected, two other families have already offered to contribute towards their subsistance. Hundreds of Friends, Brethren and Mennonites are giving years of their lives to live and work in war-devastated countries to bring food, clothing, shelter, and hope to the despairing.

Can we get away from the thought that peace requires as strenuous an effort as war? If we cannot, then what is it that we as individuals and as a united church ought to be doing in these days?

"THE MORE we get together the happier we'll be," is a phrase that is relevant to world conditions today. A member of the Church of the Brethren, who recently toured Europe, reports on a discussion with six former Hitler Youth leaders. Of it he says, "It was one of the most interesting and revealing experiences in all my time in Europe. It certainly helped us to understand Nazi Germany better." A young Mennonite writes, "These short six weeks at Mulheim (in a work camp) is the best way to enable a person to get a true picture of Germany today. Here one lives together with Swiss, Belgium, Dutch, English, and Germans from all parts of the Russian Zone, from Berlin, Hamburg, Frankfurt, and the Ruhr area." Knowledge of each other is a necessary prerequisite to creative relationships. Were the people of the United States to spend a little more effort in acquainting themselves with the Russians and their way of life, and vice versa, then they could save themselves a lot of money spent for armaments. In this connection it is significant to note that Eddy Gilmore, Chief of the Associated Press Bureau in Moscow, reported upon his recent return to Russia, that there is no war talk in Russia. Mr. Gilmore relates how American military men expressed great suspicion and fear of the Russians when they were to help him board a Russian plane in the Russian Zone of Berlin. He goes on to relate how he was received in a friendly way by the Russians, and how eleven Russian officers drank a toast with him on the proposition of, "To Peace between our countries always." Gilmore reports, "Despite the Berlin tension in the American headlines and war talk, I heard not one word of that in Moscow."

SOMETIMES the question is asked in our Conference as to whether we could not use a more suitable word then ashram to describe a certain kind of meeting. The word ashram comes to us from a different culture, just like the words January, Thursday, and so on also come to us from a different culture. The term ashram has become serviceable because it suggests something not suggested by other words such as retreat, conference, etc. E. Stanley Jones has commented as follows on the purpose of the ashram:

"In a conference people confer to get verbal answers to verbal questions. In a retreat, they listen to a spiritual message and then each person goes off alone to examine his life and improve it. Those in an Ashram try not merely to find an answer but to be an answer. In some real way they attempt to become in miniature form the Kingdom of God realized. This Corner of the Kingdom is to let those in attendance and others see what the Kingdom of God is when embodied in corporate living. To this end they try to get down all barriers of race, class, and group, and also to break down all inner barriers which break fellowship with God and each other. The Ashrams, then, are primarily a corporate quest for a larger understanding and the better realization of the Kingdom of God. The Family of God becomes a fact beyond differences of denomination, race, and class."

Senate Armed Services Committee Concludes Hearings

by Paul L. Goering, Washington Correspondent

On April 3 the Senate Armed Services Committee ended two weeks of daily hearings on the need for universal military training and selective service. The hearings were high-lighted by the appearance of Secretary Marshall, and the defense department chiefs along with the members of the President's Commission on Universal Training and a large number of church, farm, educational and labor organizations opposed to UMT.

Secretary Marshall testified before the committee on March 17 immediately following the President's message to the joint session of Congress. The fact that even Secretary Marshall and the defense department were caught flat-footed by the President's demand for both UMT and selective service is evidenced by the fact that Marshall changed his prepared statement in reading it to the Committee. He told the Committee that he believed that under present conditions selective service was "necessary" while his prepared statement had contained the words, "apparently necessary."

Almost the entire Committee was present for the testimony of Marshal Forrestal, Royall and other administration witnesses. In contrast most of the opposition witnesses were heard only by Senator Gurney and sometimes one or two other committee members. One had the impression that the Senate Armed Services Committee was representing the government more than the people. In some cases the members of the Committee stated the arguments of the proponents of UMT and selective service better than the witnesses did themselves.

Former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts, Chairman of the National Security Committee, claimed that, "the core of the opposition to UMT and selective service is Communist." Afterwards Roberts was challenged on this statement and told that the majority of the churches are opposed to UMT and that the great bulk of opposition came from church, farm and educational organizations. Undoubtedly the activity of Justice Roberts and his association with the National Security Committee has done a great deal to frighten well meaning people away from opposing UMT because of the Communist label.

One of the most stirring testimonies against the war making policy of UMT and selective service was given by Henry Hitt Crane, a Methodist minister from Detroit. Both the people in the audience and the members of the Committee were visably moved by his attack against conscription. Chairman Gurney of the Committee was so flustered that he was unable to answer Dr. Crane when he asked him, at the close of his testimony, whether he believed in the moral law.

One full day was given over to the presentation of defense needs by the defense departments. The testimony of the defense departments followed the Key West Conference in which Secretary of Defense Forrestal had told the Army, Navy and Air Corp that they must get together and keep all disagreements among themselves from the public. The dissension within the defense departments was again revealed when Secretary of Air Symington testified, in answer to a question, that he did not consider the fifty-five air groups advocated by Secretary Forrestal to be adequate.

The hearing room was filled to overflowing and a large number of the people waited outside on the afternoon that Henry Wallace spoke against UMT and selective service. The people who came out to hear what Wallace had to say were not Wallace organizers or Communist sympathizers but plain ordinary thoughtful folk, who disagreed with the measures advocated by President Truman. The members of the committee kept Wallace two hours longer over the time which had been scheduled for him and bombarded him with questions. Not a single member of the committee would agree with any of his statements.

A rather striking testimony was made on the following day when a representative of the Committee

FROM HIM THAT ASKETH

". . . . and from him that asketh, turn not him away."

Word has just been received from the CARE office (Cooperative American Remittances to Europe) that delivery of these food parcels in Berlin is not being affected by the blockade.

Paul Comly French, so well known in this general community, and executive director of CARE, writes:

"This organization has 30,000 of its food and textile packages stockpiled in two Berlin warehouses, one in the American sector and one in the British sector . . . . . Residents in all parts of Berlin are able to come to those warehouses to take delivery of the parcels sent to them by friends here."

Friends "here"!

That is the difficulty. The General Conference Headquarters, which serves as one of many CARE agencies has right now a list of over fifty people who have written to us direct from the war torn areas desperately pleading for at least one food package. One of these letters writes that the entire amount of food available on their ration cards can be put into one small trouser pocket. Reader, think of it.

Who CARE's? Who cares sufficiently to just jot on a piece of paper, "I'll take one of those fifty names. Here's $10." If you would like to get in contact with the person to whom your CARE package is sent, be sure to give your name and address. Almost every one of these people needs the psychological support of a friend here in America as much as they do the food. They long for a letter exchange.

Remember, many of these people have jobs and are able to pay for what they need, but cannot get the food. Like the ancient mariner who wrote, "Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink."

Food stockpiled in Berlin, and people can't get at it. A CARE package from YOU will help that much. With it goes a letter direct from this office, assuring the people that their letter has received immediate attention, and that they will be visited by one of our 250 relief workers to see whether through our MCC facilities and our relief organization we are able to render additional services.

The question remains: "Who CARE's?"

—General Conference Headquarters, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas

Against Jimcrow stated that many Negroes would refuse to serve in a segragated Army and that he would lead a civil disobedience campaign against the draft if the Army remained segregated. Senator Morse, (R.-Ore.) warned him that this would be treason, but the witness replied that they would be serving a "higher law of righteousness."

On the afternoon of the same day, Rev. Dan Poling, who was appointed by the President to represent the Protestant churches on his Commission, testified in favor of UMT. In his remarks he expressed regret that the non-resistant churches had remained unfriendly to him even though he had, he said, insisted on the protection of the rights of conscience in the recommendations of the President's Commission. He also expressed regret that the other Protestant churches remained opposed to UMT instead of appreciating what he called "the moral safeguards" which he obtained in the recommendations of the Commission.

Later that afternoon representatives of the Church of the Brethren, the National Service Board and the Mennonite Central Committee testified against UMT and selective service. The National Service Board made specific suggestions for alternative service in the event that the Congress was determined to enact selective service.

On the last full day of the hearings, General Eisenhower testified before the Committee and urged the immediate adoption of both UMT and selective service. Although the General has retired from the Army and now has a civilian job, he appeared in military uniform and told the Committee that he was ready to answer his country's call to service.

Throughout the hearings the proponents of UMT and selective service received by far the greatest amount of newspaper publicity. At the hearings when Secretary Marshall, General Eisenhower and other members of the military testified, the hearings were televised and newsreel cameras were present for showing the military side in the theaters.

GERMAN MENNONITE CHURCH JOINS LARGE BODY

Thirty-five million Protestant Christians of Germany have joined together in what is known as the Cooperative Fellowship of Christian Churches in Germany. This includes not only the Evangelical Church in Germany but also such free churches as the Baptist, Methodist, Evangelical United Brethren, and the Mennonite. Its head is Dr. Martin Niemoeller. Soon after its organization it came out with a strong declaration "in favor of a true peace and against the disruption of the German republic."

Menninger To Speak at Bethel April 30

Dr. Karl A. Menninger

The speaker at the Bethel Booster Reception and Program, April 30, beginning at seven o'clock, is Dr. Karl A. Menninger, psychiatrist. The spirit of the man is revealed in a quotation by Mike Garman, a writer for The Daily Oklahoman. Garman quotes Menninger as stating in an article, "If we can love: This is the touchstone. This is the key to the entire therapeutic program of the modern psychiatric hospital. It dominates the behavior of its staff from director to gardener. To our patient who cannot love, we must say by our actions that we do love him."

Garman adds this about the directive policies of Menninger, "At Winter hospital it is the patient who is always right. Dr. Karl Menninger constantly drums into his staff one important idea—that they are well and the patients are sick." Because of his belief that people who are mentally ill should be treated with love, Dr. Menninger showed interest in getting former C.P.S. men to work in his institutions at Topeka.

Dr. Menninger has written widely, one of his best known books being The Human Mind. He is also on the editorial staff of a number of journals.

With his father, Dr. C. F. Menninger, and his brother, Dr. Wm. C. Menninger, he founded and has conducted for nearly twenty-five years a psychiatric clinic, a psychiatric hospital for adults and a school for children with psychiatric problems, all in Topeka, Kansas. These institutions, known as the Menninger Clinic, the Menninger Sanitarium, and the Southard School, have become outstanding centers for research and education as well as treatment and are now in process of being transferred to the Menninger Foundation as the gift of the owners, in order to provide for expansion and perpetuation of the work. At the present time, the Menninger Foundation is trying to do its part in providing for the large number of newly discharged doctors who wish psychiatric training. In its School of Psychiatry, young physicians, psychologists, teachers, nurses, and psychiatric social workers are trained in the Menninger spirit of consideration for those who are mentally ill.

Since 1945, Dr. Menninger has also been manager of the Winter Veterans Administration Hospital in Topeka. In this way, he is able to coordinate his teaching program in neuropsychiatry with clinical treatment of patients in the hospital.

Invitations for the reception and program to be held on Friday evening, April 30, in Memorial Hall, are being sent to friends of Bethel College who make gifts of $10 or more ($20 for two) during the school year.

MENTAL ILLNESS NO. 1 HEALTH PROBLEM

Mental illness affects more people than cancer, tuberculosis, and infantile paralysis combined. It is our No. 1 health problem according to Surgeon-General Parran. Yet, until very recently, there has been no intensive, nationwide effort to enlist the interest and concern of the American people in support of mental health.

To meet this need, the National Health Foundation was incorporated in May, 1946. In its educational program, the Foundation promotes such ideas as these: "Mental illness is no disgrace." "Mental illness can be prevented." "Mental illness can be cured." "Present facilities for prevention and treatment are inadequate for the need." "Your interest and concern are needed to help prevent needless suffering and save broken minds."

I BELIEVE IN GOD, THE CREATOR AND FATHER

Just because I can't say all that is to be said about God in great, grand statements, I am not going to keep from saying a bit about Him. To me He is The Spirit of creativity and fatherliness. I feel that I believe in Him (live by Him) when I truly appreciate the life urge in someone else and also in myself and have the faith that in trying to combine the two some new creation of thought, relationship, or effort will result. I acknowledge His fatherhood as I recognize in someone else a life urge as important and valuable as my own. I feel that Jesus was speaking about this intimate relationship of creativity and fatherliness when he said that to love one's neighbor as oneself is a commandment like unto loving God with our whole being. This faith helps me in my daily relationships. When I lose it things go wrong. It convinces me all the more that God is creative and fatherly and that the devil is sterile and unfatherly.

FIND OLD MANUSCRIPT OF ISAIAH

New Haven, Conn., April 10: The earliest known manuscript of the entire Biblical book of Isaiah from the Old Testament has been discovered in Palestine, it was announced today by Professor Millar Burrows of Yale University.

This discovery is particularly significant since its origin is dated about the first century B. C. Other complete texts of Isaiah are known to exist only as recently as the nineth century A. D.

All of these ancient scrolls, two in leather and the others in parchment, have been preserved for many centuries in the library of the Syrian Orthodox Monastery of St. Mark in Jerusalem.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

AMONG THE CANADIAN MENNONITES

Recently the writer of this column was privileged to spend two weeks among the Mennonites in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. In Winnipeg he had the opportunity of attending and taking part in the program of the ministers' conference which was held in the Bethel Mission Church and the Canadian Mennonite Bible College. It was indeed a unique experience to meet and fellowship with many old and new friends and to have the opportunity to acquaint himself with the life and activities of our brethren in Manitoba. The students and many other friends joined with some seventy ministers that had come together for the study of the letter to the Galatians explained by Rev. J. H. Janzen, to follow the deliberations of Rev. I. I. Friesen on the construction and delivery of a sermon, and the illustrated lectures on various topics on Christianity in general and the Mennonites in particular.

All meetings and deliberations were quite informal and brotherly. The student body of the newly founded Canadian Mennonite Bible College, headed by Rev. Arnold Regier, made an excellent impression. The establishment of the Bethel Mission Church in Winnipeg is a blessing to many, and that the young people working and studying in Winnipeg appreciate this opportunity to fellowship in their own church in the English language was evidenced on Sunday when the church was filled mostly with young people. If the church and the college are to continue to work together they will have to acquire new grounds and buildings. The significance of this center of worship and learning can hardly be overestimated not only for the young people in Winnipeg and in Manitoba as a whole but also for the Conference in general. The influx of Mennonites to the city is growing continually, and what a responsibility we have toward each individual.

It was also the writer's privilege to meet many old friends outside of the bounds of this meeting, including some newly arrived Mennonite refugees from Europe and to visit in homes, churches and institutions such as the Schoenwiese Mennonite Church, the Concordia Hospital, the Mennonite Brethren Bible College, etc. To be sure there was never a dull moment in this week of renewing old acquaintances and making new ones.

Saskatoon, also has a large Mennonite colony with a church headed by Rev. J. J. Thiessen, chairman of the Mennonite Colonization Board and the Mennonite Conference of Canada. Here and in the not distant Rosthern one still feels the influence of the late elder David Toews. Rosthern with two schools, a Mennonite publishing house and a book store, together with Saskatoon, form the headquarters of the Canadian General Conference. Here another ministers' conference took place much like the one in Winnipeg even though attended by fewer people. Most of the country roads were blocked and one morning it was 40 below zero. Covered sleds with smoke pouring from their chimneys were a unique but common sight. Conversation occasionally drifted to the August heat in Kansas—the other extreme.

There is no doubt in the mind of the writer that the Canadian Mennonites will gain in significance in the total North American Mennonite brotherhood as time goes on. As is known, a great number of them are "old-timers" whose ancestors came to this country during the seventies. The most conservative element among them, such as the Old Colonists and the Sommerfelder, have left and are leaving for Mexico and Paraguay. Those that have remained in Canada are breaking away from the conservative set ways of their fathers and are showing interest in evangelism, missions, and education. All this is partly due to the arrival of more than twenty thousand Mennonites after World War I whom we could call the "new-comers." The process of merging and assimilation of these two groups is not always simple. Although both groups came from the same country—Russia—fifty years elapsed between their respective arrival. What complicates this process even more is the fact that each of the groups themselves come from various backgrounds. For example, there are among the "old-timers" the Bergthaler, Sommerfelder, and the Kleine Gemeinde people. Among the "new-comers" there are representatives from the various communities of Russia with entirely different cultural backgrounds. It is marvelous that these people with such a variety of backgrounds have already achieved so much cooperation and unity. This can be explained only because of their genuine and sincere desire for unity in essentials and forbearance in non-essentials. Whatever the older brother in the United States can do to aid the process of bringing greater unity to the body of believers in the Lord Jesus Christ should be done. Perhaps he can even learn about this work of grace from the Canadian brethren.

To an Iris

Oh, to see, and smell, and touch an iris!
Your fragrance is so sweet;
Each time you surely thrill me,
When every day we meet.

God's most infinite patience,
I see in you concealed;
His most exquisite tenderness,
I see in you revealed.

The garden plot wherein you grow,
Is such a holy ground;
The rocks close by will even show,
A praise to Him I found.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

On March 31 the Canadian Mennonite Teacher's Conference met in Winnipeg. Mennonite Teachers and educational leaders from all parts of Canada met for the purpose of unifying and coordinating the various school programs. Ten Mennonite schools were represented at this meeting. It was a significant Conference in that an agreement was reached whereby all schools would seek to follow certain standards set up by a coordinating committee in the teaching of Mennonite history, church history, religion, and German. Mr. D. Paetkau of Rosthern, Saskatchewan, was elected as chairman of the Conference. A very cordial spirit prevailed throughout.

This Conference was significant in view of the larger Interschool Committee Meeting which the Board of Education is calling at Bethel College on April 26. Rev. Arnold J. Regier will represent the Canadian Mennonite Bible College at that meeting. It is our hope that a closer cooperation can be achieved among our Conference schools to the glory of Christ's name!

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Howard Nyce visited the campus as a representative of the Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference. He spoke in chapel April 6, 7, and 8 and interviewed students interested in going into foreign missionary work. The Women's Gospel Team gave a program in the Evangelical United Brethren Church near St. Mary's Sunday, April 11. A committee of the Ohio College Association visited the campus April 6. Eight faculty members attended sessions of the Ohio College Association in Columbus April 9 and 10. The Goshen College Men's Chorus gave a concert sponsored by Bluffton College in the First Mennonite Church Friday evening, April 16. The chorus was on a tour of Ohio and Pennsylvania.. Officers have been chosen for the YM and YWCA for next year. Charles Rickert, Canton, Ohio, is to head the men's organization while Janice Welty, of the St. John Church near Pandora, will be the leader of the women's group.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

A Peace Institute sponsored by the Mennonite churches of the Freeman community will be held on the college campus Saturday, April 17. There will be three meetings, the forenoon and afternoon meetings are for young people and church workers. The evening program is open to all, and everyone is invited. The morning meeting starts at ten, the afternoon meeting at two, and the evening program at seven-thirty. Among the visiting speakers will be Dr. Guy F. Hershberger of Goshen College and Paul Goering, who is at present working in the office of the National Service Board and Religious Objectors in Washington, D. C. To fill the vacancy created by Coach Neufeld's resignation the Board has secured Vernon Wiebe of Corn, Oklahoma. Mr. Wiebe will graduate from Tabor College this spring. Mr. Wiebe is married, and his wife has held teh position of Secretary to President Shellenberg of Tabor College.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

On April 8, the students donned overalls and work clothes and set to work raking the lawn, pruning the hedges, painting the bird house, cleaning up trash and paper, washing windows, and in general giving the Seminary grounds a real polishing and cleaning.

The Seminary quartet is scheduled for a trip to Ohio on April 25 to 26. Professor Dirks announces that plans are underway for a very extensive tour by the quartet this summer, and they will plan to visit the eastern, northern, and Canadian districts of the General Conference.

John T. Neufeld, announces that changes in the rent control law will permit institutions like the Seminary much greater opportunity for occupancy of property which the institutions own. At present a good many Christian institutions are owners of apartments and dwellings which cannot be occupied because the law protects the renters.

Don. E. Smucker is scheduled to be one of the speakers at the Civilian Public Service reunion to be held at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, April 18.

BETHEL COLLEGE

A committee of students and faculty members has arranged a Peace Forum for the student body in an all-day program for April 14, to discuss issues confronting youth in the present national crisis. Speakers have been chosen to represent the varying positions between extreme militarism and extreme pacifism. Fifteen students also attended the Peace Conference for Tabor, Hesston, and Bethel Colleges held in Hillsboro on April 10. Throughout the day on Sunday, April 18, a C.P.S. reunion for this section of the country will be held in the Student Union Room. During this Peace Fellowship meeting, mental hospitals, our peace witness, and other important topics will be discussed. As an expression of appreciation, invitations are being sent to friends of the College who have contributed ten dollars or more per person this year to attend the seventeenth annual Booster Reception and Program in Memorial Hall Friday evening, April 30, at seven o'clock. Dr. Karl A. Menninger, outstanding American psychiatrist, will be the speaker.

HOW TO SECURE INFORMATION FROM WASHINGTON

by Paul Goering

Mennonites interested in current legislative issues can be considerably helped in getting information by using the free services offered to the public by Congressional offices and by Congressmen to their constituents.

Any person can obtain a copy of any legislation which is introduced by writing to either the House or Senate Document Room, Washington 25, D. C. A postal card is sufficient and will be filled on the day that the order is received. Each bill receives a number and should be ordered by number if it is known, or by the title and the name of the Senator or Representative who introduced it. For instance, one of the Bills in the House is House Resolution 4278 or simply H. R. 4278. The Senate bill for Displaced Persons is S. 2242.

Any constituent may write to his representative or to either of his two senators and get a copy of any bill. When writing to Congressmen about controversial legislation it sometimes adds weight to your views if he knows you have studied the bill or bills previously.

One of the most useful references to have around in writing to Congressmen is a list of the names of each representative and senator, his home address and his committee assignment. These lists are available from either the House or Senate Clerk. Ask for the alphabetical name list as well as the list by states and standing committees. Short of this you can always find out the name of your Representative or Senator from your local postmaster. Since the important work on any legislation is done in one of the committees before it reaches the Floor, the committee and subcommittee hearings which contain the testimony of anyone appearing before the committee, afford a good source of information and background into legislation. A copy of the committee hearings on a specific matter can be obtained from either the Committee Office or from your congressman. The recent hearings of the Senate Armed Services Committee on UMT and selective service will soon be printed and available. Congressmen and Congressional committees have the use of the franking privilege for free mailing.

The verbatim record of each days proceedings of the House and Senate are printed in the Congressional Record which comes out on the following day. Many letters from constituents, editorials, other speeches by Congressmen, etc. are inserted by Congressmen in the Record. Persons who are seriously interested may ask to get on the mailing list of their Representative or of their Senaters for a complimentary copy of the Record. It can also be ordered from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington 25, D. C. for $1.25 per month.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OPPOSES U.M.T.

NEW YORK — The opposition of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to proposed legislation on universal military training was brought before the Armed Services Committee of the Senate on March 30 in a statement presented by Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, executive secretary of the Council's Department of International Justice and Goodwill.

FAVOR MILITARY TRAINING

The Executive Committee of the Independent Fundamental Churches of America, an affiliate of the American Council of Christian churches, has petitioned President Truman, his Cabinet, and the Congress to give serious consideration to the Swiss system of universal military training. "While deploring the need for the same," said the resolution, "we nevertheless recognize that military preparedness is most necessary in these critical days," The Swiss system advocated by this group would permit young men to receive their military training at high schools and colleges, instead of in army camps. The Committee deplored what they believed to have been government encouragement of the consumption of liquor and inadequate safeguards for moral protection.—Gospel Herald

WOULD HAVE STATE SUPERVISE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Tiruvalla, India, February 6.—Abdul Kalam Azad, minister of education in the Dominion of India, made clear in his recent speech to the central educational advisory board his view that "sound and healthy" religious education should be given in elementary schools under state supervision. He pointed out that India's troubles, unlike Europe's, are created not by "materialistic zealots" but by religious fanatics. Today, he said, children in villages and cities are being instructed in religion by teachers who are literate but not educated, who equate religion with bigotry and have no broad or liberal outlook on the subject. "The ideas thus acquired," Azad said, "cannot be wholly supplanted later on by modern education. If we want to safeguard the intellectual life of our country against this danger, we may not leave early training in religion to private sources. A national government cannot divest itself of responsibility here. To mold the growing mind of the nation along right lines is its primary duty."

INDIA'S DRAFT CONSTITUTION PROVIDES FOR FREEDON TO "PROFESS AND PRACTICE"

TIRUVALLA, INDIA, March 15.—The fundamental rights clauses in the Dominion of India's draft constitution, just published, are still far from complete. However, freedom to profess and practice any religion is guaranteed. The drafting committee has provided that no religious instruction shall be given in educational institutions wholly maintained by state funds. Denominational schools may give religious education to pupils of their denomination outside of school hours. In schools operated by the state but maintained by an endowment or trust which requires that religious instruction be given, there will be no ban on such instruction. It is assumed that the words "religious education" as used by the committee refer to training in some specific creed, and that there will be no prohibition in any of the schools on teaching moral principles or emphasizing the fundamental unity of all religions.

Advocates Mission in Florida

Herbert S. Stauffer, Mennonite merchant of Dublin, Pennsylvania, went to sunny Florida this past winter as he has done a number of times before. He reports that churches in St. Petersburg have overflow crowds and that some congregations hold four services on a Sunday to accommodate the people. Mr. Stauffer reports that there are many sects from which one can choose, but that there is no Mennonite mission in the city. There is an Old Mennonite mission in Tampa about twenty-five miles away. While in St. Petersburg the Stauffers met a number of General Conference people who live there. Mr. Stauffer feels that these Mennonites would share his enthusiasm for a General Conference mission in St. Petersburg.

From St. Petersburg, the Stauffers went to Sarasota, about fifty miles further south. Here they felt very much at home because there were many plain brethren touring and also living here. In this city are two Mennonite churches, both of which have been begun as missions. The one in the residential district is called the Bay Shore Mennonite Church and is attended by those of the Old Group. The church is a newly built structure on a corner lot, with another building on the same lot used for auxiliary purposes. Reverend Brenneman, who had to give up mission work in South America because of ill health, is the pastor of this church of forty members. During this past February this church had a Sunday morning attendance of over four hundred. Many worshiped outside on the lawn, and Sunday school classes were also taught on the lawn because of the crowded conditions. Reverend Brenneman broadcasts the International Sunday School Lesson over a local radio station and gives a special invitation to the public to attend the services. Driving through the streets of Sarasota one notices many Amish Brethren as well as Conservative Mennonites. They make good use of the Pennsylvania Dutch dialect. Many engage in fishing and in the gathering of sea shells. Two miles south of Sarasota is a large Mennonite Amish settlement called Pine Craft. These people purchased a large bakery building which they are now using for a house of worship. On Sunday this building is filled to capacity with as many as six hundred or more. Members of various Mennonite groups worship together in the true gospel spirit.

Mennonites from other states come to this community to spend the winter there in one, two, and three-room houses. Early in spring they return to their farms in the other states. Many of the younger people remain the year around, engaged in different occupation, among them an extensive celery business. Celery fields are planted in straight rows as far as the eye can see. The whole industry is geared up to the highest efficiency.

Mr. Stauffer raises the question as to whether the General Conference should not establish a mission in a city like St. Petersburg. He says, "We believe that it would be a splendid plan towards closer social and spiritual relations among us from all sections of our country and Canada."

M.C.C. News Notes

The story of the movement of Mennonite refugees from Europe to Paraguay has in it the familiar names of Volendam and General Stuart Heintzelman, the names of the ships in which several thousand refugees have crossed the Atlantic. To these names we must now add the Prince David, the vessel which is probably now crossing the Atlantic with refugees if the sailing date has not been delayed. Elfrieda Dyck was scheduled to go with the refugees on this vessel. The boat is again being furnished by the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization.

Negotiations are under way to charter a ship to move the Danzig group of Mennonite refugees to Paraguay. Because of the great difficulty involved in chartering a ship, investigation is also being made to determine the advisability of sending these refugees to Paraguay in smaller groups by regular passenger steamship service.

MCC Opens Children's Home at Nancy

The Mennonite Central Committee has opened a children's home at Nancy, in France, in the hope that the French Mennonites will assume its operation sometime later.

Gulfport Camp Moved

The Gulfport Voluntary Service Camp has been moved from Camp Bernard to Camp Landon. Essentially the same program of work as before will be carried on.

WORK IN MENTAL HOSPITALS

Service units are being opened in two mental institutions to give opportunity for service for interested young people. One of these is at Richmond State Hospital, Richmond, Indiana, where twenty men and women can work from June 13 to August 22. This hospital is in need of personnel, especially young people who will contribute new joy and enthusiasm to the lives of the patients through the manifestation of a cheerful and radiant spirit in their own lives.

The other unit is to be at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington, D. C., where fifteen men and women can serve from June 13 to August 23. This is a Federal hospital and is one of the best equipped institutions of its kind. Since this hospital will give instruction in psychiatric nursing preference is being given to volunteers interested in a profession related to this field.

The Washington Scene

by Paul Goering

The prospects for defense legislation are as follows: expanded air force—certainly; selective—likely; UMT—unlikely. Action on defense measures expected two to four weeks.

House Armed Services Committee started daily hearings today on selective service and over-all defense needs with defense chiefs testifying. Committee members tangled with Forrestal on size of airforce.

Rep. Andrews (R.-N.Y.) Chairman of Committee, has proposed that C. O.'s who are unwilling to take noncombatant training be deferred. He believes deferment is the most practical solution for handling C.O.'s but admits that public sentiment could force change particularly under war-time mobilization.

Senate Armed Services Committee is trying to work out compromise with military leaders. Forrestal wants 55-air groups; Committee asking for 70-air groups. Committee wants to scrap UMT, lower registration age limit from forty-five to thirty and opposes drafting of veterans.

No time limit for temporary draft machinery is specified in either the House or Senate Committee bills. Draft would be permanent until changed by law.

COLOMBIA MISSIONARIES SAFE

A telegram from Gerald Stucky, received at General Conference Headquarters on April 15, states that all of the General Conference missionaries in Colombia are safe.

Bonds of Affection

KATHRYN LAWES, the first wife of Sing Sing Prison's famous Warden Lewis E. Lawes, was killed ten years ago in a tragic accident. Her death closed 17 years in Sing Sing — not at it. Seventeen years in which not one single day passed but what she walked among the condemned of society, into their yards, the prison hospital, the workrooms and the visiting room. Sullen, resentful faces lighted up as she walked by. Was 10298 worried about his family? Did young and bewildered 23804 feel that the steel door had cut off his life? Simply, without affectation which they would have detected in a second, she found out and silently, quickly helped. She took — not sent — food and clothes and money to a family left desolate by the husband's imprisonment. She saw to it that encouraging letters went to hopeless young criminals. Many, many dollars found their way from released men, frightened to face freedom again.

Anyone can guess the gloom that fell like a thick, choking blanket on Sing Sing that October night in 1937 when her death was "telegraphed" from cell to cell. Then came the news that her funeral would take place in a church — outside prison walls. The prisoners sent a representative to see the warden. He asked, in the name of hundreds of devoted men, the right to pay final respects. Lawes nodded, pushed a button.

The night before the funeral, the South Gate of Sing Sing slowly rolled open. Through it trudged a slow, silent procession. In a stunned group murderers, thieves, swindlers, criminals of all depravities, walked outside the prison to the warden's house a quarter mile away. No one veered from that line, no one looked right or left at freedom there at his elbow. There weren't even any guards. If any man had tried to run away he would have been killed instantly — by the others in that heartbroken procession.

They reached the house, and one by one they passed Kathryn Lawes' bier, paused a few prayerful seconds, walked on. Then they re-formed lines outside — and walked back to their cells and the darkness. — Irving Hoffman in "The Hollywood Reporter"

—Alberta Community Church, Portland, Oregon: The Sunday school is buying books for Puran Banwar to take back to India to be used there. Thirty-seven dollars have been donated thus far. "The King of Life" a program of scripture and song, was given March 28 by the Junior and adult choirs. A special Easter program by the children filled our church to capacity.—Mrs. Frank Penner, Corr.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Munich, South Dakota: The Bethany Bible School commencement exercises were held, April 2. Nine young people received their diplomas. Rev. Oliver K. Ringering, Minot, North Dakota, was the guest speaker. On Sunday evening, March 19, Professor Schrag and the Grace Messengers Quartet of Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska, gave a program of sacred music, testimonies and sermon in our church.— Corr.

—Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Last Sunday was Mission Youth Rally, sponsored and led entirely by our young people. Rev. A. E. Kreider was the main speaker at all three sessions. At the close of the evening meeting a number of our young people dedicated themselves to the Lord for service. April 11, at the evening meeting, Mrs. Orlando Waltner is to show pictures for their work in India.—Helen Penner, Corr.

Book Notes

Meditations for Women is a companion volume to Meditations for Men published by Abingdon Cokesbury Press. It is written by women, for women. It's contents are arranged under the following topics: "On Opening Things," "Not without Sentiment," "Reaching Up," "Personalities of Springtime," "Together We Grow," "Larry, Dan, and Little Sister," "The Better Part," "A Time for Everything," "Prayer," "Mists and Mellow Fruitfulness," "Roads and Vistas" "New Government."

The book begins like this: "We will open the book. Its pages are blank. We are going to put words on them ourselves. The book is called 'Opportunity,' and its first chapter is New Year's Day."

On turning a few pages I find the story of a poor woman coming into a delicatessen shop, and seeing some leftover ice cream, presently drinks it and leaves. An old woman, dead now, but her grandchildren—what about them? Or there is the picture of heroic courage and faith of the French woman whose husband died in a German prison leaving her with three young children. She writes "Times are hard, very hard. We are sometimes hungry, often cold. But the children are nearly always merry, and what you call 'good sports.' For myself, I do not know how people who lack a sure faith in a loving God preserve their sanity . . . . my heart is calm and ever gay."

One is intrigued by the discourse on how the mother tries to face her task on the various levels — Judy returning every few minutes from the sandbox, the boys invading the kitchen for cookies and the husband coming home tired and hungry, each level making its special demands. Somehow one understands the woman who was tired of fighting dirt day after day and begins to feel sorry for herself. Sitting down to read the Gospel Story of the lowly carpenter one discovers a new attitude.

This is not a book to replace the Bible in devotional reading but brings spiritual refreshing through picturing present-day life situations.—D. C. Wedel

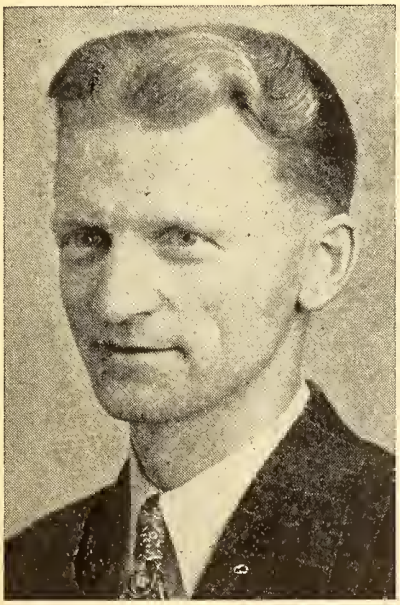
Review Year's Work in Saskatchewan

by Henry Friesen

Last night at our prayer meeting in the Invalid Home, we read Psa. 103:1-8, meditated upon it, and decided that we too could join with King David in these beautiful words of thanks; "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless His Holy Name. Bless the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all his benefits." Although snowstorms and frosts are making our weather rather miserable, we are privileged to have warm houses, food, clothing. Looking back over the work of 1948 God Almighty has again done wonderful things through our people.



Rev. Isaac Epp
Saskatchewan Youth Secretary

Council Meeting at Newton-Bethel College

Starting with the Council meeting in Newton: the young people of the different districts of the General Conference met; and as the year before, received new visions and inspirations to expand our work. This time the main thoughts were directed to inspire young to give a certain period of their time to Voluntary Service.

Voluntary Service: Montana

Upon my coming home from the Council meeting, it didn't take much coaxing or talking, but a lot prayer to select the right four young people who were to go to the Montana Cheyene Indian Mission field. Cornie Driedger, orderly at the Invalid Home at that time, gave his car for the six-hundred mile trip, taking with him Erna Dyck, graduate of the Rosthern Bible School; Martha Mierau and Ella Heppner, graduate and student of the Swift Current Bible School. They left for the field during the middle of May and returned about the middle of July, with joy in their hearts, willing to prepare for greater work.

Youth Farm

On the Youth Farm we were privileged to have ten girls from the United States as Voluntary Service workers. We appreciated their help, especially during this time, because some of our staff went on holidays and others went to teach DVBS. The patients in the Invalid Home were happy that the girls spoke the German language, since some of our old people cannot understand the English. Truly, the girls adjusted themselves to Canadian customs very well, even if some of them got rather homesick at times. They also helped in DVBS work, and later we had very favorable reports from some places. If any of the girls who were here last summer should read this report, we'd like to say again, "Thank you for your wonderful work and cooperation."

Elim Gospel Beach

At Elim Gospel Beach we had four young people from our neighboring province Alberta, to help during the time of the retreat and children's camp. They did excellent work and at the same time were encouraged to do greater work for God's Kingdom.

We trust and hope that this Voluntary Service work will grow from year to year, and that we as young people will see more clearly the need there is to work for our Lord, and the privilege we have to gather treasures in Heaven.

Daily Vacation Bible School

Counting the help we had from the United States, we had seventy-one workers this year who went out from Swift Current and Rosthern to bring the Gospel of Salvation to the children. The schools varied in type and enrollment. We had schools with five children and some with fifty. We had schools where only the German language was to be taught and others where only the English was taught. Again as in the years before children were brought to the knowledge that Christ was their Saviour. This, of course, is our aim in DVBS. The teachers did not all report this, but we believe in Isa. 55:11, "So shall my Word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it.

Saskatoon

At present we also have a full time mission worker, Erna Dyck of Waldheim, Saskatchewan, in the Mayfair and Pleasant Hill districts in Saskatoon. These are outlying districts, and many of our Mennonite people live there. Erna is being supported by the Saskatchewan groups through the Mennonite Youth Society, and by the Saskatoon Church and Saskatoon Young People.

Retreats and Children's Camps

As in previous years, we were again able to have two retreats and children's camps in Saskatchewan, at Swift Current and at Rosthern. Among the workers who served were Rev. J. Esau, evangelist, missionaries J. R. Duerksens and Elisabeth Goertz, Miss Anne Quiring, mission worker, Swift Current, and others. They all did their part to make the retreats spiritual, and souls were won for Christ's Kingdom.

Bertha Fast

Last year we had Ernst Harder visiting churches and youth rallies. This year Miss Bertha Fast, returned M. C. C. worker, was here traveling in the interest of the Voluntary Service. She also gave interesting reports on her work in Egypt and Italy, bringing the great work of the M. C. C. very close to our hearts.

Invalid Home and Children's Home

In the Invalid Home and Children's Home the work has grown considerably since last winter. We have thirty-three patients at present in the Invalid Home, with the following churches being represented: General Conference, Mennonite Brethren, Lutheran, Apostolic, New Jerusalem, Catholic and others. The staff of the Invalid Home usually consists of twelve girls and one man, who is the orderly. If God so leads we hope to complete the second floor this summer in order that we may be able to accommodate fifty patients.

The Children's Home was opened last summer. At present there are five children in the Home, the directors being Mr. and Mrs. David Friesen and Miss Sarah Lehn. We thank God for them all, and it is our prayer that these children may really be brought up in the fear of the Lord.

The Lord has truly been great to us in supplying our financial needs this past year. The farm has been paid for, the Invalid Home's large debt has been reduced to a minimum, the Children's Home has been completed, leaving a small debt which is slowly being reduced, while running expenses are being met.

We would herewith like to thank all our friends who have contributed in prayer and finances this past year. The Lord will repay you abuntantly.

The work is thine, O Christ our Lord,
The work for which we stand,
And being thine, 'twill overcome,
It's foes on every hand.

Peace Movement in Italy

by Sandro Sarti

[Sandro Sarti spent a year's study at Bethel College last year as a part of the delegation of European students in our schools. Sandro is a Waldensian, a small but vigorous Protestant group located mainly in Northern Italy. This group of Christians has a 750-year history, having originated around the year 1200. Sandro returned to his homeland deeply interested in the non-resistant position toward war.]

On October 11 there was held at Florence the first meeting of representatives of various Italian pacifist movements. As a result of the meeting it was decided to create a "Co-ordinating Committee of the Italian Activities for Peace" (Secretary, Edmondo Marcucci, Via Gramsci 25, Jesi, Ancona) with the underlying purpose that it be a kind of "peace union." In addition to this a group of more radical pacifists (among them some active in the nonviolent teaching) founded an Italian Association of Resistance to War. Its first members signed the following declaration: "The movement is open to all who refuse to participate in the war or to assist in the preparation for war including military service, work in factories producing armaments, whatever their religious or political ideas are. The activities of the Association shall be carried out by local groups and committees with a central unifying committee."

Another meeting was held a few days ago in Torino in order to organize the national committee of the "World Alliance for Friendship Among Peoples Throughout the Churches." The program of the Alliance in Italy is to present the peace problems to the Protestant churches first and later to the Italian public at large. The planning of various activities is very

Report from Washington

Word from Washington indicates that there are three views held regarding the present world political situation. First, there is a small minority opinion that America should whip Russia when the whipping is good and now is the season for it. This group holds that the present time is advantageous for American expression of power.

A second view holds that the big fist policy should be followed and Russia should be bluffed into submission in her policy of aggression. The big fist should, of course, have the power behind it to make it a real tough one! That, seemingly is a prevailing view.

A third view holds that the present crisis is trumped up or at least the administration is making a great to-do over the crisis using it to the administration's political advantage. This view holds that the administration is using Rooseveltian crisis politics to keep itself together and in running order.

interesting and includes conferences, group study, seminaries, etc. The most interesting activity of all is the proposed meeting of representatives of various Latin countries next summer here in Torino. The president of the national committee is Dr. E. Eynard. minister of the First Waldensian Church of the city.

Distribution of Schoolbags

[Last year Sunday schools in churches here made up school bags to be sent to relief centers abroad for distribution by M.C.C. workers. The following are reports of the results of this gesture of good will by children and young people.]

In China

It was just another morning—but in the hearts of several hundred school children it was more than just another morning; it meant this was the day for them to receive the Schoolbags that the "Menno-o-weis" were giving out. This morning each child scrubbed his or her hands and face extra hard, so it seemed, as the teacher had told them that they had to be clean and look their best.

Mr. Sun, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Kaifeng, and myself took a day's investigation of all the Christian schools in Kaifeng. After visiting the sixt different schools we gave out four hundred and fifty coupons which indicated that the bearer of the coupon would receive a Schoolbag from the M. C. C.

As each group came for their bags, a short explanation was given to how these Schoolbags happened to come to China—a token of friendship from the American boys and girls to the Chinese boys and girls. Then the Bible story books were given to each child.

Now came the big moment for the children. As the Schoolbags were given out the children's eyes grew big with excitement and a most gracious "thank you" was given to us. While the Schoolbags were distributed a can of peanuts was also given to each child. To many children this was indeed a luxury and each child went home that day proudly carrying a Schoolbag and hugging a can of peanuts.

By noon the last group of children had come and the Schoolbags were given out with the exception of some forty odd. The remaining were to be sent over to a missionary who was going to use these bags in starting her refugee school.—Viola J. Amstutz.

In Vienna, Austria

"The next morning early we went to the Evangelische Volks Schule. Here we visited the different grades. The children have their rooms in school, just as you do in America. A number of the boys and girls do not have any school bags. Paper, pencils, crayons, and erasers can not be found here in the stores. These boys and girls were given lovely bags, contributed by the boys and girls in America. I just wish you could have seen their happy faces. They found all kinds of useful things in these bags-paper, pencils, colored crayons, and erasers. They came and shook hands with us and courtsied."—Elizabeth Baehr

Letter From a Child In Strasbourg, France

"Thank you for your pretty gift and for your little note.

It is with great joy that I opened the bag with all the surprises—the water colors, the crayons, and all the other nice things.

My name is Yvette Muller, I am 12 years old and I have a little sister and two brothers. Thank you once again and goodbye."

In Italy

"Our big moment now is the schoolbags which have arrived and are they lovely! We gave some to the children at the Waldensian orphanage the other evening and were they thrilled! It will be a pleasure to see the reactions to the rest of them which will be given out in the coming weeks."—Velma Schlabach

In Poland

"From the days as a school teacher before coming to Europe, I can recall to mind the expressions of happy children when upon certain occasions they were specially favored. Their expressions could hardly have been more joyful than those I saw among the Polish school children who recently received the gift school bags from America.

I was in the local village school on several occasions before our distribution of school bags, and was amazed by the lack of ordinary facilities. Pupils somehow prepared their lessons with pencil stubs a few inches long and a few scraps of paper. You may well understand then, how much the children appreciated the contents of the school bags. Many of them had never seen crayons or modelling clay. When Emerson Miller gave out the bags at one school, one little boy asked whether he could really keep his school bag or whether he would have to return it later. Some parents reported sleepless nights created by the excitement of receiving the bags.

To girls and boys in America—each one of you who so kindly prepared a school bag that reached Poland has been responsible for making your Polish neighbor a great deal happier. Always remember that these children are your neighbors, because as Jesus intimated in the story of the Good Samaritan, he who needs your help is your neighbor."—Wilson Hunsberger

In Amsterdam, Holland

"It will be of interest to you to hear how the school bags were received here. They were sorted in the office as to type and contents—we have to consider four different classes of children. Each child was allowed to come in with a chosen number and from the pile sorted for his class to get the school bag with corresponding number. —Joy?—The Christmas packages didn't bring forth more exultations. Now bags are taken to bed, neatly standing at the foot end, they stand beside them at the dinner table and are taken with them while walking on the grounds. Our only regret is that they come so late. These materials would have helped so very much in our school had we had them from the beginning.—Evangeline Matthies

Volunteers Help at Material Aid Center

Young people from various Mennonite groups have recently been participating in "youth day" work at the Newton, Kansas, material aid warehouse. Local leaders from the several Mennonite groups assumed responsibility in enlisting volunteers for work on each Thursday from February 26 to March 25. A typical "youth day" included packing and processing work at the center, and also a devotional period and talks on relief and serve themes. This type of activity is recommended not only to young people living near other relief centers, but also to any local young people's groups which may desire to engage in some relief or service activity. One example of such a local relief project is the Shoes for Relief drive held at Scottdale, Pennsylvania, on January 10, 1948, by a Mennonite young people's group.

NEWS BITS

The Mennonite congregation in Altona, Germany, now has four thousand members as against four hundred before the war according to one report.

In Kiel, Germany, the MCC is daily feeding 3,500 children a plate of soup and a roll.

MCC transportation equipment in Europe is mainly of the army type, many jeeps and GMC trucks. During the past eight months approximately half of this equipment has been overhauled. Three men work full time to keep vehicles on the road and they have more work than they can do.

Kansas University has done away with the freshman beanie. Someone suggests, "There is hope yet that the old school will grow up."

The army is accused of using huge military appropriations for influencing public relations. Dr. Roy L. Smith reports that at present there are approximately 1,700,000 men enrolled in the regular armed services.

The Washington Star is authority for the statement that by early 1947 ten of the twenty top-ranking executives of the State Department were transfers from the military services. The highly authoritative Army and Navy News Bulletin said a year ago, "Today the army has virtual control of foreign affairs . . . . The chain of control in diplomatic hot spots both in the execution of basic policy and in the formulation of ad hoc arrangements, lies almost totally in the hands of the military authorities." Mr. Hansen Baldwin, in this article in Harper's Magazine wrote, "That the first step toward autocracy in any nation is the creation of a specially privileged military class."

POLISH COMMUNISTS ARE CHURCH MEMBERS

From Poland comes the report that many of the Polish Communists are church members. Some groups, such as the Baptists and Methodists, have increased their membership as much as seven-fold since the war. Many of the churches, not having room enough, hold three services on Sunday to take care of the crowds. There is an official guarantee of religious liberty, and it is reported that church critics of the government are not molested. The report also states, "The government is encouraging religious life by allowing lower costs on materials for church rebuilding and reduced rates for clergymen on concerts, rail travel, and other services." They also get plenty of time on the radio.

BURMA GAINS INDEPENDENCE WITHOUT WAR

Under British power since 1826, Burma is now independent under its own red and blue flag. The president in his recent proclamation said, "Let us rejoice that this independence did not come as the result of armed conflict, but as the fruit of friendly negotiations with a great nation whose political bonds were replaced by mutual consent with the stronger bonds of friendship and good will." The former British governor of Burma has asserted that the Burmese will be freer than the Filipinos under the present American treaties.

Militarization

By the time this is in print, the Italian elections will have been held and the die will be pretty well cast so far as the political mind of America is concerned. Reports indicate that the country's political leaders are pretty well set on the idea of re-instating Selective Service. U.M.T. does not have too good a chance of becoming reality, it is said.

Since this sort of action will so deeply affect the life of America by directly influencing its family, school, and religious outlook as well as its political policy in relation with other nations, the need for concern and voiced opinion on the part of each of the people is indeed great. Letters, telegrams, telephone calls to your Congressman and Senator is indeed in place! On commenting on this proposed legislation, one editor stated bluntly, "Truman Means War!" A simple statement of your convictions is sufficient to register your opinion to your Congressman in Washington.

The home is the basic institution of society. Its welfare should be one of our primary concerns. More prayer and planning should go into the making of a home than into the work of our occupation. The home faces dangers. Influences that tend to disintegrate find their way into homes through the radio, magazines, newspapers and the funnies. The downward pull of these forces and the worldly life about us should keep us awake to the need of making the home truly a place where the child will grow up under Christian care and nurture.

To have a loving discernment and "intuitive feel" of what is right and best for children is very valuable. There are many homes where parents could not give any reasons for doing what they do, except that it is right and loving. Somehow when love controls, people do what is right. A loving concern for the personality of others enables people to consider and solve problems from the viewpoint of the one who needs help.

From birth on a child is influenced. One of the most profound needs of a newborn child is the feeling of security. When the mother loves and cuddles her baby as she nurses it, attitudes are developed that will go with the child through life. If the child is left alone to feed from a bottle that is suspended from a nursing gadget or to feed from a bottle that rolls from its mouth, it leaves the child frustrated and with a feeling of insecurity and inferiority. Psychiatrists also warn parents that a child should not be excessively loved, lest the child fail to develop a sense of responsibility for its own decisions. Parents can be over-solicitous and over-protective to the harm of the child.

As the child grows up he becomes very eager to learn. His insatiable curiosity grows out of this desire. This is the time to be open and honest with the child. His questions should be honesty faced and frankly answered. In this period of childhood character grows by the process of identification.A child may want to be like father or like teacher. What people are is therefore more important for the child's life than what they teach him, important as that may be.

In early adolescence young people often come into moods of defiance, because the demands that are made upon them are very great. They are expected to grow up and use their own judgment, but at the same time they are also expected to respect the wishes and judgments of their elders. It takes a great deal of wisdom and patience to allow young people to stand on their own feet. The mother of Jesus found it difficult when the young Jesus went his own ways and stayed in the temple at Jerusalem. It is important that older people try to appreciate what young people do when they strive in their way to do what is right, even though that may not be the parents' way. Here a loving concern for the personality of a youth will go a long way to avoid mistakes.

When there is hearty laughter in a home the children are likely to feel a sense of security. When parents with Christian optimism can laugh at the funny things that happen somehow the children feel that life is good.

The pressures that are put on young people today are tremendous. Older people should, therefore, be doubly sympathetic and understanding. Both the young and the old should strive to make the best of these difficult times. An aged father whose sons had grown up to be fine men was congragulated for raising his boys so well. A young father said to him, "I wish I were as wise as you have been." To this the aged man replied that very likely in this day he should make no better job of raising a family than the young father was doing. Concerned parents seldom feel self-sufficient. Parents who exercise love and hold themselves to the admonitions of sacred Scriptures are likely to succeed in making their home a place where their children will grow up into good useful Christian men and women.

There Will Be An Increasing Need for Homes for the Aged

Letter from P. J. Boehrs

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

EDITORIALS

THE CORRUPT condition of the Orthodox Church in Russia in days past is frequently cited as one of the main reasons for the atheism of the Communists and for their violence in trying to achieve the fulfillment of their material needs. What has been happening in Italy and in Colombia should make people very thoughtful these days when the connection of the Russian church and Communism is remembered. Firstly, Italy has been regarded as a solidly Catholic country in which the Catholic Church had its headquarters. The Pope has been regarded as an outstanding opponent of Communism. How are we to explain the fact that a great many of the Italian people are now voting Communist in direct contradiction to the stand of the Catholic Church? How is it that in Catholic Colombia the Communists are credited a part in the recent rebellion and other liberals also took part in the general destruction in which Catholic cathedrals were destroyed. Does this all constitute evidence once more that the Christian Church as known in these two countries has had a form of godliness but denied the power thereof, with the result that people finally see into this and revolt against what is nominally called Christianity? Aside from these two cases, let us consider one more. A wide awake Christian from Europe recently visited the United States and after leaving here reported her regret that the Christian Church in America did not have a hold of the mass of industrial workers. Is it any wonder that people who are hard pressed for the necessities of life will turn against the church if the church does not show that it is sincerely interested in their needs. Coming back to what happened in Colombia, South America, it is noteworthy that Rear Admiral Ellis Zacharias has reported that the basic error of the United States in going to Colombia to the inter-American Conference was that of going with practically no aim except the creation of a common front against Communists. Zacharias reported that Latin Americans went to the Conference with their eyes on a hemisphere recovery program—something to relieve their own "run-down condition and low standard of living." This is one angle that has not been played up in the daily press. When so many people in countries that have been considered so solidly Catholic turn against the Church, and when these people happen to be members of the under-privileged classes, it is time to see the handwriting on the wall. The Christian church had better be Christian, or else it will reap the results.

IN KANSAS there is a Fundamental Baptist Missionary Fellowship. The group feels itself called out from among the other Baptist churches. The ministers belonging to it preach with a very strong salvation emphasis. There is a much stronger emphasis upon conversion than upon the growth in the Christian life later on. According to a rough estimate by one of the ministers in this fellowship, approximately 20 per cent of the ministers in this fellowship are former Mennonites. Of the 20 per cent of former Mennonites, over three-fourths are former General Conference people. Thus it is evident that the Mennonites have a very strong proportional representation in this Fundamentalist Baptist Missionary Fellowship, as far as the number of ministers is concerned. Some of these ministers, who in their youth attended General Conference Mennonite churches, now express themselves to the effect that they hardly ever heard much said about salvation in the churches of their youth. They blame them for not having made clear the way of salvation. After considering a goodly number of other factors that may enter into the situation, one must still face the question as to whether the General Conference Mennonite churches are not actually lacking in an emphasis that would help to make clear to bound souls as to how they can find release and new life. As Mennonites we are used to being very calm, and certainly calmness is a very desirable attribute as long as it is the calmness of the Holy Spirit, and not the calmness of tradition long since gone dead. History does not give the impression that the pioneers of the Mennonite church were excitable people, but it does give us the impression that remarkable changes were brought about in lives. Maybe it is a very difficult problem to make salvation clear to some people. Maybe it needs a different approach than we have been used to making. One thing seems clear. We must preach The Way effectively.

"The Greatest Story Ever Told," which was conceived by and is written under the supervision of Fulton Oursler, internationally known writer and a senior editor of the Reader's Digest, is heard each Sunday at 6:30 p. m., EST, over the coast-to-coast network of ABC.

Kirby Page Speaks on U.S.-Russia Relations

Kirby Page, who has for many years fearlessly and relentlessly faced and preached the truth as he saw it, spoke to a large audience in the Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, on April 20, under the auspices of the Newton Ministerial Alliance and under the sponsorship of the American Friends Service Committee. Dr. Page pictured God as groaning over mankind today. Under this concern of God for mankind, Dr. Page then placed the race of armaments between Russia and the United States, and suggested that God knows why it is going on.

Russia is working feverishly to make itself strong and powerful, declared Dr. Page. Communists care about Communism and they want to extend it. Very important is the fact that they reject the idea of God. There are reasons for this. They were "never exposed to real Christianity under favorable conditions." Any fair-minded man who will read the three hundred year history of the Orthodox Church in Russia will see one of the main reasons why Communists today are atheists. Furthermore, young Russians came on the scene of power when the materialistic idiology began to sweep over Europe. It was one that said that you cannot depend upon God or prayer, but that it is material force that decides things in this world. Russia is putting forth every possible effort to make itself strong. But, said Dr. Page, other governments have the same idea of making themselves strong.

The American point of view is that you have to talk the language of the dictators and the atheists if you are going to deal with them. Militarists in our own country believe that it is only sheer force which will really decide matters in this world. Dr. Page suggests that, "The militarist mind and the Communist mind are very much alike." Both say that military might decides. Millions of Christians talk just like Communists do. They say that we must have force or we will fail. It is bad enough for atheists to trust in violence, but it is infinitely worse for Christians to believe in violence. Dr. Page then went on to picture America's preparedness for war. It entails: 1. Blockbusters, which with jelly fire can burn a large area. With such bombs America demolished about fifty of the largest cities in Germany and fifty of the largest cities of Japan in the last war. In about two nights the city of Dresden, Germany, was destroyed, and two hundred thousand of the one million inhabitants were killed or wounded. 2. The atomic bomb. It killed one hundred thousand of three hundred thousand people in one Japanese city. Fifteen months after the Bikini test, the battleship Pennsylvania was still so hot that it has now been sunk. 3. The rocket. This is a mechanically guided missile. A million houses in England were damaged or destroyed by such rockets sent by the Germans. The Russians now have one which will travel eleven hundred miles. 4. Biological warfare, of which there may be a hundred varieties or so. 5. Submarines. There is one now which will stay under water three weeks. 6. Bombers with a range of eleven thousand miles. 7. The secret weapons which are being perfected and held in military secrecy. Put your mind on this when we talk for preparedness, Dr. Page suggested. It is the idea that we must be ready to kill millions.

What does God think of all this, queried Dr. Page? He loves each one of us, every single person in America and in Russia. He sees man entertain the idea that military power really decides. He sees man think that the only way to be safe is to be ready to kill. Why do Christian people believe this?

In outlining a program on what does God want us to do about it, the speaker gave the following points: First, reject the idea that military force really decides matters. Put in its place the idea of overcoming evil with good. If this were to be done, how would we behave? 1. We would spend our money on goodness and not for wickedness. Every year for ten years we could spend fifteen billion a year for providing food, clothing, shelter, machinery, etc., for the needy people of the earth. Instead of spending it for death, we would spend it for life. 2. We would tell Russia we would stop making our armaments. We would destroy our atomic bombs and make constructive use of our atomic energy resources. We would let Russia know that we would never use bacterial warfare, and that we would disarm as the others disarm. 3. We would be in favor of law and order because these are of God and we would see that we not only need local government but that we need world government.

In discussing why we don't do this, Dr. Page suggested that there are many reasons, but that the one main reason is that we are afraid and that we organize our fears. He suggested that if we let our worst fears pattern our behaviour, we cannot be Christian. Jesus often reminded his disciples not to be afraid.

It is much safer to trust than to fear. Now just how shall we trust? Shall we say that we will trust the Communists and expect them to do right, or shall we say that we will trust in a way of dealing with the Communists? Dr. Page suggested that the latter is the way of the Christian who believes in God. Jesus did not say that people will always treat us right. It may mean a cross. He did not advocate trust in the Romans or the Pharisees to bring about right treatment. We may have to undergo much pain, but it's God's way of building His kingdom throughout eternity. They who put their faith in atomic bombs will be destroyed by atomic bombs.

Dr. Page suggested that Christians today are guilty of praying so little and so infrequently about this whole race of armaments which is plunging us towards destruction. If we ever stood in the need of prayer, we stand in that need now. We need to confess and to pray for forgiveness.

In the discussion period which followed the lecture, Mr. Page pointed out that the historian Toynbee lists twenty-six civilizations, sixteen of which have already perished and nine of which are on the way out, leaving only ours, and that, Mr. Toynbee suggests, is a machine, city, and atomic bomb civilization which must face these tremendous threats but which still has a possibility of surviving but only a possibility.

In reply to a question as to whether we should not spend more time influencing the great mass of citizens rather than trying to convince the congressmen to act according to our beliefs, Dr. Page replied that that was his own personal position, that he spent comparatively little time trying to make an impact in Washington, but that he spent most of his time speaking to the great mass of people.

The speaker did make clear that he believed that a minority in a democracy should speak up for what it believes, otherwise it would be untrue to the democratic form, and the voice of the majority alone would make it a totalitarian government.

In reply to another question, he suggested that the way of the cross may be a difficult one, but after all it is The Way for it is the only satisfying life. And secondly, it may be comparatively less dangerous than the way of violence.

Dr. Page emphasized that individual salvation is certainly the right emphasis, but that we have been very much mistaken in thinking that the salvation experience constituted the finished product of the Christian life instead of being just simply the beginning. He suggested that Christians must see to it that their salvation does not only affect their personal relationships, but that it also has something to do with how we live together with all the people in the world.

When asked what the situation might be confronting the United States should the United States be victorious over Russia in a military way, Dr. Page suggested that it would mean such policing of Russia and the world that it would make a totalitarian nation of the United States to do it.

Dr. Page also pointed out that Christians stand in a great danger of exhibiting the worst kind of hypocrisy. It is bad for people not to believe in God, very bad, but the worst kind of hypocrisy is to declare one's belief in God and then actually to behave like the devil in place of it. He cited the case of the two sons pictured by Jesus, one of whom said that he would do it and did it not, and another who said he wouldn't do it and then got around to doing it anyhow.

The speaker also spent considerable time in pointing out that the great mass of Christians have become tremendously secularized so that God really has very little chance in their way of thinking and living.

All of this confronts us with a tremendous need for study, concluded the speaker.

A very large group of people stayed for the after meeting. Readers of the MENNONITE may be interested in knowing that Dr. Page has consented to contribute several articles to this paper.

Missionary Notes Deep Passion of Revolutionaries

[The following news report is by L. A. Rutschman, Mennonite missionary in Colombia, who has been attending language school at Medellin until now.]

Medellin, Colombia, South America, April 11.—Yesterday morning, accompanied by a newly arrived Lutheran missionary from Minnesota, we toured the city to inspect the damage of the anarchy of the previous night. Five hundred stores had been pillaged; shelves had been emptied of their goods; huge plate glass windows in thousands of pieces covered the side walks and streets. Several buildings had been burned, including a part of the Catholic University and Conservative newspaper plant. Soldiers with fixed bayonets were everywhere. Heavy artillery was not lacking. Army trucks filled with soldiers, guns in readiness, are even today patrolling the streets.

For a few hours Friday evening the majority of radio stations were under the control of the revolutionaries. After hearing their cries, seeing their willingness to die for a cause, and feeling something of their deep passion, I could only compare them to first Century Christians in enthusiasm. I have never heard a revivalist even approximate such depth of feeling. Yet were we as Christians half so enthusiastic, the world would fall at the feet of Christ. And how sadly they need Him! To think that this horde of supposedly respectable citizens would pillage a city, their own city, as did these Friday night, shows something of the depth of the failure of the established Church, and the tragic need of the gospel.

An incident of this type is not without its sorrow. A brilliant young university student, apparently the victim of a policeman's bullet, lost his life. For weeks he had been attending the Presbyterian Church regularly. He had arranged for a university Bible discussion group under the leadership of the national Princeton-trained pastor to begin next Thursday. This vital link between the Evangelical Church and the university now seem to be broken. May God raise up others to take his place.

In a few days we will be leaving the language school in Medellin for our mission in Cachipay to continue our study there and assist in the work.—L. A. Rutschman

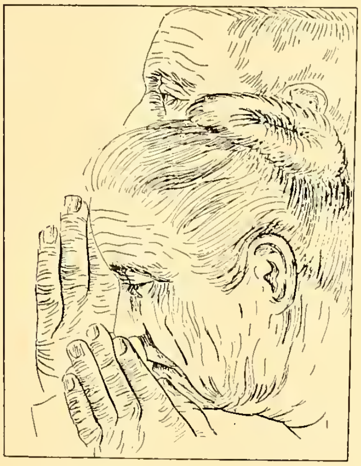
THERE WILL BE AN INCREASING NEED FOR HOMES FOR THE AGED

by H. J. Andres

It is always interesting to note, in studying the word of God, the many responsibilities with which the Christian Church has been charged; then, also, it is helpful to us to evaluate and see to what extent we are fulfilling our responsibilities in these various categories.

The evangelization of the world, the feeding and clothing of the hungry and destitute, the care of widows and orphans, supplying the needs of the sick and aged; all of these are among the responsibilities of the church which it has sought to fulfill in varying degrees according to the needs.

In evaluating these needs, it is at once apparent that some are more of a constant nature while others are quite variable, being affected greatly by economic and world conditions. The bringing of the gospel to the uttermost parts of the world has been more of a constant universal task of the Christian church throughout the years, while the need for the feeding and clothing has varied greatly as to time and place.



Sketch by Milruth Unruh

There is one need for which the church bears responsibility which has increased markedly during the last several decades, and that is the need of care for our aged. There may be several reasons for this.

For one thing, it is true that our average family circle, the individual family unit, is smaller today than it was twenty years ago. There is, therefore, less opportunity for one to help the other or for someone to take the responsibility to care for father or mother, and the infirmities of advancing age make it difficult for loved ones to render the adequate nursing care.

But there are other stronger factors which tend to increase our responsibilities in this category. In a recent publication, one of the leading life insurance companies reported that the average length of life of the American people has increased by almost one-third since the beginning of the century. According to health conditions prevailing in 1941, the people of this country had an average length of life, or expectation of life at birth, of 64.36 years—a gain of more than 15 years since 1901. The record has been especially good for white females, who, in the last four decades, have added 17 years to their expectation of life at birth, as against 15.16 years for white males. By 1941 white females attained an average length of life of 68.08 years, just two years short of the biblical three score years and ten. For white males, the figure was 63.39 years, or about 4-2/3 years less than that for white females.

Speaking in terms of averages, or actuarially, the married woman is expected to survive her husband by about eight years. This is accounted for by the fact that women on the average outlive men by about four years, and among married couples the husbands average four years older than the wives.

According to this company, life expectancy at birth increased from 46.3 years in 1901 to 61.48 in 1937. Present trends indicate that the next generation will have a life expectancy of from 68 to 70 years.

According to the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., the average age at death increased from 46.3 years in 1925 to 55.2 in 1939, a gain of 8.9 in fifteen years. Today the chances of reaching 65 are as great as were the chances for 50 in 1910.

The Federal Census in 1940 showed that there were were 33 per cent more people aged 65 and over than in the same age-group in 1930, as compared with an increase of only 3 per cent during the same decade in the general population. The number of persons in this country over 65 years of age increased from 6,633,805 in 1930 to 8,945,206 in 1940, an increase of 2,322,401 in ten years. In 1930, 5.7 per cent of white people were 65 and over; in 1940, 7.0 per cent. Both the number and proportion of aged are increasing rapidly.

In middle age, the average child of today will have twice as many aged relatives as his parents and three times as many as his grandparents had.

Other reasons for the increase in the proportion of the aged include: declining birth-rate, decrease in infant mortality, reduced immigration of the young, reduced mortality during productive years, lowering of production age, and lengthening of life by control of diseases by prevention, medicine, and surgery.

Owing to the efficiency of the medical profession, the number and proportion of aged people will continue to grow. The strength of the movements for old age pensions is an evidence of present achievements. The skill of the doctors has mutliplied the number of people who confront the problems of old age, just when apartments and houses are being built without guest-rooms.

The residents in our homes for aged are happy, cheerful and content. In these homes, they have opportunity for Christian fellowship with an interest in others of their own age.

Our people are quickly growing older, both collectively and individually, and we can not escape the obligations imposed by the ever-increasing proportions of the elderly in our populations.

The fact that many of our churches are planning homes for the aged is evidence that the church as such is conscious of its growing responsibility in this regard, and those who are active in the promotion of these projects should be given every encouragement that we might all fulfill our God-given responsibility to our aged to whom we owe so much.

It is an interesting and encouraging observation that the residents in our homes for aged are happy, cheerful, and content. In these homes, they have opportunity for Christian fellowship with and interest in others of their own age. They do not sit idly by but demonstrate an active interest in all that goes on. Their varied experiences, their mature thinking, and their seasoned judgments can be most valuable.

"Come, grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be—
The last of life for which the first was made!
Our times are in His hands
Who saith, 'A whole I planned.'
See all, trust God, nor be afraid."

Letter from the P. J. Boehrs

(The following is a letter written by Rev. and Mrs. P. J. Boehr March 17 from the new mission in Paoki, Shensi, China.)

Dear Friends in the Home Churches,

Greetings in the Name of our Living Lord, and from troubled China!

It is now a little over three and a half months that we are in this new field, which we call the Shensi-Kanus field; and what a joy it was to have our first coworkers from the homeland to come to us on February 6 of this year, Miss Fast and the Lester Wuthrichs. Before and since they arrived we have been living in "One-Room" apartments, where we eat, sleep, cook, study and receive guests. And now we have five C. I. M. missionary guests with us, and "eat and sleep" them in the quarters we have,—the Wuthrichs with one room like ours, and Miss Fast with a smaller room, all in the Pentecostal Bible School, not far from and on the same street as the Jen Ho Hospital, where we were guests for the first two months of our stay here. Since the coworkers coming we all eat together, and we've also begun with regular Sunday morning services with our own small group. Beginning with the New Year we began with regular "open-air" services at various places in this city. We are now also going to a Home for the Needy, or Poor, and find that the Gospel preaching finds response in the hearts of those poor boys and girls, and the old and the blind. One blind man there is a strong testimony for the Gospel among the poor with whom he must live. He teaches Bible verses to a group, and also helps other blind people to learn to read the the Braille Scriptures.

We have begun with building operations on two four-roomed houses, intended for Chinese workers, for the residence of missionaries for the present. A well also has been in the "digging," but at eighty feet the well-diggers have not yet found water. At first we had planned, together with our lately returned coworkers, to erect three missionary dwelling here in this city on the one-and-a-half acre plot bought early this year. We have lately decided to erect only one for the present. We had hoped that when we would come to a new field, we could rent quarters for dwelling and for a chapel. It hardly had entered into our thinking to go into an extensive building program, and we were praying and working to the end that we might get fairly suitable rental property; but that became increasingly impossible as our two Chinese brethren Wang and Ts'ao went around in search for quarters day in and day out for weeks. Not only was the renting of property seemingly impossible, but we tried and tried to purchase, and also that was a real problem. But the Lord had a Christian Chinese friend for us in Mr. Mu (called Moo), who had gotten a first touch with us through hearing us preach in the independent church near which we lived as guests in the hospital. Since then this brother has not only been instrumental in helping us to procure the building lots we have purchased, but he and his friendly Christian wife feel themselves drawn to our Gospel fellowship. Mr. Mu is a construction engineer and surveyor, and gives much of his time to planning the laying out of the plot and the drawing of the house-sketches.

We have had about ten days of rainy weather, and have had snow also the last days, but the sun tries to break through this afternoon. Such weather has been a real test for our forty thousand large mudbricks, which are for our building work; in fact most of the house building will be of earth, but we hope to have wooden floors in the missionary dwellings, and of course doors and windows of wood. In this area there is plenty of building lumber, which we buy in logs and planks ready cut in the nearby mountains.

Prices of goods of all kinds continue to rise, and the United States dollar, we hear, has brought as much as more than $400,000 Chinese dollars on the Shanghai market. Even with such a high dollar exchange we cannot catch up with commodity prices. But there is no scarcity of goods or foodstuffs, except metals, so that we can hardly buy a Chinese made stove, and galvanized buckets are unobtainable. The region here is very different from our Hopei field, for we have no dust storms, which are so plentiful in Hopei and Honan provinces.

Because of Communist advances in northeast China and pressure by them in the northern part of this province and in west Honan, and disturbing rumors even here, we need much prayer that we may have wisdom in meeting any situation. We are a considerable distance from the troubles for the present, but the overall picture is not very encouraging.

Colleges and Seminary

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

On the tenth the students of the Mennonite Brethren College gave a return program in our College. Special numbers were brought by the ladies trio and radio ensemble. As a part of their program they presented a skit depicting the relief work of the M.C.C. in Europe and the tremendous challenge that our Mennonite people have in this common endeavor. After the program all students were invited to the basement for refreshments and some games. A very warm spirit of fellowship was experienced by all.

Rev. Herman Epp, a recent Canadian immigrant formerly from Danzig, and for three years a refugee in Denmark, was a guest speaker in our chapel Wednesday. He gave a very interesting report on conditions in Europe and told of his personal experiences as a refugee fleeing from his home.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Senior class play, Karel Capek's "R.U.R.", has been scheduled for May 7, at 8 P. M. in Memorial Hall. Erna Schmidt and Orville Voth have been chosen to play the leading roles in this sociological drama which deals with the problem of man's destiny in a mechanistic and greedy civilization. Mildred Claassen has been elected president of the Beta Kappas for the next year. As a special project the organization recently installed a water cooler in the Memorial Hall basement. The new president of the International Relations Club is Stanley Voth, and Harold Schmidt has been chosen to head the Future Teachers Association. The prize for the best ten-minute skit among the eight presented at this year's Farcity Review was awarded for the second consecutive year to the "Campus Kids." Helga Kemnitzer, a German student of Mennonite background from the Frankfort area, arrived on the campus recently to enroll at Bethel.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Tuesday was Campus Clean-Up Day. This is an annual event. Students and teachers came dressed for the occasion. Everyone met in chapel. After a period of devotions all went to the assigned work. Both the planning and cooperation were fine, so a lot was accomplished. Among the projects carried on were some of the following: siding barracks, constructing a sidewalk to the barracks, making cinder paths around the gym, trimming trees and digging around them, raking leaves, cleaning cisterns, hauling away ashes, leaves, etc., Various small paint jobs, taking inventory of library books, cleaning the museum and various other projects. Everyone worked until 2:30 when the Foods Class served a delicious meal to a tired and very hungry group.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Women's Gospel Team gave programs at the Dalton and Sugarcreek, Ohio, churches Sunday, April 18. On the evening of the eighteenth the Men's Gospel Team had charge of the service at the Ebenezer Mennonite Church near Bluffton. Several faculty members attended the Middle District Conference at Wayland, Iowa, April 22-25. President Fox, of Findlay College, spoke in the chapel service April 15. Burton Yost, ministerial student of Lansdale, Pennsylvania, has been elected president of the Men's Gospel Team for next year. This past year he has been head of the YMCA. The relief committee of the college sponsored a collection of shoes recently. Students led a discussion of Conscription in the light of Christian teaching and a positive program of voluntary service at the First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Sunday evening, April 11. The choir gave a concert in the St. John church Sunday evening, April 11.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The major emphasis in chapel this week was evangelism. Dean William Beahm referred to a week of evangelistic meetings which he conducted at the Brethren church of Greensburg, Pennsylvania. During this week forty-six people accepted Christ. He explained that back of this remarkable record was an outstanding pastoral evangelist. This man was a moving preacher, a very energetic visitor who averaged about thirty calls a day, a great man of prayer, and in general a very effective Christian worker. Therefore one of the keys for effective evangelistic meetings is pastoral preparation.

Another moving address on this subject was by Dr. Jesse Bader of New York City. He showed how many of the larger denominations of the country are making great strides in terms of lay visitation evangelism where workers go out two by two.

In an address concerning the service program of the Church of the Brethren, W. Harold Row referred to various German pastors who spoke to him recently indicating how their whole conception of the gospel has been broadened by coming into the contact with the ministry of love as carried on by the Peace Church Service Committee.

President S. F. Pannabecker will represent the Seminary at the Middle District Conference in Wayland, Iowa, April 22-25. He will go from there to Newton, Kansas, to attend the Inter-School Committee of the General Conference Board of Education.

The rising tide of concern against selective service and military training here was expressed by the selection of Arnold Nickel of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, to represent the school in the campaign being conducted by the Young People's Union of the General Conference. Arnold Nickel will go to Washington next week to speak directly to representatives and senators there concerning the witness of the Mennonite students and young people of America.

Dr. Floyd Filson of McCormick Theological Seminary will present his lectures on "The Theology of the Resurrection" April 26 to April 30. On April 30 Muriel Lester will conduct a school of prayer here at Woodlawn headquarters. Regretfully the Seminary has had to announce that Dr. G. H. C. Mcgregor has had to cancel his engagement with the Seminary.

FOUR ASHRAMS THIS YEAR

The places and dates for the four 1948 Ashrams are as follows: Bynden Wood Camp, Wernersville, Pennsylvania, July 6-16; Geneva Point Camp, Lake Winnipesaukee, New Hampshire, July 19-29; Bible Institute Grounds, Green Lake, Wisconsin, August 2-12; Camp Sierra, 55 miles east of Fresno, California, August 16-26.

An exceptionally strong faculty will instruct, challenge and inspire those in attendance this year. One of the leaders will be Dr. E. Stanley Jones, who will return from India to participate in all four Ashrams.

M.C.C. News Notes

Refugee Group Awaits Sailing Date

The Mennonite refugees who are to be included in the group going to Paraguay aboard the "Prince David", had until recently been scattered in temporary homes and on farms in the British Zone of Germany. About April 1 they were gathered in Gronau, the MCC refugee camp in the British Zone, to be processed for migration to Paraguay. In a few days their necessary papers were completed, baggage was packed for travel and they were about to board a special train to go from Gronau to Bremerhaven for embarkation.

Their departure had to be delayed, however, because the ship, in coming to the harbor, burst a water jacket, and therefore had to be repaired. The sailing of the ship was thus postponed until after April 15. In the meantime his group of 740 refugees is being housed in a school building in Gronau.

Legislation on Admission of Displaced Persons

The Senate plans to discuss within the next two weeks the Wiley Bill, which provides for the admission to the United States of 50,000 displaced persons annually. A bipartisan group concerned with this problem has proposed amendments to increase the number admitted to 100,000 and to remove some of the restrictions as to occupational, geographic, and other preferences.

Relief Director From Europe Visits Akron

On April 9 Dr. Eugene Gerstenmaier, Director of Evangelisches Hilfswerk, made a short visit at the Akron MCC headquarters. He expressed very deep appreciation for the relief that has been given to the people of Germany by the Mennonites of the United States and Canada. He emphasized that relief from a Christian group means more than merely food and clothing—a witness of faith in God and love to suffering fellowmen. When asked whether the present relief program is giving an evangelical witness, he stated that an effective witness is definitely being given, for a gift "In the Name of Christ" is a more powerful testimony to people who are hungry and cold than a sermon.

Evangelisches Hilfswerk, which was established through the efforts of Dr. Gerstenmaier, is a Protestant organization in Germany which is active in the distribution of material aid which relief agencies send to Germany.

The MCC assists this organization by supplying certain amounts of food and clothing for their distribution. The MCC also has its own direct relief distribution work in the British and French zones of Germany, and works through Christenpflicht, the German Mennonite agency in the American Zone.

Apple Butter for Relief

A unique contribution to the relief program was made recently by the Mennonites in the Columbiana-Salem-Orrville area of Ohio. The J. N. Smucker company offered to make apple butter for relief at cost if local churches would furnish the apples and pay for the actual cost of processing. Under this arrangement 233,290 pounds of apples were contributed, from which 27,366 No. 10 cans or 205,245 pounds of apple butter was made. The cost of the processing amounted to $10,421.92. all of which is being paid by contributions from the churches of this area.

This shipment of apple butter for relief was to have left port on April 13. The shipment was divided into two portions: 136,800 pounds was sent to MCC relief projects in the British Zone of Germany, and 68,445 pounds was sent to the MCC relief projects in the French Zone.

Appear before House Armed Services Committee

The MCC Peace Section again has opportunity to express to government officials the position of Mennonites regarding military training. The House Armed Services Committee has opened hearings on this question, and the Mennonite delegation is scheduled to appear on April 17. It is planned that in this testimony there will be a restatement of our readiness to do constructive service for peace in lieu of military training and service.

Headquarters Needs Workers

Most workers who come to the Akron Office give one or two years of service. Therefore, replacements are needed periodically. At present there is a serious shortage in the Business Office. Bookkeepers and accountants are needed immediately. We trust also that there will be others making themselves available as secretaries, housekeeping assistants, and clerical workers. For more information write Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Authorship Unknown

Many a great hymn which we have learned to love has had to have above it a tragic phrase, "Authorship unknown," which, like the expression during the first world War. "Spurloss verzenkt," marked the end of inquiry when a ship was lost at sea.

Take, for example, that great Mennonite chorale, "Grosser Gott wir loben Dich." In previous editions of hymnbooks this song has come down, edition after edition, under the heading, "Authorship unknown."

But now, it appears that, "Thy best, thy heavenly friend, through thorny ways leads to a joyful end."

Recently, in picking up a Dutch hymn book, Lester Hostetler, author of the new HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY, paging through the leaves of that book, suddenly saw that tune, "Grosser Gott wir loben Dich."

He almost jumped out of his chair. Could it be that here was the very same melody used in the MENNONITE HYMNARY, showing the composer as Ignaz Franz?

This opened up an entirely new trail. Checking the name, Ignaz Franz, through other musical sourcebooks, he was able to establish without question the fact that Ignaz Franz was the one who was responsible for the popular German metrical version of the Te Deum which we know as "Grosser Gott wir loben Dich" and which has come down to us from the third or fourth centuries.

Incidentally, there is an interesting story in connection with the Te Deum ("Song of Praise") Tradition has it that when Ambrose was baptized by St. Augustine, Ambrose and St. Augustine antiphonally sang the various phrases to each other during the process. Of course, this is only tradition, but it is a beautful tradition, and it might have been true.

Our point, of course, is this. If you love these songs in the MENNONITE HYMNARY, you will not want to be without your copy—your individual copy—of the HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY, which is to appear early this summer. The stories back of some of these songs are stranger than fiction—and yet they are true. We assure you, you will sing with understanding, once you read these wonderful stories.

—To win and train 100 children for the cause of Christ is the new goal of our Colombian missionaries in South America. At the present twenty-five children are under the care of our missionaries.

LARGE GATHERING OF C.P.S. MEN

by Austin Regier

On Sunday, April 18, approximately four hundred men, together with their families and friends, met in Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas. In some respects these men had very little in common. But they did have in common a philosophy which was not too popular during the war—all had refused to kill when their government had told them that it was necessary to do so.

These men of Civilian Public Service were from Brethren, Friends and Mennonite units. These meetings served as a reunion in which many men visited with others whom they hadn't seen since the times they dug ditches for Uncle Sam. This reunion brought back many memories of forest fires, dams, privies, hospitals, sugar beets, and Colonel Kosch.

Speakers at the meetings included Don. Smucker, Harold Wilke (Chaplain at Winters General Hospital, Topeka), Paul Goering, J. H. Elrod, Albert Gaeddert, and others. Subjects discussed included mental health, legislation being considered in Washington, and the witness of the pacifist at the present time. Group leaders organized so that future efforts of pacifists in this area might be better integrated than has been possible heretofore.

W. C. VOTH AND ELISABETH GOERTZ ARRIVE SAFELY

Word has been received that Elisabeth D. Goertz and Wm. C. Voth arrived in Shanghai, China after eighteen days of smooth sailing with mild weather. Rev. Brown met them at ship's landing. He had arranged for quarters at the Assembly of God Missionary Home. With train service re-established recently, the Brethren Brown and Voth made a trip, April 8-9, by train to Kaifeng to help in the re-organizing of the church work among refugees at Kaifeng of the General Conference Mission in South Hopei. They expected to stay about a week.

After their return to Shanghai the plan is to load the Mission Dodge truck and travel by Yangtze River steamer to Chungching and from there drive by truck to the new field in Shensi and Kansu. The prayers of mission friends are solicited for this venture of faith.

NORTHERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE, JUNE 5-9

The Northern District Conference will meet in the Bethel Church, Wolf Point, Montana, June 5-9. The pastor of the host church is Rev. B. J. Nickel. The main theme of the conference is, "The Moral Attributes of God." The main scriptural text is found in Isaiah 6:1-8. Wednesday, June 9, is designated as Young People's Day, and a communion service will be observed by both old and young in the morning.—Hugo J. Mierau, in behalf of the Business Committee.

SEEKS RELATIVES BY NAME OF DETTWEILER

Karl Dettweiler, Am Haeusel 211, Pirmasens/Palatinat, French Zone, Germany, wants to know about relatives in America. The grandfather of the writer's father was known as Peter Dettweiler, and was born in Mittelbach on March 1, 1856. He later moved to Zweibruecken, where he served as a pharmacist. He was there known as "Amme-Peter." Two of his brothers came to America, but it seems that they have heard nothing of them since they came to the States. Anyone who can give information to Karl Dettweiler, may write to him at the address given above.

LESTER HOSTETLER JOINS PEACE MISSION

Rev. Lester Hostetler left Newton on April 20 for Chicago, where he was to join the World Brotherhood Peace Mission stopping off in that city en route to Washington, D. C. The Peace Mission is a group of volunteer church people from all parts of the country who wish to present their concerns to congressmen and officials in the nation's capital and representatives in the United Nations. The first group was to gather in California and proceed by train to Chicago, where they will be met by missioners from the Midwest. They will remain in Chicago several days for further clarification of plans and purposes. From Chicago they will go to New York and Philadelphia. The Peace Mission idea was suggested at a Church of the Brethren conference in California. Represntatives from Wichita and McPherson are among those from this area who planned to join. Rev. Hostetler expects to be gone for several weeks.—Richard Blosser, Bethel College Church, Corr.

Jottings

Rev. J. P. Glanzer, writes from Dinuba, California, that they are spending several weeks in Dinuba where they have three married children. The Glanzers have sold all of their household belongings and plan to move to Madrid, Nebraska, where they have accepted a call from the First Mennonite Church. They hope to get to Madrid by April 25.

—Mount Olivet Church, Huron, South Dakota: Students of Grace Bible Institute assisted in our Holy Week Services. Rev. Isaac Duerksen also took part. The Fairfield Church participated with special music. A Youth for Christ rally was held on April 3, with Rev. Fred Julius, of Minneapolis, as the speaker. The Wessington Spring College A Cappella Choir gave the special music.—Anna E. Hofer, Corr.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania: The young people are considering a visit to the Home for Epileptics at Skillman Village, New Jersey. Dr. Melvin Gingerich recently spoke on the topic, "The Christian Community." Rev. Ellis Graber, pastor, recently spoke to the Kiawanis Club on "World Peace through International Understanding and Cooperation." A religious film, "The Heart of India," was shown on a recent Sunday evening. It is a sound film in color.

—Saron Church, Orienta, Oklahoma: With the help of the South Mennonite Brethren Church, North Mennonite Brethren Church, Church of God in Christ Mennonite, our church recently canned 3,652 cans of beef for relief. Our pastor, Rev. H. P. Fast, recently spent three weeks at the Indian mission stations in Arizona. He was invited by the Missionaries to conduct a series of meetings. He is planning to give a report with slides of the work there in different churches. The mixed chorus of the O. B. Academy rendered an Easter cantata on Good Friday in the city auditorium at Fairview, Oklahoma.—Corr. E. Voth —Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: The building committee has been very busy with the plans for our church building. They have engaged Mr. Glenn H. Thomas of Wichita as the architect. He is drawing the blueprint and as soon as the needed materials are available, work will begin. The church will be built of light brick veneer and it will be a L-shaped building. The committee has engaged Mr. W. P. Wiens of Newton as the contractor.—Mrs. Wilbur Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: Our church cooperated with the Methodist and Christian churches of this town in a series of Union Easter services. A group of men got together on April 6 and 7 with their tractors and trucks and hauled around 30 loads of dirt to the grounds of the new parsonage and leveled it; then they planted grass. The Ladies' Aid are planning another clothing drive for Relief. The young people of the church have purchased a slide projector, and a kind member of the church gave a screen to the young people's organization, thus many things may be enjoyed with the eye, instead of only the ear. At Easter it made the suffering and resurrection more realistic and emphatic.—Corr.

—Deep Run, Pa., Church: Brother Abram M. Wiebe of Lancaster, Pa., gave a series of four messages during Passion Week. The Young People's Chorus accompanied Rev. Herbert Fretz to Skillman, New Jersey, where they sang hymns for the patients and M.C.C Unit at the State Village for Epileptics. Last Sunday morning our new Allen electronic organ was dedicated in memory of Allen M. Fretz, and in the evening Amos Heacock, Philadelphia organist, gave a concert to filled houses. Two more quilts were quilted by our ladies of the Women Missionary Society at an April 21. Secretary Forrestal wants to draft men but doubts whether industry should be drafted.

When a member of the House Armed Services Committee urged government control of industry for defense production Forrestal warned that we might force upon ourselves the evil which we are supposed to be fighting. The congressman asked why he argued for regimentation of manpower (Selective Service and UMT) but against industrial mobilization. Forrestal said that he was in business before becoming Secretary of Defense and "knows the attitude of industry well."

The Administration hopes that the heavy demands of rearmament and the European Cooperation Administration will hold up the economy and postpone the depression at least until after the elections. Republican leaders, while complaining that the Administration's policy has led to the present breakdown in international relations (although they were partners in the bipartisan foreign policy), now feel compelled to go along with the military demands for bigger air power and Selective Service instead of leading the people away from the suicidal arms race.

The church choir joined with the choir of the Christian Church, Newton, for renditions of "The Holy City" on April 11 and 18, David H. Suderman directing. Plans are being made for the Vacation Church School held annually in June.—Richard Blosser, Corr.

—Salem Zion Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Brother Erwin Schrag left the States on April 18 for the mission field of India. Miss Anna Quiring, missionary to Africa, will speak and show slides on April 20, The Young Men's Choir of the Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas, rendered a musical program for us on April 18. The Mennonites of Sioux Falls, South Dakota will meet for worship, in the Union Gospel Mission of that city, for the first time on April 25. The Evangelization Committee of the Northern District Conference has provided this place of worship for them and also is in charge of these services. It is hoped that this small group will soon grown into a strong congregation.

Book Notes

THE FINE ART OF LIVING TOGETHER by A. W. Beaven, Harpers.

This is a book on marriage for young people and some not so young. Unlike other books on marriage it deals with religious values and motives in producing satisfactory home relationships.

"Some homes have small chance for happiness when they begin, because of the wrong foundation laid in the ideals of the two people even before they thought seriously of love."

With this beginning Dr. Beaven speaks of those things which are important before the wedding. He mentions the importance of early friendships. He points out that true love is the real key, that courtship is serious. He makes suggestions on what it takes to qualify as a good husband or as a wife. This section alone is worth the price of the book.

In the second part of the book "The wedding day and after," he treats various aspects of married life; what if there is a difference of opinion, shall they argue? Shall little courtesies be observed? What shall be done with faults discovered after marriage? What shall be done with the "in-laws"? How shall money be handled? Can love die?

This is a delightful book to be read by youth and old age.—D. C. Wedel

Another Step Forward

by Harold Ratzlaff

Five years ago when we took over the evangelistic work in Champa, it was Kripadan, the head evangelist of the area, who escorted me on my first tour of the Champa district. It was he who introduced me to the Christians, the villages, to the roads, and to many of the problems. Side by side we cycled along on the first of many such trips we took together. Kripadan was ordained as an elder not long afterward, and so throughout our three years in Champa, he remained my righthand man.

Recently, a couple days after Christmas, Kripadan and I were out on our cycles together once again. But this time it was I who was escorting him on his first tour of the Eden District Church. At the request of the Elders Committee, Kripadan had come down here to the Jagdeeshpur area to become the first Indian pastor of this church. For two years I had been the pastor of this district church, but because of many other duties, the pastoral work had often been neglected. Now I was turning over these duties to my fellow elder, Pastor Kripadan. It was with thankfulness to God that I could do this, for it was another step forward in the growth of the Church in India. Pray for Pastor Kripadan as he takes over his first pastorate. He will have difficulties, we know, for the people of this area do not have the same background that he does, and yet we feel with God's help he is capable of doing much in the work of the Master here.

Day of Prayer on Hopi Field

by Leonard Wiebe

Every month, if possible, the missionaries to the Hopis come together with Hopi Christians for a day of prayer. These missionaries and Hopis are not the Mennonites only but also the Baptists. The Baptists have three stations like the Mennonites do. The distance from the farthest Baptist mission to Moencopi is approximately eighty miles over a dirt, sand, gumbo, washboard road.

We usually gather about 10 A.M., with an address in the morning and also one in the afternoon. Sometimes both addresses are in English and the gist given in Hopi, or one message English and the other in Hopi, being interpreted into English. There are usually two prayer periods, one before noon and the other at the close of the afternoon address. Each station is given an opportunity to mention their prayer requests and then we pray for each particular need. We always receive a great blessing from these prayer days.

The lunch at noon is potluck, and there is always a fine time of fellowship.

Prayer day is usually the first Monday of the month, but since Rev. Nyce would be visiting the field on the second Monday, February 9, we postponed it for that day. Karl Johnson, a Hopi Christian from Oraibi, spoke in the forenoon on the words from Hebrews 4:16, "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace." In the afternoon Rev. Nyce used the passage in Ephesians 3:20, "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

We were very glad that Rev. Nyce could visit the field and that we could discuss our problems with him.

We request our mission friends to remember us in prayer March 9-25 when Rev. H. P. Fast of Orienta, Oklahoma, will conduct a series of meetings at the three stations. Pray that Christians may be strengthened and sinners converted.

GERMAN VETERAN SHOWS HIGH REGARD FOR MENNONITES

A German veteran, by the name of Otto Weis, has opened correspondence with Rev. Walter H. Dyck, Executive-Secretary of the General Conference. Here is an excerpt from a letter by Weis:

" . . . it is the Christians of the whole world who remind themselves first of all that we are all 'brethren.' They clasp hands across the seas. They help to relieve suffering and clothe the naked. Based upon the deeds of this little flock of true Christians, many a one takes new courage and trusts in God, rouses himself out of his lethargy and tries to build his house anew . . . .Out of darkness and confusion a ray of hope comes to us. Representatives of the Mennonites come to us, right where we are, to see how and where to help. They are a little flock of true Christians, who neither know hypocrisy nor Pharisaism, who still believe that Christianity is not obsolete."

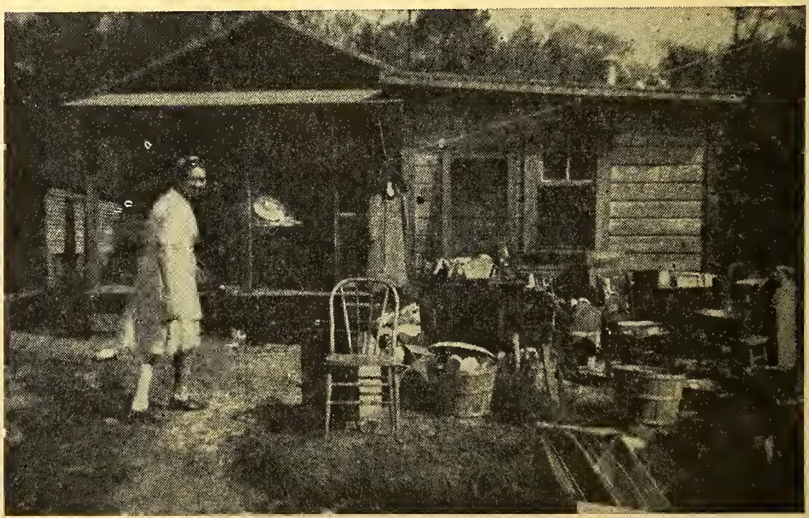
Experiences in Voluntary Service

Quietly seating ourselves on the front benches of the church, joining in congregational hymns, silently listening to the words of the minister, bowing in prayer—these are not the total fulfillment of the Christian's obligations. Such privileges only increase our responsibility: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

"But what can we do?" dozens of young people reply. "I haven't been trained for Christian service." "Not everyone can be a foreign missionary." "I'm busy studying for my life work." "My parents need me on the farm most of the year." These instantaneous responses which at first appear to be handicaps or excuses really helped motivate the Voluntary Service Program.

Voluntary service provides a channel of service for young people who are free to devote only a short period of time to service outside their home community. This article deals only with the M. C. C. service projects. Some of the Mennonite groups individually and the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ groups together are providing channels for various types of service. These are not substitutes for mission work, but aspects of it, or supplementary to it. Through the talents of young people who volunteer, M. C. C. Voluntary Service attempts to meet vital unmet human needs and to bring relief to areas of need, tension, and confusion. Serving our fellow men in the name of Christ is the major purpose of voluntary service, with the ultimate aim of all such service as the spiritual enrichment of those who are served.

A group of young summer Bible school students



Aiding a destitute family in the South

It is also an experience of interneship in Christian service. This interneship is a gateway to a life of greater usefulness in the home community, a chosen vocation, or in service for the church. Having compassion on humanity—witnessing urgent want and ignorance—awakens within a compelling consciousness of man's dire spiritual need. This contact with the world's suffering and darkness will cause many to be constrained by the love of Christ to commit their whole life to the ministry or to the mission field.

Voluntary service is also planned for those who will find their place of service in the home, in the factory, or in the schoolroom. Those of us engaged in these usual tasks are tempted to think that only full-time church work demands total consecration. Consecrated Christian living embraces more than that. Even Christ spent most of His life in a carpenter shop. Sometimes it is more difficult to represent Christ while doing menial or monotonous tasks than it is when we are telling others of Him by word of mouth. But it is no less important. To always exemplify patience and cheerfulness, to be truly honest, to be humble, to think first of your fellow laborer, to love him as yourself; these are the standards Christ has set for our daily lives! Do we live them? Do we even try or want to live them? Voluntary service is a challenge to make Christ known while serving on a regular job, perhaps doing a servile or unpleasant task; to live a life of Chirstlike love morning, noon, night, and in between.

Units Last Summer

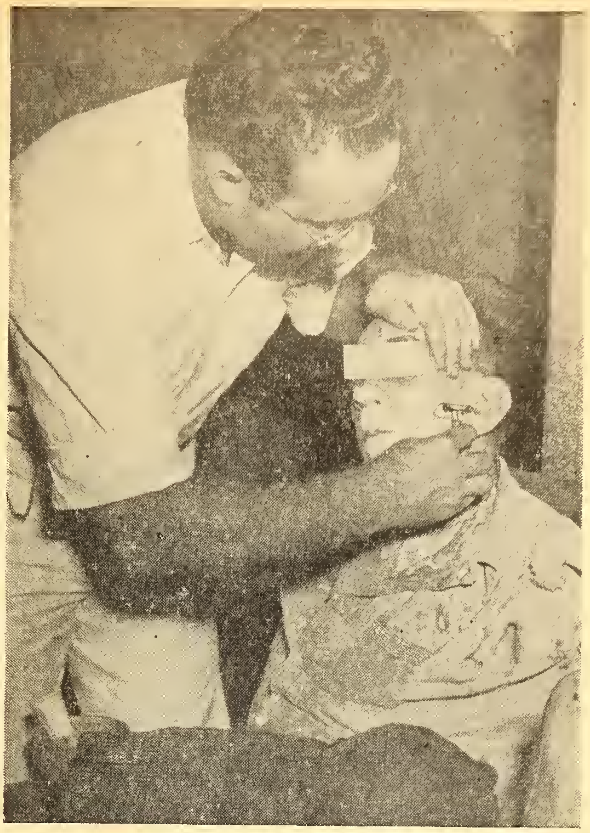
Last summer six units were sponsored by the M. C. C. with ninty-two members participating in them. These young people came from five of the church groups represented in the M. C. C. In addition there were six unit members from other denominations. Five countries, seventeen states, and three provinces were represented. The average age was considerably higher than last year, with ages ranging from eighteen to forty-four.

Two units were located in mental hospitals, one in a village for epileptics, another at the M. C. C. Headquarters, one in the South, and one in Mexico.

The first visit to the Wards of the Colorado State Hospital was a new experience for most of the twenty enthusiastic volunteers who arrived at Pueblo in June. They found attitudes of fear, doubt, and suspicion toward the patients giving way to feelings of love, kindness, and understanding as they began to work with them day after day. As recreational therapists, the unit members centered their efforts on making patients happier and their lives more meaningful and pleasant. With the patients they played croquet, ball games, catch, went for walks, played dominoes, admired the handwork of patients, and lent a helping hand of suggestion wherever possible. These manifestations of love "to the least of these" brought expressions of gratitude and appreciation from the patients as unit members prepared to leave. Pueblo's scenic surroundings were enjoyed on days off. Pikes Peak, the Garden of the Gods, Cave of the Winds, and other of nature's crowning beauties were close at hand. Coming home from one of these excursions the unit enjoyed a most inspiring worship period as they spontaneously began to sing praises to the God of this glorious creation.

Why Was I Born Black?

"Why did I have to be born black? a colored child n Gulfport asked his summer Bible school teacher. Many equally challenging situations faced our Gulfport unit as they were brought face to face with the actual intensity of race prejudice in the South. They witnessed hate, poverty and need, ignorance, disease, filth. With prayerfulness and humility they approached the thrilling and sobering responsibility of teaching those who knew not of Him about Christ in both colored and white Bible schools. On crudely equipped playgrounds they enthusiastically played games with colored boys and girls. Homes were visited, and houses cleaned, sanitary privies were built, sewing classes taught, and a Sunday school conducted. Proof of the community's welcome and gratitude was evidenced when, following one Bible school program, the colored mothers served cake and ice cream to surprised white teachers while a whole audience looked hungrily and happily on.



Shaving a man in a mental hospital

Cleveland Mental Hospital

In Cleveland, Ohio, sixteen girls and four fellows worked as regular attendants on various wards of the state mental hospital. Cleveland members won my admiration—especially those spending the summer on Pellow, the most untidy ward in the hospital. Theirs was not a martyr complex nor an air of enduring. They learned to love their patients; a love which manifested itself in a warm concern for the patient, a love unbiased by personal likes or dislikes; free from sentimentalism or emotionalism. They loved the patients. not because they always had lovable qualities, but because they represented a soul and spirit that are

(Testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee)

"The policy which the Administration has proposed is being recommended today for one major purpose — to prevent war . . . . Nearly all wars have been preceded by precisely some act intended to be a preventive show of force. Such an act may also accelerate the coming of war. Even if it should seem temporarily to work in the sense in which an angry man is temporarily cowed rather than persuaded, the trouble is likely to break out again, perhaps in more devious ways, and to store up worse dangers for the future."

priceless in God's eyes. As regular attendants the members mopped and scrubbed, bathed, dressed and fed their charges, combed and trimmed nails. The cheery "Good Morning!," words of comfort or assurance or just pausing to listen to the most recent joy or sorrow of a patient was often rewarded by love and gratitude from these hungry hearts.

Skillman Village for Epileptics

Patients at Skillman ranged in ages from five to ninety; men, women, and children; colored and white, who have one thing in common—all have a type of epilepsy. Many epileptics live relatively normal lives in society. It is the mentally ill, the feeble-minded, and those who have for some reason failed to adjust themselves to normal living that need hospital care. Since the beginning of the war the labor situation at Skillman has been acute. The need, the favorable and considerate attitude of the administration, and the summer unit's ringing testimony of blessings experienced while serving in this area of need, led us to open a year-round unit at Skillman State Village for Epileptics this fall. Members will serve as regular attendants in the cottages, and may serve any season of the year. The minimum period of service is ten weeks. This unit is intended primarily to accommodate those young people who are busy during the summer but like to serve another part of the year.

Akron, Pa.

Six girls reinforced the ranks of the regular Akron staff this summer. Two of the workers on part of their time conducted a very successful playground and craft department for the Akron children. The unit became an integral part of the M.C.C. family here at Akron. The girls testified to spiritual revitalization through the Christian fellowship they met and enjoyed. It was also a means for their becoming acquainted with the work of the Mennonite Central Committee at home and abroad.

Mexico

This summer, Voluntary Service reached out to begin service in one of Mexico's needy areas. In Chihuahua unit members served in a general hospital, taught English classes, and tended a nursery. Throughout the coming year the work will be continued in Mexico. Our immediate concern is to help the Mexicans and Old Colony Mennonites in Cuauhtemoc meet their health needs.

The Santos Girls from Puerto Rico

[The two Santos girls are studying at Bethel College preparatory to serving their people. They are two of the four young people sponsored by the Missionary Education Fund of the Young People's Union.]

I was born at Comerio, a small town in the heart of Puerto Rico. This happened on December 25, 1927, in a humble house where the family was giving thanks unto the Lord for the creature that was born.

I received my early education at Comerio, where I spent eleven years of my life. From there we moved to El Salto where my family had a small farm. Being away from school my parents decided to move to La Plata, so that my two brothers and I could go to the Second Unit (name given to school). In La Plata I got my diploma from Junior High School. I continued my education in the High School of Aibonito which is a town about five miles from the valley of La Plata. Every morning at six o'clock I had to walk three kilometers to get to the highway where I could get the bus. This kind of transportation was slow but inexpensive.

My senior year was not as hard as the last two. By that time there was a "guaguita" that used to take us every morning. This made a change in our life, making it more pleasant.

Classes were held in the morning from 7:30 to 12:30. In the afternoon I worked in a dentist's office. The work did not bother me in my studies, for I enjoyed it.

My plans are not very definite. I am taking a Home Economics major and I am planning to go into dietetics. But all this depends upon God's help, for He shall prepare my way.

—Fransisca Santos

I come from a small town in the heart of the island of Puerto Rico. I came to the States with the purpose of studying Home Economics. I am also interested in Bible study. I want to go back home and teach if I possibly can. I am planning to teach in a Baptist Academy when I get through college. I am interested in teaching there because they also teach Bible, and I want to teach it. I think this is a very good opportunity of helping people, as there are so many students in Puerto Rico who want to learn and go to school.

Beatitudes of the Married Life

by Glenn Clark

Marriage is but a symbol of that far vaster unity of the souls of all mankind which can never be experienced in its perfection save in heaven. Finding no other way of showing to man what heaven was like, God invented marriage.

To bring the spirit of heaven into the home and to keep it there is to carry out one of the most precious purposes of our Father who is in heaven. Moses gave ten commandments to help people avoid going to hell. I shall here give ten beatitudes showing how married people can enter into heaven.

I. BLESSED are those married ones who strive, first of all, to make their helpmates happy rather than to make them good. To make ourselves good is indeed one of the first laws of heaven, but to make others happy is actually to bring heaven with all its glory and all its goodness, right down here among us here and now.

II. BLESSED are those married ones who love their helpmates not in spite of their frailties and idiosyncrasies but actually because of them. "For every one is a little queer in this world except thee and me, and sometimes thee is just a little queer."

III. BLESSED are those married ones who are not lulled into self-complacency and self-conceit because of the other's toleration of their frailties, but who work steadily to eradicate the faults and weaknesses while their weaknesses are still little lest they might some day grow into large burdock bushes and go to seed.

IV. BLESSED are the married ones who don't think it is always necessary to argue a thing through to a final conclusion but who know when to drop argument and trust to love and prayer. Discussions are beautiful in a home only so long as they are conducted with LIGHT and not with HEAT. Coal, oil, gas and sunshine can furnish all the heat needed to warm any home. The little tongue has set many homes on fire when it was used as a lighted torch and not as an incandescent light bulb.

V. BLESSED are the married ones who never get mad at the same time. Verily, verily upon this commandment hangeth all the law and the prophets. When your partner elects to fume and spout, reserve your fuming and spouting till a later date. Two geysers going at the same time may make a nice Yellowstone Park but they make a wretched home.

VI. BLESSED are the married ones who never get blue at the same time. Every woman has a right to be temperamental once in a while. Every man may be excused for being temperamental once in a while, provided he selects a time which his wife has not selected before him. Reservations for this luxury should always be made in advance.

VII. BLESSED are the married ones who remember they are different halves of the same whole, and not the same halves of different wholes. "Better be a nettel in the side of your friend than his echo," said Emerson. Let your helpmate adventure into new philosophies or creeds occasionally where you do not care to follow him in the hope that he may bring back flowers to garnish your table.

VIII. BLESSED are the married ones who, when allowed to make such a journey, do not get stuck in the mud along the way. No one has any business making such a venture unless he keeps travelling, and is sure to get safely back home. The world is round, and if we travel far enough we shall always meet again.

IX. BLESSED are the ones who realize that their wedded state does not cease with the outer symbolism of marriage and who travel either by the same or by different roads, until they find that ultimate and perfect unity which is the UNITY OF THE SPIRIT. Falling into ruts together makes of marriage a monotonoy; falling into ruts separately makes a marriage a hell. But they who go beyond the half-way stations to the greater unities make of marriage not a monotony but a place of freedom, not a hell but a heaven.

X. FINALLY MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS: LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so as to remove mountains, and have not love I am nothing. Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not, love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." And now in marriage as in all things, abideth faith, hope and love, these three; "but the greatest of these is LOVE."

EDITORIALS

THE THREAT OF ATOMIC DOOM hangs over mankind. What should be our response to it? Should we complacently go on our way hoping against hope that we will be permitted to engage uninterrupted in our vocations, in our family life, in community affairs, in education, etc. in the next several years, or should we shoulder a more difficult course of action than that? Is it not generally true that those who take it easy shall mourn and those who mourn shall in the end rejoice? Jesus said that his yoke was easy and his burden light, but nevertheless his way of life entails a yoke and a burden. What does this mean for us in our day? What is the individual responsibility of each one of us? Perhaps, most of us are agreed that something ought to be done. Are we agreed on the fact that we cannot possibly go to war and that only in that course is there any hope for mankind? If we are agreed that men must determine to worship the Prince of Peace and not violence if mankind is to avert doom, then we must win others to that faith. This may take various forms. Perhaps, most important is faithfulness in the little opportunities which come to us. Nevertheless, one wonders whether not one expression of such a program should be a campaign of witnessing similar to that of the early disciples when they went from place to place and spoke to those who would listen. If there could be enough evangelists of the Gospel of Love to visit each church in America, then we might expect the leaven of peace-making to become more evident in the Christian Church. Maybe the fields are riper unto harvest than we think. Should we have workers? If so where are they?

TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS took the lives of 32,500 Americans in 1947, according to figures released by The Travellers Insurance Companies. According to a report in the Gospel Messenger, 72 per cent of the collisions occurring on our highways result from liquor consumed either by the pedestrians or by the drivers involved in the accident. The relation between drink and death in auto accidents is close. It seems increasingly clear that people drink because they want to get away from their troubles and because of boredom with life. Needed instead is a stimulating realization of God's great purpose of fatherliness and creativity. People need something for which to live. They need faith. Once given that, it will be easier to leave drinking alone. What shall be the strategy of the Christian Church in this? Is it unrealistic to believe that Christians with a vital faith could so creatively interact with a family which believes in drink that finally this family might have more to live for and would be won away from drink? The way it is now, any conventional approach would be found to be unnatural. However, could Christian neighbors of such families or Christian associates in work make it a point to be genuinely interested in those who believe in drinking, then perhaps the whole approach would be taken more naturally, the relationship would be sounder and more lasting, and it would also undoubtedly be more productive of results. We may not know who the people are who go into the drink parlors and liquor stores in our town, but some Christian must know somebody who does. Such a Christian has a responsibility towards the one who drinks. Perhaps the question or problem is how to help. Perhaps there has been too much condemnation in the whole prohibition movement and insufficient understanding of those who need to be helped. Those who drink need fellowship with somebody who loves, and who has a great purpose in life. If those who drink do not receive this fellowship, then it is the business of some Christian to give it.

Growing into a Happy Marriage

by Mrs. E. L Harshbarger

To every man there cometh
A highway and a low
And every man decideth
The way his life should go.

In a recent magazine, the story was told of a man who was illiterate at fifteen and who had to do his studying in secret, but at twenty-three he was a professor in a southern university and he became a medical doctor soon after. His environment was completely unfavorable, but his response was of such quality that he became an outstanding success.

In no area of life is the manner in which one responds so important as it is in the personal relationships. It has been pointed out that marriage is a union of two personalities, each with a background and history. How one has learned to respond to people and situations is immensely important to success and failure in marriage. The tragic truth is that too many people blunder through these early experiences, making unconscious choices which may later cause havoc in their lives. Enlightenment is needed as to the significance of their choices.

The general outline of one's affectional response is laid down in childhood.

The young child first begins to discover himself. He plays with his hands, his toes, and other parts of his body; his chief occupation is looking for satisfaction for himself. He loves those people who give him satisfactions—principally his mother, who feeds him, keeps him warm and dry, and cuddles and caresses him. As he grows and develops, he notices and begins to have affection for other members of the family who play with him, caress him, and in other ways give him the satisfaction of response and recognition. If at this stage, demonstration of effection is missing or inadequate, the person may go through life with a haunting feeling of loss, seeking a love which cannot be found.

The young pre-school child needs a continuance of this family affection, but he also needs two or three companions with whom he can learn to do things, exchange toys, etc. This, too, is an important step in learning to get along with others. As he matures to school age, he begins to prefer playmates of his own sex, he learns to share in cooperative ventures, he becomes part of a group.

As he goes on into adolescence, he begins to enjoy association with members of the opposite sex, to prefer strongly his own age group as companions.

These stages are important to the individual and to those responsible for him because if his needs are not adequately met, there is possiblity of fixation on any one of these levels, none of which is favorable to mature heterosexual love. All of us are familiar with persons in the infantile stage of love—the person incapable of giving much in love and whose chief concern is the satisfaction he receives; or the person who can work beside but not with anyone else and seems incapable of more than a mild affection for more than two or three. Then there is the person who has never progressed beyond the homosexual stage—finding his satisfaction with those of his own sex. Or again, we may find an individual who is satisfied with the generalized affection typical of the adolescent for the opposite sex but who seems unable to achieve the deep, absorbing love which results in a marriage characterized by devotion, loyalty, and fidelity.

We need love and demonstration of love in each stage of development. It is the sunshine and rain of personality growth. Love will help to give one a sense of personal worth without which there is no real happiness. If the child's first responses are accepted and reciprocated, he becomes increasingly skilful in loving and being loved. If he is rejected and repulsed, he may withdraw into himself or lash out in tantrums or other exhibitions of himself in order to attract the attention he craves.

The poor adolescent is in a precarious position. He is too big to be cuddled as the small child is: he is not old enough to have the satisfactions and response of married adults. He is trying to cut loose from the affectional ties of home and step out with uncertain footsteps into the larger world. At a time when he needs the security of love deeply, he may be singularly unattractive—big nose, big feet, gangly, awkward, uncertain, unadept in conversation, unpredictable in mood. With puberty come new urges and stimuli which may be difficult to control. Some young people become fearful and withdraw. Others may put on a bravado role of "wolf" and pretend a sophistication they do not possess, for example, going to excess in petting to hide their inexperience. These experiences may leave deep wounds on the personality which may affect the marital relationship strongly.

Dating is an intermediate step, a part of the learning process. When and how it begins depends on many factors—the age at which one matures physically, the customs of his particular community, the attitude of parents, his ordinal position in the family, how friendly a person he has learned to be. It usually begins with group dates of various kinds, shifting to fleeting affinities or temporary try-outs. Next comes the "going-together" stage which in some communities is unfortunately identified with "going steady." A great emphasis by the community in this stage and a too early entrance into the final stages of courtship may result in some unfortunate alliances merely because the community expects them to continue, whereas they themselves have started dating purely as experimentation.

In too many Mennonite communities there is inadequate provision for young people to mix socially and to engage in wholesome activities while dating. There has been wholesale condemnation of commecialized recreation and social dancing and at the same time a complacent acceptance of courtship patterns which may be far more dangerous, such as "petting parties from seven to two" as one young Mennonite girl described the custom in her community. The best one can say for this type of "recreation" is that it is less promiscuous than dancing but certainly no one with any knowledge of physiology and psychology would say that it is less stimulating. Every young person should understand clearly what petting is. It is a result and continuance of the urge of sexual approach and its goal is the consummation of the sex urge.

It might be described as a chain reaction—one slight intimacy leading to another of greater intimacy until with time, opportunity, and sufficient stimulation all inhibitions may be forgotten in the rush of feeling. The tragic result of pre-marital relations is that they so frequently leave psychological wounds of various kinds—suspicion, fear, disappointment, disillusion. And if one is hurt in the love relationship he may develop a revengeful, exploitative attitude toward others which will ruin his own chances for happiness as well as blighting those with whom he comes in contact.

The engagement period is one of exploration and experimentation. Many questions should be discussed, such as attitude towards money, children, management, religion. These should have entered into the decision of both before engagement, but they should be clarified during this period. The length of engagement should depend on how long and how well the couple have known each other before their promising of marriage.

We tend to marry people like ourselves. In fact, marriage unity depends upon and develops a pair-unity which in turn develops with the formation of a common language and a common goal. Characteristics and attributes which contribute to a satisfactory marriage are, first of all, the ability to love and be loved. Closely linked with that is the habit of happiness. More specifically, those people who come from similar religious backgrounds, who attend church regularly, who have attended Sunday school until nineteen or more, who are mature (that is, independent, dependable, able to give and to take), those who have learned how to stand up to life, understanding its problems and accepting them, who have a sense of personal worth, yet sympathy with and empathy for others, those who have a wholesome attitude toward sex and who desire children—these are fit candidates for happy marriage. As one studies objectively the characteristics essential to happiness in marriage, one is struck forcibly by their similarity to the concept of what constitutes a vital, growing Christian.

The precepts of Christ are precepts for a happy love relationship:

"It is more blessed to give than to receive."
"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."
"Give and it shall be given unto you."

Family TIES

by Leland Foster Wood

The Apostle Paul in his most inspiring words used Christ's love as an example of what married love ought to mean. What does it mean to love as Christ loved? (1) It denotes an appreciative love. Christ saw the good in persons more than any other ever did, and more than they themselves could see it. Because of this they became more as he wanted them to be. (2) As Christ loves means to love unselfishly, giving not seeking, and at the same time inspiring others to be their best. (3) Christ's love was patient. He saw people as they could become. He depended upon growth as the farmer does, first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain. (4) Christ's love was understanding. He even understood the misunderstood. Understanding that can prevent misunderstanding is one of the greatest needs. (5) Christ's love was forgiving. Many marriages become blighted by a hard unforgiving spirit. But this never comes into a family if Christ is the center of its life. (6) To love as Christ loved means to love in an eternal set of values, to love God with all the heart, to love one's neighbor as one's self, and to love one's mate and children more than one's self.

As we think more deeply of the meaning of family ties we understand all other families better—families of other nations and races, families in need of food, shelter and also understanding. We sense the need of all families for peace and world fellowship to make the good life possible.

All good things under God, have their roots in the family, but they do not become ingrown, they bear fruit for all of life. As we build familities, families will build us and the world. As we realize that the family ties which mean so much to us are precious to others also we have one of the most fertile roots of world understanding and fellow feeling.

Revival

by Marie Ruth Wall

> ". . . somewhere along the way a certain sense of honor and responsibility was lost to some institutions, or homes, or children."

A lot of us have experienced the poignant pleasure-pain of reminiscence as a result of the current practice of reviving popular songs of years gone by. These "revivals" are heartily welcomed because of their ability to arouse memories and momentarily make them live.

In the field of education, however, whether it be home or church or school, it is not at all popular to look back. Standards for educational policies and practices in these days are always new and those proposed by forward-looking educators. This is all very well, for in order to make progress movement must be forward; yet there is one ancient precept that might well be retained throughout the evolutionary struggles and triumphs of education on its way toward its worthy goals. It is the admonition to the young to give respect where respect is due. "Honor thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Ex. 20:12)

Recent admirable trends in education have encouraged freedom of expression and individual liberties entirely in keeping with the fundamental Mennonite philosophy of interpreting the will of God according to the honest dictates of one's conscience; but somewhere along the way a certain sense of honor and responsibility was lost to some institutions, or homes, or children. As a result children have honored their homes less, and have grown into adults lacking proper respect for their own homes; hence the tragic increase in divorce and broken, unhappy, unsuccessful homes. Children as a consequence have lacked respect for property, hence delinquency. Perhaps even some of the existing class struggles may be attributed to a basic lack of respect where respect is due.

By all means education must step forward boldly, often with practices that may seem as revolutionary as Christ's unprecedented tactics with scribes and Pharisees and publicans, but one "revival" is in order— "Honor thy father and thy mother."

M. C. C. Appears before Armed Services Committees of House and Senate

by Albert Gaeddert

On March 31, at 4:50 P.M. a delegation of seven people representing the Mennonite groups in the United States were granted a hearing before the Senate Armed Services Committee on the question of universal military training and probable draft legislation. Again on April 17, the same privilege was granted to appear before the House Armed Services Committee. Any group wanting to be heard and wanting the privilege to appear before a congressional committee needs to file such request in writing, and we were alerted to do so by members of our National Service Board in Washington.

Both Committees received us courteously. The Senate Armed Services Committee seemed somewhat more passive in the hearings, especially when opponents of the bill testified. The Brethren Service Committee, the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, and the Mennonite Central Committee testified the same afternoon and followed one another in the above named sequence. No questions were asked either of these groups, either during the reading of the prepared statenent or following. An interesting feature on the afterioon of March 31 was the presence of a large number of Mennonite and Brethren in Christ folks in the aulience of the Committee Room. Letters had been writen to pastors of churches in the Washington neighboriood telling our people of the hearings and stating that n the afternoon of March 31 the MCC delegation would estify. Rev. Don. E. Smucker served as spokesman for he MCC delegation, and before giving his statement he alled attention to the large number of "Plain People" n the audience who were there because of their concern or pending legislation.

On Saturday, April 17, at 10 A.M. we appeared gain, and this time before the House Armed Services Committee. An atmosphere of a somewhat more leisurey consideration was evident before this group. Quesions were asked following the presentation of our statenent, and even after adjournment Congressmen stayed o talk and to ask questions. One provision of the House ill provided for deferment of conscientious objectors. Chairman Andrews asked for our reaction to this provision. The MCC Peace Section had not been able to learn how the constituent groups felt about deferment, consequently we asked that we might register our official reaction at a later date. We enquired of the Armed Services Committee whether the deferment clause represented a new trend in dealing with conscientious objectors; but Chairman Andrews merely answered that the final writing of the bill was not yet made and he did not know what such a bill would contain.

Both of our statements were directed toward opposing universal military training, Selective Service draft provisions, or any military training service. Our concerns were expressed being based upon our faith in Christ and upon our own experience as a people. The statement used March 31 was prepared by Rev. Don. Smucker; this same statement with a few revisions and a few additions was again used on April 17. The statement appears elsewhere in this issue of the MENNONITE; this is the one used March 31, and the particular additions made for the April 17 hearing contained a brief story of our relief activities and our voluntary service program.

It is difficult to estimate just what impressions are made by our statements. The only remark heard from any of the Committee members was that made by Chairman Andrews on April 17, when he remarked following the reading of the statement: "A very good testimony." It needs to be pointed out that this is a privilege granted by our government, for which we should be grateful; it is to be counted a privilege to be able to register in this personal manner the concerns of a people.

The impressions one gathered were that universal military training has a very limited chance of passing, at least during this session of Congress. At the same time, it appears that there is more then a 50-50 chance for some kind of Selective Draft legislation to be enacted. The whole matter is, however, still in the hands of our Congressmen, and the time is very ripe for letters, personal visits, and delegations to congressmen to express our deep concerns regarding pending legislation. The Christian also has the avenue of prayer open.

A Statement of Position to the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate Concerning Peacetime Conscription and the Christian Conscience against War

Presented to this committee at the public hearing, March 31, 1948, Washington, D. C., on behalf of the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

I am Rev. Don. E. Smucker of Chicago, Ill., a teacher in the Mennonite Biblical Seminary. I am the duly authorized representative of the Mennonite Central Committee whose supporting churches number over 125,000 baptized members in the United States.

It is with a heavy heart that our organization makes this witness to the elected representatives of the United States. This is true because we share the concern of our fellow-citizens over the dangers of this disturbed era; this time of wars and rumors of wars. We have been here before in other moments testifying to the nature of the Gospel as we understand it. And, also testifying to our experience in many different situations. Today's testimony is part of an unbroken witness since coming to America in 1685; a witness extending back to the days of the Reformation in Holland and Switzerland when the church was started.

Few Christians have known the sting of war and the crushing effects of conscription better than the various groups of Mennonites. Since Reformation days we have been refugees from bitter persecution of ruthless governments and intolerant religious movements.

In more recent times the most perfect illustration of our witness has been the situation in Russia. The Mennonites of South Russia were of original Dutch stock, coming to Russia by way of Prussia where they had not liked German militarism. When the Czars withdrew military exemption in 1874, 10,000 came to Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas and Minnesota. Under the Communist regimes thousands perished. Later, in the years 1923—30, 25,000 of our people left the Soviet Union, going to Canada, Mexico and Paraguay. Finally, in one of the thrilling yet sorrowful stories of the second World War, 30,000 Mennonites were able to leave Russia in 1943. Of these 20,000 have disappeared. 10,000 are accounted for in refugee camps in Denmark and in new migrations to Paraguay. A very small number have come here to the U.S.A. Indeed, the Mennonites knew the meaning of brutality, war, conscription and dictatorship throughout Europe but particularly under the Czars and Communists of Russia.

II

For the above reasons we are in no mood to deny the seriousness of the crisis; not to underestimate the precious reality of freedom of conscience. On the other hand, throughout our history we have not permitted political and military circumstances to alter the unchanging commandments of Jesus Christ as we have read them in the New Testament. As a matter of fact. Christ, Himself, did not base His work for us on our reaction to Him. The Apostle Paul observed this fact when he wrote: "But God commended His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." The Apostle John declares that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." Thus God's motive in sending Christ was love.

And it is precisely this principle which is basic in the Christian life. We, too, are called to forgive our enemies, to go the second mile, be long-suffering, love our neighbors as ourselves, forgive seventy times seven, overcome evil with good, to embark on a ministry of reconciliation through Christ beyond racial, class and national barriers and to obey God rather than man.

III

All this is not in conflict with good citizenship but is necessary for it. Our own experience as a Christian community has shown that disaster results whenever nations ignore these basic Christian teachings. All over the world nations have perished by disobeying God and flaunting the Christian law of love. Today the teachings of Jesus Christ and over 400 years experience with war and conscription recall us to the urgency of these lessons of faith and painful experience.

Conscription for war we consider unChristian. And what is wrong is dangerous and suicidal.

Various nations have always thought they could be exempt from God's judgment. They believed they could avoid reaping chaos from the seed of militarism. Whatever the short-term situation, the long-term answer is clear: "they that take the sword perish by the sword." Therefore, this great nation dare not seek exception from this terrible moral fact. The Gospel suggests no exceptions. History offers no exceptions. America has had a special cup of blessings because it sought its destiny apart from brutality, conscription, dictatorship and the suppression of liberties.

We are deeply sympathetic with the profound dilemmas and agonizing challenges which men of state are facing. Surely now is not the time for glibness since the peril is real and the problem baffling. As we face these issues today people are fearful; people are developing deep despair and bitterness as they think of a third world war in such a short time after the second costly global bleeding.

Yet the Mennonite churches believe that God is using this crisis to force a decision. Jesus said: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Matt. 6:24) This choice is the supreme issue of our time. No answer including Christ's answer is easy or safe. But the safest place in the world is the doing of God's will as revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Therefore we respectfully declare that further extension of the power of the state over the lives of men through military training is not desirable; that government control of immature young people is undesirable; that God does have a way of dealing with evil doers through forgiving love and moral judgment; that history is a clear warning against this policy. This hearing is taking place three days after Easter . . . . This reveals that Christ is more powerful than death itself. Mr. Chairman, we, therefore, are opposed to both selective service and universal military training as unChristian and dangerous in the light of history. Constantly in our prayers and now with our direct testimony, we ask you not to employ evil as an answer to evil.

During the second World War we appreciated the goodwill of government officials toward our leaders and our young people facing the draft. The attached statement contains the relevent parts of our testimony to the President's Advisory Commission on Universal Training, April 10, 1947. It will clarify our reaction to this experience under conscription. Finally, we are attaching a statement made to the House Select Committee on Post-War Military Policy, June 11, 1945 to reveal the continuity of our testimony in Washington. Mr. Chairman, while registering our resolute convictions we want to affirm our goodwill toward the United States government and our desire to be loyal, useful citizens as we maintain our allegience to the supreme law of Christian love.

Report from Italy

by Boyd H. Nelson

[The following report from Italy was written by Boyd Nelson, M. C. C. worker. This is the first of what we hope will be a series of reports from various parts of the world, written by relief workers. The report was written before the elections but predicts their outcome.]

Two years ago when I arrived in Bari, the situation in Italy was very different from that now. There was insufficient food, whether rationed or free market. In that southern Italian town young black marketeers from eight years on up ranged all over, hawking all types of wares — money, tobacco, their sisters, etc. All these sources of income were necessary to help a family get its meager income. Figures quoted indicate some two million still unemployed, and we know that inflation has cut the worker's buying power considerably, however, public transportation facilities are now nearly back to normal, there is enough sugar over and above the ration to distribute at almost the ration price, and same is true of pasta, the Italian taple equivalent to our potatoes. There are hardly many families without someone working.

Italy's immense progress is due primarily to the good job which UNRRA and Aid of the U. S. A. have done. These programs have been unprecedentedly ffectual as official programs go. Naturally, the oficial American aid has been a large factor in the ampaign which closes with the voting April 18. The Christian Democrats, or Catholic party, claim this aid as a direct result of the love of the American people for the Pope, while the Communists insist that it is just another form of American imperialism. Obviously, needing some effectual force to back and finding only the Catholic party ready and able, the American aid has given it a strong boost. If it wins the election, it will not be because Italy wants the "Democristiani," but because they were more afraid of Communism.

It seems clear that in next Sunday's voting, the Democristiani will win. Then what? Will the Italian people be saddled with a government they don't want simply because American aid is backing it? Can they change their party in power and still keep American help? These are questions which almost certainly will face the U. S. government after the elections in case of a leftist defeat.

Those are political questions. As the Christian observes the situation, he comes to realize that econnomic aid and political action can't bring about peace within or between nations. The physical needs of the Italian people, through American help and a good social security system, are being increasingly better met. Of course, there are still poor and needy in Italy, but nearly everyone is better off than two years ago. Yet the Italian people are less satisfied now. Along with other things, this means to me that it is not what a people have which determines their happiness, but how nearly what they have approximates what they want. With a materialistic and secular civilization the world over, material goods and sensualities which appear to give satisfaction will be increasingly in demand and will untimately lead to the break in the peace, if and when it comes.—Boyd H. Nelson, MCC—Italy Unit

(NOTE: The Mennonite Central Committee program in Italy has been nearly closed out with the exception of a few cooperative projects of a religious nature with the Waldensians. The next report from Italy will describe the life of the evangelical churches in the midst of a strong Catholic majority. Another will describe the Mennonite Committee program and its goals in relation to the life of the evangelical churches.)

TESTIMONIAL

"It may be of interest to you and perhaps to others. The MENNONITE is going to a home in P. She is a member of our church. He is not—a Catholic. Yesterday I was told by her mother that her daughter and husband read the MENNONITE from 'civer to civer' and enjoy it very much. But that is not all. In the apartment house there is another couple—Jews. On the day the MENNONITE is to arrive this Jewish woman waits for the mailman and if possible takes the MENNONITE out of the people's mail box and reads it with much interest and appreciation. I am happy for this. The printed word reaches many more people than we may realize.

Colleges and Seminary

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Paul L. Goering, of the National Service Board in Washington, was on the campus Saturday completing the arrangements for the caravan of Mennonite students who intend to go to Washington this week. The Bethel College Delegation will be met here in Chicago to be joined by Arnold Nickel of the Seminary Student Body. Then in Bluffton, Ohio, these people will meet William Keeney, and from there go to Washington to present the concern of our own church and school.

Don. E. Smucker served as chairman with the local arrangement in connection with the very dramatic Church of the Brethren Peace and Brotherhood Mission. This mission started in California and arrived here on Friday. Following its arrival there were to be two days of spiritual preparation before these people started for Lake Success and Washington, where they hope to see President Truman and other leaders of the nation. En route from the west coast these men held prayer meetings on their train and as the train pulled into the station they joined hands and sang, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." Among those who will accompany this large delegation to Washington to oppose the forces of war and violence is Rev. Lester Hostetler, of the Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas, representing the Western District Peace Committee.

On Friday, April 23, the thousands of Jews in Chicago started their observance of Passover, the greatest of all Jewish holidays.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Music Department is presenting five Seniors in graduation recitals during the spring quarter — Meribeth Haury, piano, March 11; Hugo Reimer, tenor, April 27; Rosella Reimer, soprano, May 3; Elbert Pankratz, bass, May 11; Mabel Warkentin, piano, May 20; and Rosella Reimer will also be presented in organ on May 17, assisted by Rupert Hohmann, violinist. Leo Goertz, baritone, assisted by Mrs. Goertz, church organist, gave a Vesper program on April 25, and ten other music students will appear in recital during May. Group recitals for the many piano pupils of Mrs. Ferd Voth and assistants were arranged for April 22, 26, 28. The spring concert of the College Orchestra is scheduled for May 23, and the A Cappella Choir will be sponsored in a home concert by the Women's Association on Baccalaureate Sunday, May 30. The choir, with graduating voice students as soloists, will also sing the Saint Cecilia Mass by Gounod on Sunday afternoon, May 16, at three o'clock in the College chapel.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

President-elect Miller spent several days on the campus. He and Dean Gross worked out plans for the next school year. John J. Ewert, Avon, South Dakota, will become Director of the Normal Training Department with the opening of the new school year. Mr. Ewert graduated both from the Academy and Junior College of Freeman and holds a B. S. and a Master's Degree from the University of South Dakota. He has had a total of fifteen years of teaching experience as teacher, principal and superintendent of schools in Iowa and South Dakota. Esther Bohn, Bluffton, Ohio, is to assist in the English Department and teach Art. Miss Bohn holds a Bachelor of Arts Degree from Bluffton College (1947) and has a year of teaching experience at Wauseon, Ohio. Miss Bohn's coming will make it possible for the College to offer more work in Art—an area long neglected here. It will also relieve Miss Kaufman, who has divided her time between Speech and English.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

During the past three weeks the Manitoba Music Festival was held here in the city of Winnipeg. Three adjudicators from England were secured to judge the various classes. To hear their criticisms and comments of encouragements was very interesting and educational. Classes ranged from kindergarten age groups to church choirs. The larger classes naturally were made up of instrumental and vocal solo groups.

Sidney Zimmerman, a twelve-year-old violinist and a student of Mr. J. Conrad, won the highest individual reward. He played as his number, Kreisler's "Siciliene and Rigandon" to win the advanced violin solo class.

THE MILITARIZATION OF AMERICA

(Reviewed by J. P. Baehr)

A report issued by Albert Einstein, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Reuben Gustavson, William J. Millor, S. J., Arthur Morgan, Ray Lyman Wilbur, and fifteen others.

It is almost unbelievable that such a story of militarism in our country can be told. The situation is indeed alarming! The report closes with these significant words:

> Our most insistent and devastating criticism of pre-war Japan was that the Army, bypassing the civilian government, controlled the Emperor and thus national policy. The same pattern already exists in large measure in our own land today. It was this same trend in Germany, together with the apathy of the people and the failure of the church, labor, and educational groups to speak out, which permitted the rise of the militarized fascist state.

It is because of this danger that such a pamphlet as this should be on the literature table of all our churches, all our schools, and all our homes.

Peace Institute at Freeman Junior College

Reported by Orlando Goering

Freeman, South Dakota.—Two outside speakers high-lighted the Peace Institute held at Freeman by the Mennonite churches of that area. In addition to several local speakers and discussion periods, Mr. Paul Goering of the NSBRO at Washington and Dr. Guy F. Hershberger of Goshen College each spoke twice.

Mr. Goering emphasized Biblical non-resistance as the only position for the Christian since it is rooted in our conception of God as love, since that way of life is attested by the physical and moral universe; i. e., personal peace and health obtained only when love and good-will instead of hate and resentment is practiced by the individual; since the Scriptures and Christ plainly teach this way of life and Jesus Himself practiced it.

Mr. Goering also refuted the stock arguments against the pacifist position, especially the one declaring "this to be a holy war" by pointing out that Christianity was never dependent on any political organization for its vitality or preservation. He discussed the weakness and strength of the C. P. S. program and new proposals in the event of another draft. Among the changes is basic G. I. pay for all in C.P.S. by the agency receiving the benefit of C.P.S. services. This relieves the government of the embarrassment of slave labor. Mr. Goering expressed great alarm at the growing militarization of our national administration and urged the group to prayer and letter writing to our Washington representatives.

Among the latest developments in Washington is the proposed deferrment of CO's in a limited draft. This Mr. Goering believes will not hold in case of UMT or a wartime draft.

Dr. Hershberger suggested that the Christians face a hostile world as they always have faced it with love, non-resistance, confidence and courage. The way for the Mennonite Church is the way that conforms to the moral law of God; the way of true discipleship; the way that keeps faith with the great heros that have conformed to the moral law and true discipleship.

From the Bulletin of the Lorraine Church, Wichita

THERE STILL ARE PEOPLE LIKE THAT!

The following letter postmarked Newton, Kansas, 5 P. M. April 6, 1948, and addressed Rev. J. H. Langenwalter, Lorraine Street, Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas, arrived Wednesday:

Dear Friends:

I have noticed with pleasure the growing of the Mennonite Church in Wichita and am positive the stamp of God's approval has helped make it so.

Recently I was told that some of the members are growing a bit discouraged because "The last mile needs the hardest pull."

So I have decided to do without a new dress and hat and am sending you the enclosed amount (3 ten dollar bills). May God continue to bless your undertaking.—A friend.

There is no known clue to the identity of the writer, but there is deep gratitude for the encouragement. Enough friends of the type of our unknown friend nine months ago would have made it possible to meet our growing opportunities without the serious difficulties which we have had to face because the building work has had to cease. The completion of the building would also have cost a great deal less than it will because of the delay.

The work which a relatively small number of people are trying to do here, is of increasing importance to the Conference as a whole. If in doubt, come and see!

Thank you, our good, unknown friend!

Russian Pen Pals

It was a little French girl who wrote these words to a prospective American pen pal: "Would the big people mind if the little people were friends?"

Many Brethren have expressed a desire to write to the "little people of Russia—and thus cultivate a friendly understanding that transcends our political differences. Those who want such Russian pen pals may write to:

The Antifascist Committee of Soviet Youth
10 Kropotkin Street
Moscow, U. S. S. R.

State your age, place of work or study, the organizations to which you belong, and the things which interest you most. Your letter will be translated and sent to someone who shares your interests.

The Church of the Brethren does not advocate the principles and practices of Communism. But any church must insist that we, as Christians and as human beings, must grasp every opportunity to multiply goodwill among all members of the human race.—"The Gospel Messenger"

M.C.C. News Notes

Akron, Pa. April 23.—A delegation representing Mennonite Central Committee constituent groups again gave testimony in Washington on the issue of military training legislation. In this hearing before the House Armed Services Committee on April 17, Albert M. Gaeddert served as spokeman, with Amos S. Horst, C. N. Hostetter, Jr., and Ernest W. Lehman accompanying. Our position of nonresistant Christians was again emphasized, with reference also to the fact that in the past Mennonites have borne great persecution at the hands of nations which pursued the way of militarism and conscription. A similar testimony had been given on March 31 before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Construct Building in Devastated City

The building, which is to be used as a Mennonite church as well as a community center at Heilbronn, in the American Zone of Germany, is nearing completion. The material for this prefabricated structure was imported from Sweden, and local Mennonites have been cooperating in the work by providing an architect, carpenters, and other skilled workers.

The city of Heilbronn was very severely damaged during the war, and materials for building are extremely difficult to secure. This building will provide a house of worship and also a center where various kinds of relief and rehabiliation work can be carried on, including a sewing room, shoe repair shop, reading room, youth activities program, etc.

Two Mennonite Refugee Mothers to U. S.

Two Mennonite refugee mothers are en route to the United States where they will join their sons. Katherina Mierau left from Paraguay on April 22 and should arrive on April 24 in the United States, where she will meet her son, David Mierau, of Reedley, California. She had been one of the colonists in Paraguay prior to the coming of the recent refugee groups. Susanna Braun left on April 19 from Germany, to come to the United States where her son Frank Brown, of Ephrata, Pennsylvania has lived since he came from Russia just after World War I as one of a group of sixty Mennonite refugees.

Relief Shipments

TO CHRISTENPFLICHT, AMERICAN ZONE OF GERMANY: 34½ tons miscellaneous food. TO ETHIOPIA: one case medical supplies. TO JAVA: 9½ tons beef.

PANEL DISCUSSION ON U. M. T.

Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota—The combined Christian Endeavor societies sponsored a panel discussion on UMT and the effect's that it's possible passage might have on members of our faith. Leading the discussion was the pastor, Rev. Claassen. Report on a recent committee meeting at Chicago was given by Mr. E. J. Waltner, member of the Peace Committee. Other members taking part in the discussion were Dr. J. D. Unruh, Milton Unruh, attorney J. C. Graber and Adolph L. Waltner. Each speaker was given opportunity for a five-minute discussion, setting forth his views on the subject, following which questions by the members were put to each other and answered. Opportunity was also given for question from the floor. It was generally felt that the Church of our faith should take a more positive and constructive attitude towards the question than has been done in the past, and that something to substitute for it should be offered rather than just taking a totally negative stand. It is agreed that the non-resistant stand, generally taken by members of our faith, should be more openly and generally discussed and emphasized especially among the young people, if this important Mennonite principle is not to be lost. The discussion was well received by the unusually large audience and the general feeling seemed to be that there should be more of such discussions.—Corr.

April 26. Both the Senate and House Armed Services Committee are trying to work out a compromise bill which will get enough votes from opposing elements of the single package UMT—Selective Service proposal to assure passage of some kind of draft with a modified UMT program.

The air force controversy in the defense department has prolonged the adoption of a bill and weakened the chances for both UMT and Selective Service although a draft still appears probable. Congressmen favor some kind of stand-by draft which won't hurt them politically, and although the military isn't sure of what they want they don't stop short of asking for billions.

The military now suggests that the government restrict civilian production in order to arm ourselves. Despite the short supply and high cost of consumer goods Secretary Forrestal was reported in today's New York Times to have told the Senate Armed Services Committee that "you cannot have a big military program unless you cease the making of motor cars, washing machines and refrigerators."

EVACUATE CHINA MISSIONARIES

The following telegram was received at General Conference Headquarters on April 30. "GROUP EVACUATED CABLE THOUSAND DOLLARS BOEHR INLAND MISSION CHENGTU." Evidently the General Conference missionaries have been evacuated from the new mission field because of the civil war.

Book Notes

JERUSALEM THE GOLDEN by Arthur Wentworth Hewitt. (Abingdon Cokesbury.)

Rev. Arthur Wentworth Hewitt, the author of The Shepherdess has written a book on immortality which is likely to live on as a classic on the subject. He wrote Jerusalem the Golden with a sense of revelation. He says that the days when he wrote "were days of joy — thrilling, holy, supreme. I seemed to be living in wave after wave on clear, jubilant light." For him immortality is a very blessed reality. He fairly shouts, "It can be proved by trying it on. It fits." The basis for his unshakable faith in life everlasting is a mystical union with Christ. "If a man shall do his will, he shall know." He pictures the life after death as the inexpressible joy of being with Christ. As for the lost he pictures the tragedy of eternity as eternal separation from God. He holds himself closely to the teachings of the Bible all along. "No one can read the Bible, judging the book by its own language and not by his prejudices, without knowing that vividly and undeniably it teaches a terrible doctrine of eternal hell." No one will read this book and speak lightly of hell punishment. The author speaks of heaven as one who knows whereof he speaks. He says, "We know more of heaven now than we know of any place whatever on earth." All through the book one senses the author's heart longing that his readers might live so that they might come to inherit the life everlasting. All the logic, literary ability and spiritual insight that he can muster he employs to make heaven a blessed hope and reality for the believer. The book will be a valuable addition to anyone's library. It may be ordered from Abingdon-Cokesbury, Nashville, Tennessee, for $1.50. or from any of our Conference book stores.—W. F. Unruh

Western District Retreat Grounds a Reality

by Ronald von Riesen

A glimpse of the dam located on the newly purchased Western District Retreat Grounds

On April 12, 1948, the Young People's Christian Endeavor Fellowship of the Western District Conference took into their possession an eighty-acre farm near Murdock, Kansas, for the purpose of developing our own retreat grounds.

For almost three years the Retreat Grounds Committee was active in investigating possible sites for this purpose in accord with the resolution which was passed at the 1945 C. E. convention at North Newton, Kansas, authorizing the Executive Committee to enter into negotiations for the same if a suitable site were found.

The above site was first brought to the attention of the committee by Mr. E. W. Graber, a retired farmer of Pretty Prarie, Kansas, who felt that it had possibilities for retreat ground purposes. The committee contacted the owners, and after considerable investigation and consultation with other interested people, it was felt that we had finally found the type of place we were looking for. Negotiations were entered into with the owners, Mrs. Cora M. Cole and her husband, Samuel Cole, for the purchase price of $10,000, with the privilege of remaining on the place as tenants for an indefinite period. Of this amount, a down payment of $3,000 is to be paid by May 15, the balance to be paid at not less than $1,000 each year, plus interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Approximately $2,750 have come into our retreat grounds fund during the past two years from local societies and interested individuals. Of this amount, $1,082 will be needed to purchase 150 double bunk beds and mattresses which were secured from army surplus material.

Plans are under way to secure some army barracks from the Pratt air base, which is approximately thirty miles away. It is hoped that one or more of these may be erected this summer, so that the grounds may be ready for use by the summer of 1949. The beds and mattresses are being stored at the Western District Issue

General Conference Headquarters office until some other suitable storage space is located.

At the 1947 convention held at the Goesssel Mennonite Church, Goessel, Kansas, a resolution was passed asking all members of local Young People's groups to contribute five dollars per member for this purpose. A good number of societies have been active with various projects to try and raise their quota.

By May 15, another fifteen hundred dollars should come in so that we may cover our present obligations. We should like to encourage all local Christian Endeavors and young people's groups in the Western District to make a special effort to raise this amount by May 15. With over three thousand young people in our district between the ages of fifteen and thirty, this will mean only fifty cents per member— a sacrifice of one admission ticket to a high school play, or two malted milks. Won't you give this matter your serious consideration and see what encouragement you may give to your local group to support this project?

For many years young people and leaders in our District have been hoping and praying for our own grounds, where we would be free to carry on our own summer retreats without being hampered by the limitations of renting other camps.

With Nehemiah of old, we are determined to "Rise up and Build"!

At last the time has come! May we respond to this opportunity, and consider it a sacred trust to our Heavenly Father and to young people of our District—who are the church of tomorrow!

Use Character Bonds

by Erwin Goering

Our young people of the Western District have taken the first two steps towards obtaining a retreat ground of their own: first, they considered it wise to work toward ownership of a place of their own. Having made this first decision, they launched a campaign of "seeking out" a desirable location. Having found a location with what was considered a suitable setting, they took the second step, that of arranging to buy the location. The third step must now follow—that of providing funds to pay for the location.

At the last Western District C. E. Convention there was considerable discussion on this point. Questions were asked as to methods of raising funds, amounts which might be raised by individual societies, and suggestions were made regarding per member quotas. A number of representatives of societies were confident that five dollars per member could be raised annually by their C. E. group. Others knew of individuals with financial means who were interested and would be happy to contribute larger sums. All in all, there was present in that meeting a spirit of courage and confidence which becomes young Christian people. There was expressed a faith in the willingness of Christian young people to give of their energies and their material good for this project, which is meant to become a definite means towards developing the individual's Christian experience.

At last year's Intermediate and Young People's retreats the retreaters raised a nice fund for retreat grounds. This contribution was made voluntarily and happily out of their own resources. They bought Christian Character Bonds, which were printed with this specific purpose in mind.

Have you wondered what help you could get in terms of methods to make your all-membership canvass? Why not try the Character Bond method? See the young people of your church; see those who are older but young enough in spirit to want to help along. The retreat program can grow to include all interested age groups if enough interest is widened.

Attend Manchester Retreat Conference

by Helen Mueller, Oswald Goering, Erwin Goering

When the Church of the Brethren invited the Mennonites to attend their Camp Planning Conference at Manchester College, North Manchester, Indiana, during the Christmas holidays, three of us took advantage of the opportunity to learn something new about retreat programs and objectives. Since our Mennonite Seminary is working in cooperation with the seminary of the Brethren, we feel closely bound to them, and we appreciated this period of getting better acquainted with them and this particular phase of their Christian education program.

At Manchester we were reminded anew that leaders have a real responsibility to give young people a religious experience and philosophy they can live by and die by, to challenge them in summer camps or retreats to give themselves in fulltime service to Christ and His Kingdom, and to encourage them to make commitments they will be willing to pay for with their lives.

Some of the highlights which made particular impressions on us were these: Religion includes the whole of life. We need "specialists" for planning and for carrying out a spiritually significant camping program for our young people. The camp experience should give to the camper an awareness that he has something to contribute and that someone else believes that he has something to contribute. The need for repentance and conversion was stressed, and the responsibility of camp leaders to help young people to this experience. The place of the church in helping to direct the recreational life of young people was emphasized by one of the conference leaders who stated that probably "more young people are lost to Jesus Christ because of their leisure time activities than for any other one reason." There was born in us a new awareness that it is imperative for our denomination to recognize the significance of retreating or camping in the educational program of the Church.

Altogether, this camp conference showed us spots in which our own retreat program may be revitalized and presented some definite methods that can be used to make church camp genuinely Christian in every area.

Retreat Program Objectives

The retreat program is to supplement in a vital way the Christian training and inspiration which the child and young person receives in the home, the church and the school. Here, for a brief period, the individual lives more closely to God's great out of doors to refresh the spirit, stimulate the mind and relax the body.

When retreaters come to camp, they live near to nature, God's handiwork. This provides opportunities to see God through His wonderful creation.

In camp, retreaters live with young people from other communities. With proper guidance this can and should become an experience in Christian brotherhood where campers learn, amid the give-and-take of daily life, to live together happily, helping, democratically, as Christians should.

Guidance needs to come from the leaders. These need to be sincerely dedicated to give of their best in Christian service. Camper problems must become leaders' opportunities.

More specifically, what are some of the objectives of the home, the church and the church school? Are their objectives not also basically our camp and retreat objectives? Each has similar objectives and may use varied approaches to achieve them. Here are vital goals which a good retreat experience should help accomplish for the retreaters:

1. To grow in knowing God as Creator, Father and Friend.
2. Those who have not yet made a commitment, to accept Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord.
3. To strengthen Christian living in all relationships.
4. To develop a greater knowledge, understanding and appreciation of the Bible as the Book of Life.
5. To promote active and intelligent loyalty to the church through a study of its functions and organization.
6. To help each person to know and share more fully the world missionary task of the church.
7. To help make the teachings of Jesus a pattern for Christian living.
8. To develop a wholesome balance in life between the spiritual, mental, social and physical.

The Retreater at Retreat

Dr. J. H. Langenwalter

Too many people in the world today look upon a retreat as a sign of coming defeat. War has given us that idea. Fortunately there is another meaning which grows out of the richness of life due to the Love of God for us.

Any withdrawal in the latter sense means leaving some position or occupation for the time being in order to withdraw to a position or occupation more worth while for the time being at least. This may apply to individuals or to groups.

Such a retreat affords opportunities of many variations. In the light of this fact the retreater needs to be prepared to make proper choices. He cannot make his plans in detail beforehand because he does not know all of the possibilities. He can be helped by those in charge, but the important thing is that he approaches the possibilities of the retreat he plans to join in the proper frame of mind and with right and helpful attitudes. Among these the following are worthy of careful study.

1. The retreater is a guest. Others have worked that he might find joy, greater insight needed for the real values of life and something of those deeper and more abiding satisfactions of life which are necessary to help one to keep going when the going becomes hard.

People who have provided such opportunities deserve the respect due to hosts. Those who profit by their sacrifical contributions will get the most out of the retreat when they have the attitude of grateful and courteous guests.

2. The retreater is a learner. The attitude of the learner is to find out what new and greater things he can discover. A fine old Scot used to say to younger people: "Jesus was always a teasin' men to think. That is why He made such a great contribution to the well-being of the wor-r-r-rld!" That statement, and the kind of man who made it, has meant more than they can tell to those who had the good fortune of knowing this unusual man.

Unless we wonder and think and learn we become bored with the finest opportunities which God or man can give us.

3. A retreater is a worker and a co-worker. If it is true that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," then it is also true that all play and no work makes Jack a shirk.

At a real retreat there are better definitions for work and for play. They both belong to a retreat and they both succeed when there is proper co-operation.

Opinions may differ and respect for individual freedom is recognized at any good retreat, and any good retreater, worthy of the opportunities granted him will show appreciation for the opportunities given him by going into action with right good will.

4. In order to achieve the purpose of a retreat the retreater must have an objective beyond the immediate moment. That objective is usually suggested to him by the hosts who make the opportunities of the retreat possible for him. It is proper, however, that he have a personal objective which may make his stay during during the time of the retreat valuable to others as well as himself. Everybody at a good retreat makes some contributions which makes both leaders and fellow retreaters grateful for his presence.

5. A retreater is grateful. That adds zest to his work and his play. That will help him to find the best in his associates and to give of his best to them in a normal and a wholesome way. That will also help him to think more clearly and to see farther into the reasons for a retreat and into his possibilities for more gratifying service to the many people whom he may meet in his life.

The foregoing suggestions have all been the result of a frequent study of the life of Jesus who was the greatest Retreater whom the world has ever known. It is interesting to read the reports of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John on the life of Jesus just to see how many suggestions and examples we find there for helpful and wholesome "reatreating."

Appoint Two District Officers

Miss Maurine Siemens, Newton, Kansas, was recently appointed to the position of secretary-treasurer of the Western District Y.P.C.E. Fellowship. Maurine, a Junior at Bethel College, fills the vacancy left by the resignation of Miss Delsie Tieszen who was elected at the last annual convention in August but felt compelled to resign because of other responsibilities. Mrs. Helen Hiebert Mueller, who has served as temporary secretary since Delsie's resignation, continues to serve as corresponding secretary for the Fellowship Executive Committee.

Maurine Siemens and Evelyn Goering

Maurine is a major in home economics. She is active in many extra-curricular activites, particularly the Student Christian Association where she has served on the cabinet as committee chairman, vice- president and now district representative. Maurine also finds time to sing in the Bethel College A cappella Choir. During the summer of 1946 she was a member of the M.C.C. mental hospital unit at Norristown, Pennsylvania.

Miss Evelyn Goering, North Newton, Kansas, was recently appointed to the position of district news reporter to the Youth Section of The Mennonite.

Evelyn is also a Junior at Bethel College where she is majoring in music. Evelyn sings in the Ladies Trio and in the A cappella Choir. Much of her journalism experience was gained while writing for the Bethel Collegian. In addition Evelyn is a member of the Student Council and the Student Christian Association Cabinet.

Both Maurine and Evelyn attended the Y.W., Y.M., S.C.A. Conference at Estes Park, Colorado, in June, 1947, and also the Y.P.U. Council meeting in Chicago on February 12, 13 and 14. With this background of experience and their interest and enthusiasm for young people's activities they are a big help in the work of the Western District Y.P.C.E. Fellowship.

Local C.E.'s Sponsor Projects

by Evelyn Goering

At the Annual Western District C. E. Convention held August 3, 1947, the Retreat Grounds Committee made a special recommendation pertaining to projects for the coming year, which would help all C. E. members contribute five dollars for retreat grounds during this year.

The young people of the Zion Mennonite Church at Elbing, Kansas, have demonstrated an honest effort to fulfill their obligation to the above recommendation. As a C. E. they have planted approximately an acre of potatoes, all the proceeds of which will go to the fund for our retreat grounds.

Another area in which these young people need to be commended is that of recreation. They have elected a sponsor for their group, who is also in charge of planning and directing the social life of the young people. These socials are held periodically and consist of an evening of games and other entertainment, besides light refreshments.

The C. E. in this church also publishes their church paper besides their regular C. E. projects, and are responsible for sending copies to absentee members, sick members or others interested.

The Burrton Mennonite Church C. E. has experimented with a unique idea for a program which has also been quite successful. They presented what might be called a family talent program. Each family contributed some number to the program, making a varied and interesting evening for those who attended and participated.

These young people also prepared and presented a short play, "The Lonesome Bibles," which attempted to show how we neglect our Bible today.

A Prayer

Amid the turmoil of the tempest's din
When systems shake and nations rent in twain
Become a holocaust of fear and sin,
Lord, let me hear Thy still small voice again.
A glorious company of sainted souls
Have stood in every age alone with Thee
To wrest from earthquakes havoc and the coals
A new world and a nobler destiny.
I hear Thee, Lord, above the sound of strife,
More gleaming in Thy greatness than the fire;
Let my small voice in stillness speak Thy life,
Its whisper blending in Thy mighty choir;
And from unstirred quiesence grant release,
That through the noise and fire may come Thy peace.

District Institutes and Youth Rallies

We have observed within the past several months the tremendous value of institutes and youth rallies in the young people's work of our conference. Although the idea is comparatively new to us, we feel the idea has been very well supported. No doubt, you have either read, heard or perhaps attended one of the four youth rallies which were held at various churches of our Western District. The first of these rallies was held in northwestern Kansas for the churches in that area; the second was held in connection with the Western District Conference at Enid, Oklahoma; the third was sponsored by the churches in southwestern Kansas, plus one Oklahoma and one Texas church; and the fourth was held in the central part of Kansas.

Besides these rallies, which were planned primarily for all the young people of our conference, three of our leaders attended the Camp Planning Conference or Institute held at North Manchester, Indiana, and sponsored by the Church of the Brethren. Following are the reports of the four rallies and the Manchester conference. These should be informative to those of you who found it impossible to attend any of them. May we encourage any of you who would like to have a rally in your area to contact some member of the Executive Committee, so that plans could proceed in that way. One of these reports has been carefully detailed for the particular purpose of giving you, who are contemplating rallies in your area, an idea of their nature.

Hold Rally at Pawnee Rock

Our first young People's Fellowship Institute of the Western District Conference was held October 5, 1947, at the Bergthal Mennonite Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas. The young people of the following churches also participated: First Mennonite Church at Ransom, Kansas, Einseidel Mennonite Church at Hanston, Kansas, and Meadow Mennonite Church at Colby, Kansas. Three subjects were discussed in round table form: "Sunday School—The Biblical Basis for Sunday School Teaching," which was led by Rev. Herbert Miller: "The Needs of Mennonite Youth in General," led by William Juhnke, and a free discussion on the Young People's Fellowship. In the evening the closing address was given by Rev. Erwin Goering.

Notes on Enid Youth Rally

In connection with the Western District Conference held in Enid, Oklahoma, in October, 1947, the district Young People's Fellowship held a rally dinner. Two hundred young people and pastors attended the dinner and brief program at the cafeteria. Roland Goering, Ed Stucky, Abe Peters and Elbert Koontz told the group of what local fellowship groups are doing and presented the challenge of the district work. Ronald von Riesen gave a short inspirational message. After the dinner program the entire group attended the young people's program at which time Rev. A. E. Kreider gave a challenging address, urging youth to commit their lives to God and to consecrate themselves to His service.

Youth Meet at Alexanderwohl

The large Alexanderwohl Church near Goessel, Kansas, was the place for the Western District Young People's rally on Sunday evening, February 8.

The program which had been arranged by the district program committee began at 5:30 with a luncheon, served by the women of the Alexanderwohl church. This was followed by a general introduction of the evening's program by Rev. P. W. Goering of Lehigh, acting toastmaster. After general singing, a discussion of the C. E. problems was led by Rev. Goering, with Rev. Ronald von Riesen, Rev. H. B. Schmidt and Mrs. Roland Dirksen participating. Music was presented by the Tabor church and the Bethel College Ladies' Trio.

The evening program began at 7:45, and after special musical numbers a film, "The Voice Crying in the Wilderness" was shown. This film depicted the life of John the Baptist, and in particular emphasized his consecration to the work of the One Who was greater then he. The evening closed with a consecration service, led by Rev. Walter Dyck.

Southwestern Church Youth Meet at Kismet

The Rally for the Southwestern Kansas churches vas held at the Pleasant Valley Mennonite Church ıear Kismet, Kansas, on November 2, 1947. Other :hurches represented: Friedensfeld Church of Turpin,)klahoma; Ebenfeld Church of Plains, Kansas; Bethel Church of Waka, Texas; and the Mennonite Church of Meade, Kansas.

The day's program was arranged jointly by the Vestern District Sunday School Convention and he Western District Christian Endeavor Fellowship. The morning session was in charge of the Sunday School Convention. A panel discussion was held durng the Sunday School hour discussing the problems ınd needs of Sunday School work as it is related to the 'arious groups in the Sunday School. Rev. Ronald von Riesen delivered the morning message.

The afternoon and evening session were in charge ›f the Western District Christian Endeavor Fellowhip. Rev. Roland R. Goering acted as chairman for he afternoon program. After the opening devotions ed by Rev. Dennis Smith of Meade, Kansas, and a pecial number of music by the Men's chorus of 'urpin, Oklahoma, the rest of the afternoon was pent in a panel discussion, discussing the problems ›f C. E. Work. Four people gathered around the ›anel table and presented certain areas and phases ›f C. E. Work which were then discussed by the ;roup and the members of the audience. The topics ›resented and discussed were the following:

1. Mr. Schmidt presented some of the problems aced by the young people of Western Kansas and Vestern Oklahoma churches as they try to carry out heir young people's work. He stated that the greatest lifficulties which they face is the scarcity of young ›eople in their churches and the great distance that eparates these few.

During the discussion it was suggested that the 'oung people of the five churches represented there night decide to have quarterly meetings, fellowships, ›r programs together. Such joint meetings would make the group large enough for very inspirational fellowships. The distance in this case would not be too great a handicap either since these meetings would be held only once each quarter.

2. Mr. William Juhnke presented the topic: "What Are the Needs of the Mennonite Young People in General, and How Are They Similar to or Different from Mennonite Young People in Western Kansas or Western Oklahoma?"

Mr. Juhnke pointed out that the great need of young people is to maintain and adhere to the principles and teachings and ideals of our Mennonite faith and heritage. Consequently we must incorporate measures into our youth programs that will uphold these ideals. To do this is more difficult in isolated churches where the influence of the outside upon the individual is greater than in a community that is almost entirely Mennonite. Consequently, these isolated churches should do all they possibly can to teach and inform themselves of the Mennonite principles.

3. Miss Melva Goering presented the topic on "Socials and Recreation That Might Be Sponsored for Young People and That Would Be Appropriate for Church Groups."

Socials and fellowships if they are properly conducted and of the proper nature, it was pointed out, will do much to knit the young people together, to maintain their interest, to win their cooperation, and to take care of some of their spare time which might and often would otherwise be spent in unchristian channels and ways.

Church fellowships that might be held would include youth banquets, group sings, out-door picnics, and various socials and entertainment held throughout the year. These socials and fellowships might again be held jointly with neighboring churches if the local congregation is too small.

4. Rev. Ronald von Riesen, chairman of the Western District Christian Endeavor Fellowship, then presented the project adopted by the Western District

C. E. Fellowship at its last session and also the projects of the Young People's Union of the General Conference. He encouraged the churches to participate in these projects. He also presented materials and folders for Christian Endeavor programs.

The afternoon session was closed by Rev. Homer Sperling, who summed up the conclusion of the afternoon discussions.

The message of the evening service was delivered by Rev. Roland R. Goering who spoke on the topic: "What Do You Look For in the Christian Religion?"

About two hundred people attended the day's program. Dinner was served by the ladies of the churches between sessions—at noon and again in the evening. The program of the day was an inspiration to all who attended and everyone left feeling that they had received a blessing from it.

RACING TOWARD WAR

by Kirby Page

The race of armaments between Russia and the United States is speeding up. The nations are now headed straight for war. Something must be done about this race toward death.

It is imperative that the people of the United States understand the reasons for this suicidal race. Why is Soviet Russia spending such vast sums of money on preparedness for war? Why is the military budget of the United States so high? Because the Soviet Union is in the grip of the Communist mind and because the United States is in the grip of the military mind.

The 180 million people living in Russia are governed by a ruthless dictatorship by the Communist Party. Therefore we must seek to understand the basic ideas of Communism if we are to understand the foreign policy of Russia. First of all we must realize that Communists are really convinced that their system is a better one than Capitalism, as strange as this belief seems to us. Their leaders have risked their lives many times for their cause. This zeal for their cause reaches the degree of fanaticism. They want to strengthen Communism and they desire to see it expand. Thus their policy is one of aggressiveness and constitutes a threat to other nations.

This aggressiveness is made more extreme by the philosophy of life accepted by Communists. They call it scientific materialism. They say that the universe itself is so constructed that the only reality is material, the only real force is material. Therefore they feel that they must rely upon brute force, upon military power for the protection of their nation and for the extension of their cause. For this reason they are putting forth every effort to increase the military power of Russia.

Another reason for Russia's aggressiveness must be considered, and that is the fear of Communist leaders. They are afraid for three reasons. First, they believe that there is an irreconcilable conflict between Communism and Capitalism. They say that these two systems differ so substantially that there is bound to be trouble. Therefore they conclude that they must constantly be on the defensive if they are to be able to defend themselves. Then they say their experience during the past thirty years proves that their theory is sound. They maintain that the capitalist nations have tried to destroy their government in Moscow. They call attention to the armed invasion of Russia by troops from seven capitalist countries including France, Great Britain and the United States. This occurred at the end of the First World War.

In the early days Bolshevist Russia was ostracized by other nations. The United States did not give diplomatic recognition to Russia for sixteen years. The Soviet Union was not invited to join the League of Nations for many years. For three decades the press of the outside world has been hostile to Russia and to Communism. The attacks in the press on Mussolini and the Japanese war lords and Adolf Hitler were not more extreme than those launched against Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin and other Communist leaders.

The third reason they are afraid is found in the American atomic bombs. We Americans have a feeling of self-righteousness and we cannot understand why anybody should be afraid of us. It is difficult for us to realize that the Russian leaders are constantly saying that we are the kind of people that manufacture atomic bombs and then use them in the indiscriminate destruction of men, women and children in other lands. They say that we Americans are the only people who are cruel enough to use atomic bombs on vast centers of human beings.

Thus we see that Russia's aggressiveness is due to the enthusiasm of Communists for their cause, to their philosophy of life with its reliance upon material force, and to their fear of attack by capitalist nations. For these reasons they are endeavoring to make Russia as mighty as they. (See next page).

> "The nations are now headed straight for war. Something must be done about this race toward death."

Kirby Page is one man who has given his life to "peace-making." For thirty years he has written and spoken on the subject. A non-Mennonite minister recently declared to the editor that he thought that Kirby Page had the best answer to U. S.-Russian relations. Dr. Page is a man of a deep personal salvation experience and believes that the experience of personal salvation must be extended in one's relationship to all the peoples of the world. He is the author of many books, one of the latest being, Now Is the Time To Prevent a Third World War. We are happy to announce that Dr. Page has consented to write a number of articles for The Mennonite.

In Washington our own political leaders likewise place their trust in military power. They maintain that the only way a nation can be safe is to be adequately prepared for war. They believe that if a nation is sufficiently well armed, it will be safe, and that if it falls behind in armaments it will be in extreme danger of invasion. This idea is accepted by a big majority of all the American people. Thus our country is in the grip of the military mind.

The military argument is that a nation must be ready to use all the weapons likely to be used by the enemy and that it must have at its disposal more of these weapons. Thus our military leaders are committed to the idea that the end justifies the means. When considering national defense the supreme law is the doctrine of military necessity. They insist that whatever is necessary is right.

A vivid illustration is found in the use of the atomic bomb on Hiroshima. The military men were convinced that the use of the new weapon was necessary in order to bring the war to a speedy end and thereby save the lives of American soldiers. So they concluded that it was right to use the atomic bomb. The conclusion that it was right to kill 100,000 men, women and children, and to destroy a big city was based solely upon the doctrine of military necessity. No effort was made to prove from the Bible, or by reference to the mind of Christ, or by citing moral codes or ethical principles that this mass slaughter was right. The idea was accepted that whatever appears necessary is right.

That this idea is still accepted by leaders of our government is demonstrated by our preparations for war. The military mind assumes that it is right for us to manufacture and be ready to use all the most destructive weapons of warfare. For this reason we are manufacturing atomic bombs which General MacArthur tells us are a thousand times more destructive than the ones we used. Albert Einstein and other atomic scientists inform us that it is now possible to manufacture these super-atomic bombs in great quantities. Our government is likewise working on the control of bacteria and deadly disease germs as weapons of war with which to destroy growing crops and live stock in the land of the enemy and to produce plague and pestilence to wipe out the population. The justification used is that the Russian are planning to wage biological war and therefore it is necessary for us to be prepared to use these weapons of suicide.

If we are to understand the significance of this race of armaments, we must realize that there are two forms of atheism. Some atheists say there is no God and with their lips they deny the very existence of spiritual forces. Other individuals say with their lips that they believe in God, but behave in ways that prove that they really do not believe in God enough to do his will and to trust his way. The leaders of Soviet Russia say they do not believe in God. The military leaders of our nation frequently assert their belief in God, but they commit themselves to the doctrine of military necessity and maintain that whatever military action is necessary is right.

This race of armaments is leading us swiftly toward the brink of war. At the present rate of military appropriations, the peoples of the various nations are spending thirty billion dollars annually on preparations for mass suicide. If this race is continued by 1958 the nations will spend 300 billion dollars on armaments. This titanic sum will buy all the weapons needed to kill a substantial part of the human race and to destroy our civilization.

We Christians are called upon to take a resolute stand against the doctrine of military necessity and to do everything within our power to end the race of armaments. In the next issue of this magazine, I expect to discuss the question: "What Does God Want Us To Do About Russia?"

FROM DR. KIRBY PAGE'S COMING ARTICLE

"God knows that the aggressiveness of Russia constitutes a terrible threat to other nations.

"God's grief becomes all the more acute when he beholds the behaviour of the leaders of our own government in Washington. He hears them declaring solemnly that the only way a nation can be safe is to be adequately prepared for war."

PENTECOSTAL POWER

AN EDITORIAL

The early church triumphed over the world because it out-thought, outlived, and out-died the world—so it is often said. However, it is not too much to say that any one of these or all three together would not have given the church the victory had it not also and supremely out-loved the world.

How many hundreds of thousands of sincere Christians have sought to duplicate or have duplicated in their lives or in their church another Pentecost. They have called it a "second blessing," and that it indeed is for it brings into the life resources hitherto unknown. They have called it new freedom, and it does release the personality for more efficient service. They have called it "sanctification"; and, surely, it cannot be denied that they have found happy deliverance from besetting sins. They have called it new insight, for it is true that they "see" things in an altogether different light. They speak of this Pentecostal experience as a complete deliverance from fear—fear even of death itself; for death, the usual boundary between physical and spiritual life, has come to have no reality for them. In fact, the question may fairly be asked can any of these experiences be denied the Biblical account of Pentecost?

But having said all this, one factor that is dishearteningly evident about all the directions that various people and churches are given concerning the way to experience another Pentecost is their vagueness. The instructions are given. They are applied. There are no results. Then there are questions, and the only answer is, "It just can't be put into words; you have to experience it!" Thus a vicious circle is complete; one is no further than when he started. Can it be true that an essential, in fact, all-important ingredient was omitted in the giving of the recipe?

Love, as it was recently called to the attention of the writer, is that ingredient that has so often been omitted in the prescription. Love in the Pentecostal experience is the equivalent of baking powder to the cake or yeast to the bread. It seems so small, so common, so ordinary, and yet it is the difference between a flat empty, half-hearted and often compromising witness to Christ and a well rounded, dynamic Christian testimony. Love is, in fact, the key to the secret of Pentecostal power; it verily sets aflame our minds which we have sought to have filled with the minds of Christ, our wills which we have so painfully sought to bring under the subjection of the will of Christ—thus producing a single flame that takes the shape of a tongue of fire, a living witness like the Word from heaven or like John the Baptist, a "voice."

It is not enough, then, to be able to out-think the world. The mind by itself cannot duplicate Pentecost! All the neatly and carefully worked out formulas, charts, and creeds in themselves cannot make the fire of heaven burn anew in the hearts of men and women. It is even possible that those who excel in the matters of the mind, in matters of doctrine, may lead people astray. They may know "all mysteries and all knowledge," yet if they harbor a speck of hatred they are "nothing." The best minds are twisted by hatred, by jealousies, by envy, by bitterness so that they can no longer be trusted. The mind, however, that has been set aflame by the love of Christ is one that the world simply cannot match; for love of Christ alone can straighten out crooked thinking about life.

Likewise the greatest amount of self-sacrifice apart from the living flame of the love of Christ cannot reproduce a Pentecost. "If I bestow all my goods to feed the poor . . . . and have not love it profiteth me nothing." Clearly, the Christian life will be a disicplined sacrificial life! but that is not enough, for the world has plenty of that. Even the discipline to the point of fearlessness of death can be matched by the world. In fact, it is crystal-clear that the world uses such rigid selfless disciplines for the most satanic ends. Perhaps, that is why so much of the world has gotten into the Church. But just set that discipline and self-sacrifice aflame with the purifying love of Christ and there is set up an eternal flame that can cancel out the hatreds of millions. The world simply has no match for a consecrated life burning with the love of Christ.

Love is the neglected element in the teaching of the Church concerning Pentecostal power. When the church will again fully recognize that love alone can give her complete control of all her gifts and make her supremely efficient in the use of them, then and then only will she once more rise victorious over the world. But until then individuals will still be groping in the dark for certain kinds of experiences—yes even the church itself will vainly be trying to reproduce Pentecost without the one element which is most powerful in the spiritual realm, the one element that more than any other characterizes the nature of God himself—self-giving and self forgetting redemptive LOVE.

Religious News Service reports from Rome that the Mennonite Central Committee has made available two scholarships to Italian evangelical nurses. Scholarships which offer finishing courses to be taken in the United States are aimed at training nurses who will become instructors at a proposed evangelical nurses' school to be erected in Turin.

The Issues for Amsterdam

(The following news release, written by Robert S. Bilheimer, tells of the great meeting of churches from all over the world that is to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, next summer.)

Next summer, in August, 450 people will gather together in Amsterdam, Holland. They will represent 134 churches. Many persons who are qualified to know, feel that this meeting in Amsterdam will be one of the most important events in the history of the mighty Christian Church. Surely the bare facts of the meeting will not call for such an opinion. The meeting is small, it will not vote huge sums of money; it will make no political rearrangements; it may to many hardly seem relevant to the great issues which plague mankind. Yet the judgment is justified, for if God has His way with this first Assembly of the World Council of Churches, vast parts of the Christian Church in the world will be renewed and unified.

One of the powerful contributing factors to the effectiveness of the Assembly is the process of preparatory study which has preceded it. Thirty-seven authors have been chosen, and four volumes have been prepared, but behind these facts stands a long period of intense consultation among the leading minds of the Protestant and Orthodox churches—a consultation which has clarified issues, brought persons closer together, and prepared a solid spiritual and intellectual foundation for genuine advance at the meeting of the Assembly at Amsterdam. This process has come to be known as that of ecumenical study: a kind of international school, carried on by conferences and correspondence, in which persons from different nations and churches advance a conviction, send it out in an article for criticism, and rewrite the original on the basis of constructive comments.

The ecumenical study leading up to the Assembly of the World Council of Churches has involved exactly this process, over a period of two years. Three meetings of leading Christian thinkers, drawn from different countries and churches, have been convened. First and second drafts, and in some cases third drafts, of the different chapters have been prepared, and subjected to the most intense criticism. In America alone, 500 people have been asked to comment,—laymen, clergy, educators, theologians, church executives alike, so that a representative cross section of opinion might be gained.

The whole is thus far more than an interchange among professional theologians. It represents a genuine meeting of minds, not always in agreement, indeed sometimes in the sharpest disagreement. It is part, and a fundamental part, of the painful process by which the disunity with which we are beset in the Body of Christ is fashioned out into a recognizable unity.

Moreover, the process has helped greatly to clarify issues, and in some cases to locate answers, on the great themes with which the Assembly will be dealing. The general subject of the meeting is "Man's Disorder and God's Design," and the theme of each volume is as follows:

The Universal Church in God's Design
God's Design and the Church's Witness
The Church and the Disorder of Society
The Church and International Affairs.

The first study—in which the participating Americans are Conrad Bergendoff, Clarence T. Craig, Bishop Angus Dun, Georgia Harkness, John A. Mackay, and H. Richard Niebuhr—goes directly to the Bible for the basis of our thinking about the Church; and though different interpretations appear, it is agreed that our unity is to be found in the Biblical message concerning the Church. Moreover, it is clear, especially through the remarkable chapter on new life in the Church, that there will be no unity without a great rebirth in the Church's life. Beyond this, the ecumenical movement, and its organizations, are treated in order to show their relationship to this renewal and this unity.

In the second volume, "God's Design and the Church's Witness," the subject of the evangelistic task of the Church is viewed for the first time on a comprehensive, world-wide basis. The unequivocal position of the book is that evangelism, that is, the work of bringing the Gospel to life in the hearts of men the world over, is the first task of the Church. The Commission is a representative one, in which the Americans are Robert S. Bilheimer, Robert L. Calhoun, Walter M. Horton and Kenneth S. Latourette, and there are different views as to how this Gospel should be stated; but on the question of the evangelistic duty of the Christian there is no doubt. An impressive survey of effective evangelism is at once encouraging and disheartening: there is universal evidence of the hunger of people for faith in God, and in many places people are joining the Church by thousands. Yet there is still to be discovered a really significant "break through" by the Church into the hardened secularism of our time, nor is there evidence that the Church is able to stem the tide of spiritual disintegration in Western society which is so ably analysed in one of the chapters.

The third study of "The Church and the Disorder of Society" is concerned almost exclusively with the prime problem of western society, namely the need to achieve a constructive balance between freedom and order or control in a society which has become almost wholly mechanized. Two brilliant analyses, one particularly indicating the consensus which exists among Christian and secular thinkers alike, states the problem clearly. How may the Christian Church contribute to the achievement of a truly responsible society, in which man is free, but in which the machine and all its benefits are controlled for the common good? A statement of the goal of Christians in this regard is followed by a statement of some of the strategies which may be followed by the church, the whole indicating the chief social issue which must continue to challenge the mind of the Church until the key answer is found. A Parable

BY D. D. EITZEN

An egg can be ignored and left to spoil.

Carnal-minded man thinks of the egg in terms of a sandwich or an angel-food cake.

But the food value of an egg is purely incidental. (Under natural conditions a hen produces only enough eggs for two broods of from twelve to fifteen chicks per year.) The egg cell is too small to be seen without the aid of a magnifying glass. The rest of the egg is food for the development of new life within the egg.

The egg is the symbol of life—of new life. It is a unit of latent meaning—of astounding potentialities—the matrix (mother) of a new being.

But—creativity is a hidden and dormant force within the egg. It must be brooded over to perform its God-intended mission. It needs to be surrounded by warmth—the proper amount of warmth.

Deep and dormant in the heart of man is the image of God. The understanding and the all-including love of God is a hunger in the heart of man, but his day-by-day cares hide from him an awareness of his "high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The Word of God is unmistakably clear that the warmth of Divine love is the miracle of rebirth. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son. . . ." "The Lord is merciful and gracious. . . ." "In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted."

"There is no place where earth's sorrows
Are more felt than up in heaven;
There is no place where earth's failings
Have such kindly judgment given."

"Be ye merciful as your Father also is merciful . . ."

In the intimate interactions of the family, nothing is so productive of harmony as an acute sensitivity of the adults for the needs of the other members of the family. This is the supreme factor productive of emotional and spiritual maturity of the young.

Pastors, teachers, physicians and others whose vocational responsibility it is to minister to the wholeness of their fellowmen find that empathy is the warmth that hatches a creative faith.

The psychotherapist testifies that surrounding the emotionally disturbed person with an attitude of acceptance and an understanding of his fears and his defenses is the miracle that delivers the patient from the tomb of utter despair and lostness into a new life of gratitude and joyous dedication.

Fill me with life anew,
That I may love what Thou doest love,
And do what Thou wouldst do."

The fourth study on "The Church and International Affairs" strikes at three points: the overwhelming tension between Russia and the United States; the fundamental importance of religious liberty, and the responsibility which the Church has for exerting its ministry of reconciliation within the struggle of international power politics. It is too early yet to indicate the way in which this volume will state the problem, or the recommendations which will stand out from it. More of the process of ecumenical study is needed: drafting, criticism from many nations, redrafting, before the volume is ready for publication. The forthright attack of leading lay-people and clergy—from America John Foster Dulles, O. Frederick Nolde, Reinhold Niebuhr, Bishop Ashton Oldham, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, F. W. Rennie and Mrs. Leslie E. Swain—on this problem however, particularly in an ecumenical setting, is a source of strong encouragement.

Even this cursory account of some of the major issues which have raised themselves in the total study, indicate that the recurring theme throughout the four books is the renewal and unity of the Church. In each book there is a vigorous criticism of the present thought and life of the Church; in each also repeated demand for radical renewal. This is undoubtedly the overarching question which the preparatory study will present to the Assembly: can that happen which will bring to the Church the new and vigorous life which God is ready to give us?

Pentecost—Event—Experience

by Harold Burkholder

Pentecost was an event as well as an experience. The Lord Jesus foretold the event (John 14:16, 26), as well as the experience (Acts 1:8), to His disciples. Pentecost, as a completed event, will never be repeated. However, God's redeemed children still experience its power as they are filled with the Spirit.

The coming of the Holy Spirit, like the coming of Christ, was a predicted Advent. The first Advent of Christ took place in God's "fullness of time" (Gal. 4:4). According to Acts 2:1, the Advent of the Spirit took place "when the day of Pentecost was fully come." God's "fullness of time" suggests a scheduled rather than an accidental appearance. Therefore, the Advent of the Spirit, as an event, was not dependent on mortal man, but on the plan of God.

Pentecost is also an experience. Jesus said, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." (Acts 1:8) The waiting, praying disciples experienced Pentecost because they had met God's prescribed conditions. A Pentecostal experience is still limited to those who are willing to pay the price. Although every Christian is commanded to be "filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5:18), he must first meet the conditions of infilling. Sin must be confessed, self must be crucified, and Christ must be exalted.

The power of the Holy Spirit is indispensable in our Christian service. Let us never substitute education or organization for what He alone can provide. It's "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." (Zech. 4:6)

Pentecost was an important event, but have you experienced its power? "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." (Eph. 5:18) "Walk in the Spirit and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." (Gal. 5:16)

PRIDE A MAJOR EVIL IN EUROPE

by Bertran D. Smucker

Vienna, Austria, April 26.—Evaluating conditions from this Eastern outpost of Central Europe from a theological point-of-view one is again impressed that the basic cause of the "cold war," which is going here and the continued misery of body, mind and soul, is the evil of pride. This may be seen on every hand among the governments represented here, and more directly manifested on every hand among the many people one learns to know from the different lands. Pride in the expanding Communist state in Russia gives that nation a sensitive self-consciousness which reacts instantaneously, unpredictably and sometimes violently. Pride prevents the now internationally responsible American government and Army from being as patient and understanding as it might be in some cases when its authority and ideology is challenged. Pride causes former Nazis here to keep their mind stubbornly in the same pattern without any sense of penitence for the evils which they wrought. Pride causes many Austrians to boast of their culture, and then to scoff at the Americans and Russians in varying degrees as being uncultivated. Yes, pride continues to breed mistrust in an already fertile hotbed of misunderstanding. We are thankful for those individuals among the occupying powers and among the Austrians whose hearts are set only on peace and view all peoples as potential friends. To have a real understanding and sympathy for all of the different peoples in this city of occupation and a lack of national and personal pride really takes the grace of God.

THE STILL SMALL VOICE

The Still Small Voice is an expression that suggests that maybe because it is so still and small, so shut away and yet so persistent, it is God speaking to us through our subconscious. As sinners we are sinful, self-willed, self-centered. We use our rational, conscious thought to further our selfish aims. But as God-created beings we are also sensitive to the Truth, to things as they really are. What do we do with these impressions? Do we not often suppress them into the dimness and darkness of the subconscious? Are we not tempted to "put them out of the way?" But the Truth cannot be put out of the way. We cannot escape from God. And God speaks to us. We keep it a Still Small Voice as we insist upon our sinfulness. But it is there. In this day we make much of reason, and it is a good gift of God. However, reason is so easily bend to our ends. Conscious thought needs to fellowship with the thought of the Still Small Voice if we are to be saved from going the way of self-will.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The College Octet is planning a tour through the Saskatchewan churches during the first two weeks in May. Their schedule calls for programs both in the afternoons and evenings. We trust that the belated seeding time will not conflict too greatly. Because of blocked roads from Winnipeg to Saskatchewan the group was not able to make this tour earlier. Reports reach us that banks sixteen feet high have covered stalled cars along this road so that snowplows have not been able to keep it open during the last two months.

The Octet is composed of Mary Penner, Mildred Bartel, Grace Day, Lois Bartel, Bruno Epp, Henry Wiens, William Dick, and John Neufeld. Rev. Arnold J. Regier will accompany them on this trip.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

On Monday the men's chorus of the Mennonite Church of Pretty Prairie, Kansas, rendered a sacred concert during the chapel period. This is the second visiting church choir to present such concerts recently. School choirs often visit our churches, and return visits by church choirs are an excellent idea which we hope will be undertaken by more churches. Rev. Orlando Goering and the College Sociology Class visited the State Hospital at Yankton on Thursday. The Y.W.C.A. is collecting soap, thread, yard goods, patterns and other useful items for relief. Our foreign students, Ernest Hege and Jakob Friesen attended a meeting of foreign students attending Mennonite colleges in America. There were thirty-three in the group that met at Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas. Students from Holland, Italy, Spain, Brazil, Paraguay, France, Ethiopia, Germany and Switzerland were present. Also present were the college presidents of the Mennonite colleges. President Unruh and Professor Linscheid attended a meeting in Kansas the past week.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Harry Yoder attended the Eastern District Conference April 29—May 2. He preached at the Richfield Church April 25 and conducted solicitation work in that community. President Ramseyer spoke before the Lima Ministerial Association May 3 on Education for Peace. On May 4 he spoke at a meeting of Bluffton alumni living in Indiana at Fort Wayne YMCA. Miss Moon and Carl Smucker were speakers at an alumni gathering in Columbus May 6. William Keeney, '48, spent several days in Washington D. C. working against UMT and conscription. Students and student organizations contributed the expenses of the trip. He had some interesting experiences in contacting legislators. The college choir gave a program in the Central Church of Christ, Lima, Sunday evening, April 25. Alice Ruth Pannabecker, Joanne Bowen, and Robert Ramseyer gave a program on race relations in the Dalton Mennonite Church, Sunday evening, May 2. Helen Bohn, Pandora, Ohio, has been chosen as president of the Girls' Gospel Team for next year.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Muriel Lester, the saintly English Christian leader, greatly helped to give us a larger understanding of the life of prayer. Sessions were held on the meaning of prayer, different types of prayer, how not to pray, books on prayer, and great men of prayer in addition to actual sessions of prayer. Muriel Lester came here from Goshen where she had addressed the Goshen College assembly and participated in a larger city meeting. She also referred to her inspection of Mennonite relief work in Europe, and was particularly high in her praise of Peter Dyck and his leadership in connection with the exodus of Mennonites to Paraguay.

Arnold Nickel has returned from his interesting week in Washington with the Mennonite representatives. He will report to the student body on Monday.

Professor Marvin Dirks and Don. E. Smucker will lead the Northern Indiana Youth Rally to be held at the Silver Street Mennonite Church May 15 and 16 near Goshen, Indiana.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The seventeenth annual Booster reception and program, given by the College in appreciation of the support shown during the past year, was held on April 30. Dr. Karl A. Menninger, co-founder of the Menninger Foundation, director of the Winter Veteran Administration Hospital, and nationally famous psychiatrist, addressed over twelve hundred guests on the general subject of mental health, describing the work of his hospital and stressing "If We Can Love" as the key to its entire therapeutic program. Preceding the lecture and a thirty-minute orchestra concert, Miss Louise Duerksen, dietitian, supervised most efficiently the serving of a light lunch to the large crowd attending the reception in the Memorial Hall basement. Gifts of more than $60,000 have come in during this year, and cash on hand for the much-needed library is now $21,300. The plan was announced to lay the corner-stone on the sixtieth anniversary, October 12, the building to proceed on a pay-as-you-go basis. At their annual business meeting held earlier in the week, the Bethel College Women's Association reported $11,500 now on hand in earnings for their latest project, the raising of $50,000 toward a new girls' dormitory. Mrs. J. E. Entz was re-elected president for the coming year.

Middle Dist

Wayland, Iowa, April 25, 1948. Spurred by the challenge of Rev. Sam J. Goering's message under the theme "The Mission of the Church Today," the delegates of the Middle District Conference in their business sessions gave approval to the purchase of a retreat grounds and decided to proceed with the building of the First Mennonite Church of Lima, Ohio, a home mission project of the Middle District Conference. These and other decisions were made by some seventy-nine delegates representing 5,242 members of the nineteen churches of the Middle District Conference; they came from a distance of as much as six hundred miles from churches scattered in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri to this little southeastern Iowa village of some 550 inhabitants—a village not far from the cradle of General Conference Mennonitism.

To Purchase Retreat Grounds

A picturesque partially built-up camp site on Ackley Lake in the area of Battle Creek, Michigan, was favorably passed on and William H. Stauffer, Sugarcreek, Ohio, Gordon Leichty, Berne, Indiana, and John T. Neufeld, Chicago, Illinois, were authorized to serve with representatives of the Central District in purchasing the site which is intended to make it possible to expand the program of the All Mennonite Retreat of the Central and Middle Districts.

To Erect Church

Fifteen thousand dollars was the amount set as a goal to be raised by the churches of this district in the next two years. This, together with some five thousand dollars now on hand, will be used in the completion of the Lima Church edfice. This congregation, under the leadership of Rev. Sylvan Lehman, has for a number of years been meeting in the basement, of the partially completed structure. Rev. Ervin A. Albrecht of Fortuna, Missouri, was elected to serve with R. H. Sprunger, Berne, and Rev. Frank S. Harder, Pandora, Ohio, on the Home Mission Committee.

Organize District Brotherhood

In line with a movement gathering momentum in the General Conference at large was the organization of a district brotherhood. Dr. J. S. Schultz, dean of Bluffton College, who has studied the prospect of brotherhoods in the General Conference quite extensively was elected president of the new organization at a special men's meeting during the conference. N. N. Soldner, insurance salesman of Pandora, Ohio, was elected vice-president, while Palmer Moser, manager of the Ford garage of Berne, was elected secretary.

Implement District Planning

September 18, 1948, was set aside as the tentative date for a meeting of all committees and officers of the conference to consider ways of integrating the executing conference work. The various committees—home missions, education and peace—were instructed to lay their plans for the new conference year and have them ready to present to this meeting patterned somewhat after the General Conference Council of Boards Meeting in its intent. The meeting is to be held at Bluffton College.

Encourage Institutional Giving for Schools

The conference responded to an appeal by Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, President of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School, for regular giving toward the current expenses of the Seminary by going on record as follows: "that the conference approve the principle of providing current operating expenses for the Seminary through church budget appropriations."

Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College, had earlier pointed out the need and value of such support to Bluffton College, a school supported jointly by the Middle, Central and Eastern districts, in his report to the conference of the status of Bluffton College. From his report it was also noted that Bluffton College in the present year has its highest enrollment in history, that $133,476.25 of the goal of $250,000 has been raised toward the projects of erecting the auditorium-gymnasium on the Bluffton campus. Rev. J. N. Smucker, pastor of the First Church of Bluffton, was elected representative of the conference on the college board of trustees.

To Stress Leadership Training

"The Church Trains Her Leaders" is the objective adopted by the conference for the present year as suggested by the Education committee. The committee reported on the results of a program of youth conferences of the past year under the objective, "The Church Challenges Her Youth." Conferences were held at Bluffton during the Christmas vacation and at the Seminary, March 5-7, for high school and college age groups respectively; these were intended to present the challenge of the Christ in general and the need of personnell in Christian vocations in particular.

Included in the report of the education committee was the information that a separate retreat is being planned for college age and young adults, which will be held at the Seminary in Chicago over the July 4 week-end. This is in addition to the junior and senior retreats at Camp Mack.

Howard Raid, instructor at Bluffton College, was elected to serve on the education committee with Dr. J. S. Schultz, Bluffton, and Dr. S. F. Pannabecker of the Seminary.

Urge Sound Peace Teaching

Rev. Ernest Bohn, pastor of the Grace Church of Pandora, Ohio, reporting for the peace committee, stressed that in our emphasis upon our doctrine of peace and non-resistance care should be taken not to be guilty of making our peace teaching another gospel; rather, our peace teaching is an integral part of a broader Gospel in the setting of which the peace teaching should be presented. Dr. I. W. Bauman was elected to the peace committee.

Women's Organization Reports Gains

Sixteen conference women's groups reported a total of $8,366.65 in contributions, a gain of over $800 over the previous year. Almost six tons of used clothing for relief was sent by the societies. Mrs. Ira Sprunger of Berne was elected president; Mrs. I. W. Bauman, Bluffton, vice-president; Mrs. Oscar Dieffenbach, Pulaski, Iowa, program committee, and Mrs. Herbert, Sprunger, Berne, sewing supervisor.

Young People Expand Budget

A budget upwards of $1,845 was adopted by some thirty or forty delegates representing around 1,300 young people of the district to carry on their program for the coming year. Of this $1,000 is to go to Andrew Holliman in connection with the home mission project at Paint Rock, North Carolina; $645 is to go the General Conference Young People's Union as the portion for which this district is responsible; and the remainder goes to traveling expenses and other organizational expenses. Robert Amstutz, Bluffton, Ohio, was elected president for the coming year; Dean Niswander was elected vice-president; Phyliss Sprunger was elected to the program committee; Orlin Frey of the Eicher Immanuel Church of Noble, Iowa, and student at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, was elected to the position of field secretary.

Conference Officers Elected

Rev. Olin Krehbiel of Berne was re-elected president. Rev. Ernest J. Bohn of Pandora was elected vice-president. Carl Lehman business manager at Bluffton College was elected secretary.

Conference statistics revealed the aggregate giving of the churches of the conference for all causes to be over $255,000. Highest giving of a single church was Berne with $108,698. Church with highest per capita giving was Nappanee with $97.

The conference accepted an invitation of the Grace church of Pandora, Ohio, to hold its sixtieth session there next year.

Rev. E. S. Mullett is the pastor of the Wayland Mennonite Church which entertained the conference. Musical groups from the neighboring churches at Noble, Donnellson, and Pulaski presented numbers in the course of the conference.

M.C.C. News Notes

Reedley Center to Close for Summer

The Mennonite Central Committee has decided to close the Relief Center at Reedley, California during the summer months. This action is being taken after consultation with the church representatives of the Reedley area. The center will close June 1 and re-open in the fall.

The closing of the center does not mean that there is no longer a need abroad. It is rather an attempt to keep operational costs at a minimum. We would encourage all of our people in this area to make plans to have clothing and other material ready for the opening of the center in the fall, so that they may be processed and shipped quickly at that time. Since the center will be closed on June 1 we urge everyone who has clothing to give before that time, to send them to the center by May 15 in order that everything be packed by the closing date.

Plans for MCC work in Holland

The continuation of the MCC Unit in Holland was approved in the April 24 MCC Executive Committee meeting. These plans for the Holland Unit have been made in view of the invitation of the Dutch Mennonites that such a channel be maintained through which Dutch and American Mennonites can keep in contact. The work there is to consist of the Heerewegen Children's Home with facilities for thirty children and with three American workers on the staff; an office at Koningslaan 58, Amsterdam; active encouragement and support of the Dutch Mennonite peace movement through MCC Peace Section channels, and other incidental services and contacts such as may be possible.

M. C. C. To Continue with I. R. O.

The Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization will meet in Geneva, Switzerland, in the early part of May. It is expected that by that time the organization will be fully constituted, thus terminating the preparatory stage. The emphasis of the IRO during this year is the migration and re-settlement of displaced persons. The MCC hopes to continue working within the scope of this organization, since its shipping facilities and resources have made it possible for us to move a considerable number of our people thus far.

May Begin Leper Colony in Paraguay

For a number of years efforts have been made to establish a leper colony as a relief project in Paraguay. There is very definite need for such facilities to care for lepers (not among the Mennonites, but the Paraguayans). A decree law has recently been made by the government granting a tract of land between Concepcion and Horqueta for this purpose. This location happens to be the exact site where some years ago a Mennonite colony had been started, but was later moved elsewhere. Negotiations are being made for a definite and official agreement regarding the plans for developing this leper project.

MENNONITE CHURCH BORN IN SIOUX FALLS

by Alvin Nickel

April 25 was the birthday of a new Mennonite Church in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. The opening program was held in the Union Gospel Mission Building which we will use for Sunday morning services.

Rev. Jacob A. Tieszen of the Bethel Church opened the program with a season of prayer and an inspiring scripture lesson taken from Nehemiah 2:11-20.

The program which followed consisted of musical numbers by groups from various surrounding Mennonite churches and messages from the members of the Evangelization Committee, namely, Rev. M. M. Lehman, Rev. Edward Duerksen, and Rev. J. J. Regier.

A business meeting was held in the afternoon, and temporary officers were appointed by the Evangelization Committee.

Services are to be conducted by the ministers from Mennonite churches in the surrounding territory until further arrangements can be made for a permanent pastor.

The church has been organized for the convenience of Mennonites living in Sioux Falls and others who do not have a church home.

In spite of the fact that there are many churches in Sioux Falls, there are many souls who have to be reached with the Lord's work.

As a new church we will need your prayers to help us grow as a living spiritual group. We thank the Evangelization Committee and others who have given so much time and effort to this work.

WITH 33 PER CENT OF THE YEAR PASSED ONLY 20 PER CENT OF THE BUDGET HAS BEEN RAISED

With one-third of 1948 passed, only one-fifth of the adopted budget of about $950,000 has come in. The receipts of nearly $200,000 benefitted the work of the cooperating boards and committees variously. The percentages of the individual budgets raised are as follows:

Doctrine and Conduct	48%
Biblical Seminary	27%
Mutual Aid	26%
Home Missions	25%
Emergency Relief	20%
Foreign Missions	20%
Education	11%
Publication	10%
General Conference Treasury	10%
Peace Committee	10%
Young People's Union	6%

Individuals, Sunday Schools, young people's groups, and congregations will wish to consider more carefully their responsibility in this matter.

We must do our best in helping each of the above groups to carry out the assignments which the Lord has Lord has placed upon them.

"Let us not grow weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap if we do not lose heart."—Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary

The Washington Scene

By Paul Goering

May 3. With the defense department producing a new plan for Selective Service and UMT almost daily, the Senate Armed Services Committee trying to combine the two, and the House insisting on a draft only, and with the Army-Navy-Air forces fighting each other for more men and bigger appropriations, the general consensus of opinion here is that the military program is a confused mess.

Defeating an attempt to delay action until the Senate Committee decides on its bill the House Committee voted twenty-eight to five to report out the Andrews bill, H. R. 6401. The bill provides for drafting males nineteen through twenty-five for two years of service. C. O.'s will be deferred.

The testimony of General Evans of the Reserve Officers Association and Maj. General Reckord of the National Guard Association before the House Committee brings out the fact that the Army has studiously neglected the demands of the reserve organizations for assistance with funds and ignored the congressional directives for building up the reserves in order to force UMT on the country. For the full story get a copy of the hearings on April 22 from the House A. S. Committee.

Legislation for displaced persons was helped along when the House Judiciary voted out H. R. 6396 last week. This bill would admit two hundred thousand D. P.'s during the next two years and is regarded by interested groups as the broadest legislation to expect. Passage appears favorable. Action on both the House and Senate bills is expected this month.

Other events for the woman were: the annual birthday party and a program on the Montana mission work.—Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: On the evening of May 2, Rev. and Mrs. Albert Jantzen, former missionaries to China, told us about their internment experiences during the last war.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: Thursday evening, May 6, our church will have an Ascension service, at which service the baptismal candidates will have an opportunity to give their testimonies. Correction: The Men's Chorus gave the program at Emmaus Church on April 18, instead of April 11, as previously stated.—Ella Voth, Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: Missionary Frank Mannings were guests one evening. Mrs. Manning spoke of the need to evangelize Africa. Mr. Manning showed slides. The local Ladies Aid presented them with a shower of useful gifts which they will need when they return to the field. Milford Brandt and Elvena Unruh were recently married.—D. S. Thiesen, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: The Women's Missionary Society had as their guests the ladies from the Pratum Church, April 22. The remodeling of our church is almost completed.—Beverely Yoder, Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: April 18, the Men's Gospel team of the college was the guest of the C. E. Society. Kenneth Bauman gave the messages. During the pastor's absence at district conference the pulpit was occupied both morning and evening by Dr. T. A. Lambie, medical missionary in Palestine. In the evening both Dr. and Mrs. Lambie spoke and showed beautiful color pictures of Palestine.—Anona Landes, Corr.

—Pratum Church, Pratum, Oregon: J. J. Esau was with us April 28. The church has been painted and decorated this spring. Shrubs have been planted around the parsonage. We are having a very late spring.—Corr.

Gulfport in the South

People, Social Status, M. C. C. Voluntary Service

If you were traveling along the Gulf coast by car you would likely pass through Harrison County, Mississippi, on U.S. highway No. 90. As contrasted with the endless swamps interspersed with longleaf pine and live-oak groves along most of the coasts, your travel through Harrison County would be along a beautiful shoreline. Out of the Gulf of Mexico you would see countless fishing craft and pleasure boats. The shore, whose twenty-five miles are lined with a concrete sea wall to protect the roads and homes from high waves, is shallow and deepens gradually. Scores of piers are built out 1000 feet or less into the gulf to facilitate swimmers, boats, and allow for picnicking and vacationers.

Along the upper side of the road are many beautiful homes, some even from the colonial times when the French ruled the country. Here you find Beauvar, the home of the Confederate president, Jefferson Davis. Here Longfellow spent a winter while studying the Evangeline country in Louisiana, and here live people such as Dorothy Dix, writer of the column, Advice to the Lovelorn. Live oak trees with a spread up to one hundred and fifty feet shade the road, and many create a semi-twilight if they happen to be draped with the gray-green Spanish moss. In spring the azaleas look like heaps of beautiful pink blossoms rather than bushes with branches and leaves.

Yes, this view of Mississippi would make it seem a veritable paradise, however if you would turn inland at almost any point for several blocks you would discover many miserable hovels jammed together, housing large families of poor whites and Negroes. Missisippi is a land of contrasts.

The Southern Disposition

In order to understand the community of Gulfport, Miss., we need to know it is related to the South, which to many of us seems like a foreign country with its different racial composition, history, agriculture, and climate. In general, the South has a homogenous racial group with 99 per cent of its population American, and with the exception of the Negroes it is also 99 per cent Anglo-Saxon stock. In light of this common basis of customs, speech, and outlook on life the Southerner tends to accept strangers with less suspicion and on an equal basis, in contrast to the Northerner who often lives in a commuinity of his own racial or ethnic group and is suspicious of any outsider. It is this common denominator which is the basis for the well-known Southern hospitality. On the other hand it is the background of the Anglo-Saxon population that makes it hard for them to appreciate very different minority groups such as the Negro.

Mississippi Problems

The South has several pressing problems whose roots lie in the predominant agrarian economy, the large Negro minority which remains unassimilated since the Civil War, the subtropical climate Some of these problems include the rebuilding and preserving of eroded and exhausted lands, the unsatisfactory Negro-white relationships, low wage standards, absence of industry, poor health, and educational and religious opportunities. We shall look at these phases of human activity from the state and local point of view. Many people will pick Mississippi as the prime example of backwardness and reaction. While this is not always true there is reason for such assumptions, as we shall see.

Mississippi geography varies greatly and one must not assume that Gulfport is in the Black Belt of cotton raising that typifies central Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia. First, in Northwestern Mississippi is the fertile delta area, a blessing of the Mississippi River, where there are many cotton plantations, thousands of acres in size which have scores of Negro huts dotting the flat landscape. Here are some counties with three Negroes to one white. Second, the northeastern and central part is the rolling hill country with small farms either owned by farmers or rented and which raise corn and cotton with the help of a mule and plow. Third, is the longleaf pine region of the south central part with lumbering primary. Fourth, is the coastal region, flat and swampy in spots, and least active in agriculture. The economic activity of this area in which Gulfport is, is shrimp and oyster fishing, the resort section of the coast, lumbering and agriculture, and some industry.

The Negro and Low Income

Two keys to Mississippi's welfare are the high proportion of Negro population and the comparatively low average income. "Of the 2,183,833 people living in Mississippi in 1940, 50.7 per cent were white, and 49.2 per cent were nonwhite. Of the total only, 5,988 were foreign born. It is well known that the whites

Pen Pals Across the Sea

by Helga Kemnitzer

[The following article has been written by Miss Helga Kemnitzer German student recently arrived at Bethel College.]

Having been asked to write down some of my ideas concerning the correspondence with foreign students, I would like to say at the very beginning that my own experiences during many years have been the best.

German high-school youngsters used to write to American, English, French, Italian, Spanish, and other children before the war. They often visited each other during their holidays. To us it seems to be one of the most sensitive ways to learn to understand other nations.

The German youth has not had a chance to exchange ideas with young foreign people for many a year. They went almost only to the battlefield, and that certainly not to the right place.

Most of the young Germans of high-school and college age are very anxious to come in contact with the youth from other nations. Since it is impossible to travel they try to learn as much out of books as possible. But they would like to add real life to it. They would like to have somebody in a foreign country whom they could ask their questions, to whom they could write their own thoughts. They are interested in everything: in the countries and their population, in their towns and villages, in their politics, economics, are very largely of Anglo-Saxon racial stock." Practically, there is one Negro per one white and only .3 per cent of the people are foreign born. Georgia is second with 38 per cent of its people being Negro.

Low income, the second factor, was $379 in 1940 in contrast to national average per capita of $976. Thus the state capita income was three eighths the national average whereas the rural income was only one third. " . . . the income to farm people in Mississippi is among the lowest in the nation. Low income affects not only the pattern of life from the viewpoint of inadequate purchasing power, but institutional services are adversely affected as well, due to inability of the people to support such institutions. Consequently poor housing, poor health, malnutrition, and inadequate educational income result."

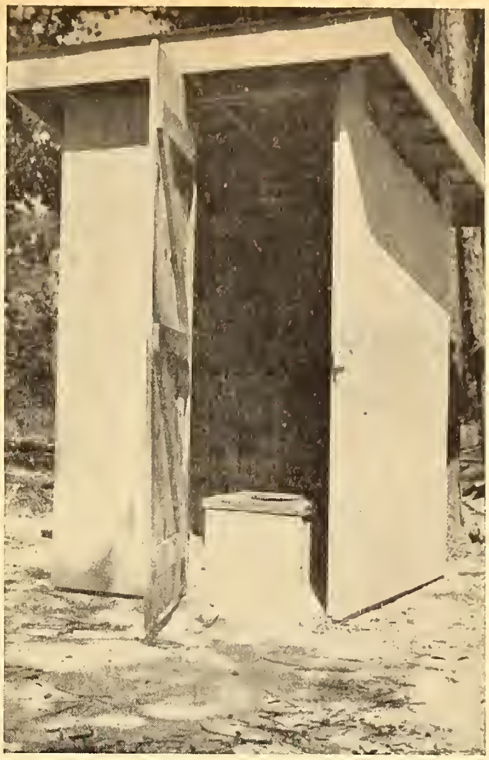
The above mentioned statistics take on meaning when one travels up and down Mississippi and sees the small huts perched on steep hillsides from which the tenant tries to scratch a living or the cabins in the woods of southern Mississippi where the families live by lumbering in an already cut-over area. Furthermore, this evidence of low income is further accentuated when you note the Negro communities whose conditions are usually worse, due to segregation and discrimination.

One inadequate institutional service is education. "Mississippi spends less per child in elementary and secondary schools then does any other state in the Union. She spent in 1930-40, $24 per child. This was less than one fifth of that spent in New York state. The average annual salary for teachers was lowest,$559, compared to a national average of well over $1,000." The obvious reasons for this situation are the low taxable income and the high proportion of school children per thousand adults, that is, 550 children per 1000 adults in comparison to the national average of 350.

Around Gulfport, schools operate for eight month sessions because of inadequate funds. The buildings are often in poor condition, with broken windows, unsanitary rest rooms, and poor equipment. Many teachers even in high school have but a partial college education. Although attendance is compulsory, the law requires attendance only four months of the year so that absences are high, especially in the rural areas. Most white schools are consolidated in contrast to Negro schools which are one-room structures. Near Orange Grove School, possibly the best white rural school in the county, is a little Negro school with about 40 children in attendance.

Mt. Calvary school is housed in a small wooden structure which is worn and shabby. When all the students are present they sit two in a seat and the overflow use orange crates which are stored away for such emergencies. Up to the time Camp Bernard built a small blackboard for them they had none in the building. Water was obtained with an old rusted tin pail from an open well partially filled with rotten boards and refuse. Books were scarce and any semblance of a library was missing. It is small wonder that children hate to attend school. Among the one million Negroes in the state, 100,000 were men with less than four years of school. Of the 22,000 men rejected at induction centers because of illiteracy 20,000 were Negroes. Furthermore, of the 3700 schools for Negroes, mostly of the one-room, inadequate type, almost 1500 of them are housed in cabins, churches, and other makeshift buildings. With such obstacles before them it is small wonder that the Negroes find it hard to prepare for responsible citizenship, a decent standard of living, and an equal cultural personality development.

The state is becoming aware of these situations and is giving subsidies for construction of Negro schools. The Jeannes' Foundation, founded by a wealthy Quaker widow of that name, has asked the Southern states to match funds to train able Negro educators to supervise circuits of Negro schools and help the teachers in improving sanitation in schools like the one mentioned, carrying on a recreational and crafts program, and in other ways, such as the using of health film, to promote an educational program.



The sanitary privy, a weapon against hookworm. Working with the Health Department of Harrison County, the M.C.C. Service Unit built hundreds of these privys.

The health problem in Mississippi is a vital one. Because of low income and ignorance of good diets there are still 4.000 pellagra cases in the state. "Among the communicable diseases, venereal diseases and tuberculosis head the list, with both of these diseases presenting a bigger problem among the Negroes than among white people. In the state today there are about 300,000 cases of syphilis and between 12,000 and 15,000 cases of tuberculosis." Draft induction records show that one out of ten whites and one out of four Negroes had syphilis. This alarming rate is food for thought about the adequacy of our moral, social, and religious forces in the community.

Hookworm is prevalent in the southern part of the state which is relatively frost free. In a survey of 2600 or 65 per cent the county's rural school children the C.P.S. camp found schools with 10 to 75 per cent of the children infected. Some 600 homes were visited and medicine with instructions delivered.

The most effective force in the community is the Health Department or Center. There is one in each for 75 per cent of the 85 counties in the state. The Gulfport center, housed in a modern $65,000 building with a personnel of 30 with a doctor trained in public health as director, is one of the best in the state and nation as well. The Center has a nursing staff to examine school children, visit homes, and advise in child and prenatal care, and conduct clinics. The sanitation division with which Camp Bernard has worked approaches hookworm, typhus, typhoid, and other diseases from the engineering standpoint. When it was found that 55 cases of typhus were reported in 1945 a vigorous campaign against rats reduced the cases to 13 in 1946. The venereal disease office, laboratory, X-ray service, dental clinic for underprivileged children, maternity clinics, and health education program to schools all are part of a big program to fight disease, and that quite effectively.

Mt. Lake C. E. Mission Rally

El Doris Balzer

Listen! . . . . Is God calling you? With this challenge in bold letters across the front of our church and with this challenge, a prayer, within the heart of each member, we observed a C. E. Mission Rally Day. The Gospel and the First Mennonite Churches joined in the afternoon and the evening services. We had as our guest speaker the Reverend A. E. Kreider of Goshen, Indiana. He recently returned from visiting our mission fields. The programs of the morning, afternoon and evening were entirely i the hands of the young people. Highlights of th afternoon session were the testimonies of missionaries Mrs. Orlando Waltner, Rev. C. P. Klassen and th Rev. J. P. Suderman, followed by Rev. Kreider message: "The Urgency of Missions."

A buffet supper was served at 5:30 P. M. fo all young people, to give opportunity to meet Re Kreider personally. Following the meal there was short song service after which a good number share their Christian experiences, what Christ had done fo them, and what He now means to them.

A brief summary of Rev. Kreider's sermons follows:

Underlying all testimonies is a blameless lif expressed in word and deed. It is a challenge to a Christians, as to missionaries, to be at their bes wholly dedicated to Christ. A dedicated Churc makes possible dedicated workers; together the make manifest God. It is the duty of the hom Church to support individually by prayer, interest, an funds, so that the worker may be sustained in physica and spiritual strength. All at home too are called t a life of dedication. We must find our place then fil it to the best of our ability—"Lord what wilt Tho have me to do?" If you are willing, there is plenty t do. The Lord's word dare not fail! The challenge of th Church to carry on is begun but not finished. The urgency of the hour! Time! is it up? "Now the day o opportunity." The world has become smaller. Ther is unrest between nations; people have been uproote through floods, famine, and war; there is a transformation of culture and a desire for education. Al have sinned. All need Christ. He said "Go ye into al nations . . . " "Now is the accepted time." When th door opens will you be ready to enter?

The consecration and reconsecration of many o our young people gave us the wonderful assuranc that our Church is alive and not oblivious to the need The inspiration, fellowship, and encouragement o those hours have kindled new joy and purpose i our lives that will be felt in a far greater radius than Mountain Lake alone.

Potatoes for Retreat Grounds

On Friday afternoon, March 26, fourteen young people planted potatoes on the entire plot of ground the C. E. has rented for the purpose of raising money for the Western District Conference retreat grounds. A very cold north wind with some snow proved an advantage for it made everyone work much harder as well as faster so that by evening 500 pounds of seed potatoes were under the ground. A good friend favored us by taking moving pictures of the procedure and another took in hand to furnish candy-bars for the entire group.

WHAT DOES GOD WANT US TO DO ABOUT RUSSIA?

by Kirby Page

THE BIBLE tells us that Jesus wept over Jerusalem. He loved the people so much and was so eager to help them that he broke down and cried over their pains and their sins. Here we find a revelation of the suffering heart of God. It is not his will that one of his little ones should perish. In the seventh chapter of the Book of Romans, we are told that God prays for us and that His Holy Spirit groans over us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

This picture of God groaning over us should be kept vividly in our minds as we think about the problem of getting along peacefully with Soviet Russia. What God sees and hears in that vast land is enough to make him groan and grieve. He sees 180 million of his sons and daughters in the grip of a terrible dictatorship of the Communist Party. He hears its leaders boasting of their atheism and listens to them explain that there is no God, that religion is a superstition or an opiate. He hears them expound their philosophy of scientific materialism, with its reliance upon material force as the only substantial reality. He sees vast sums of money being spent on all the latest weapons of war. God knows that the aggressiveness of Russia constitutes a terrible threat to other nations.

God's grief becomes all the more acute when he beholds the behavior of the leaders of our own government in Washington. He hears them declaring solemnly that the only way a nation can be safe is to be adequately prepared for war. He knows about the huge sums of money being spent on atomic bombs and biological weapons. He hears the military mind pleading for the adoption of compulsory military training and for the military conscription of our youth. The grief of God becomes inexpressible when he watches the race of armaments become more bitter.

What does God want us to do about all this? What is his holy will for us as we face the threat of totalitarian Russia? Surely the answer is: he wants us to refrain from resisting evil with evil and to overcome evil with good. To resist Russia's armaments with our atomic bombs and biological weapons is evil. We must find a good policy upon which to rely as we confront the evil policy of atheistic Communists.

Let me summarize three measures which should be included in a good way to deal with Soviet Russia. First, we should take the initiative in ending the race of armaments. We should seek to negotiate a worldwide treaty of disarmament which will include all nations. As our share we should show our concern for the safety of the people of Russia and other lands by stopping all manufacture of atomic bombs and biological weapons. We should destroy our present stockpile of atomic bombs and promise that we will never wage war with biological weapons. Then we should put forth every possible effort to get all the nations to join us in stopping the suicidal race of armaments.

We should remember that for seven years before the outbreak of World War II, Russia's representatives at the League of Nations pleaded for total disarmament. To take it for granted that it is impossible to persuade Russia to enter into a disarmament treaty is a counsel of despair. It is the responsibility of Christian people in the United States to take the initiative and to supply the energy required to bring about a treaty of disarmament and the ending of sheer insanity of the race of armaments.

A second element in a good policy is the spending of our money on life and ceasing to spend it on death. The billions now being wasted on armaments should be spent as our share of world reconstruction. Instead of spending 15 billion dollars annually on the race of armaments, the people of the United States should say to the United Nations: "You may count upon us for 15 billion dollars every year for ten years as our share of the cost of worldwide relief, reconstruction, rehabilitation, and the lifting of standards of living around the earth."

"The truth of the matter is that in a world of sin there is no safe way to live. If we resist evil with evil, we merely make evil worse and increase the common danger. It is more dangerous to do wrong than to do right, but it is not always safe to do right. We must choose between the dangerous way of resisting evil with evil, and the dangerous way of taking up our cross and following our Lord."

Think what might happen if we should supply 150 billions in ten years and if the other nations should put in their share and if all this money should be spent in helping God's people to enjoy abundant life. The spending of this money should be administered by the United Nations and should be used to help the peoples of France and Poland, Great Britain and Russia, China and India, and all other stricken lands. Some of this money should be spent for outright relief of the starving. Much of it should be spent in helping people to help themselves, by providing them with loans with which to buy seed, livestock, machinery and supplies.

Only God can know how great would be the improvement in relationships of people around the earth by the expenditure of 200 billion dollars in ten years on human welfare. It is wrong for the United States to spend 15 billion dollars per year on weapons of death. It would be right for us to spend this amount on means of life for peoples everywhere.

A third element in a good policy would be the strengthening of the United Nations. This requires a substantial improvement in relations between the United States and Soviet Russia. It is the suspicion and hostility between these two nations which is now paralyzing the United Nations. If the peoples of the United States would produce evidence of concern for the safety of the people of Russia and for their physical well being, we would thereby strengthen the United Nations. We could increase the safety of the Russians by destroying our atomic and biological weapons. We could help to raise their standard of living by transferring expenditures for armaments to investments in human welfare in Russia and in other lands. This would be right and would rejoice the heart of our loving Father God.

And all this we would do if we could be given a guarantee that Russia would respond and would live with us in a friendly spirit. No such guarantee can be provided. The Communist leaders of Soviet Russia might take advantage of our disarmament and of our generosity. The hope of averting war is that the Russians would be moved to moderate their aggressiveness if we showed deep concern for their safety and for their welfare. But a guarantee cannot be provided.

This brings us to the very heart of the Christian gospel. Nowhere does Jesus promise us that if we will do right we will be safe. On the contrary he warned his disciples that if they would come after him, they must take up their cross and follow on. We are called upon to follow Christ not because it is safe but because it is right, it is joyous, it is redemptive.

The truth of the matter is that in a world of sin there is no safe way to live. If we resist evil with evil, we merely make evil worse and increase the common danger. It is more dangerous to do wrong than to do right, but it is not always safe to do right. We must choose between the dangerous way of resisting evil with evil, and the dangerous way of taking up our cross and following our Lord. To spend 15 billion dollars annually in a race of armaments with Communist Russia will not provide us with safety, but will rather bring upon us the war in which peoples of many lands will be victims of the common suicide.

Our present danger is all the greater because so many people prefer to run the risk of doing wrong than to face the risks of doing right. We Christian people are called upon to find the will of God and to follow wherever he leads us no matter what the risks and what the consequences. It is better in every way to run the risks of following our Lord. Surely it is better for a Christian to die because of his fidelity to Christ than to run the risks of being killed as he fights with the weapons of evil.

All this means that we should find a good policy in dealing with Russia and run the risks of following that good way. This is not safe, but it is safer. It is right, it is redemptive, and it brings the peace of God that passes understanding. What God requires of us is fidelity, faithfulness, loyalty. Thereby we provide God with opportunity to enlighten us, guide us, and empower us. God's way is still the way of overcoming evil with good.

WE HEAR a great deal about the need of saving our democratic way of life against the onslaughts of Communism. What kind of democracy is worth saving? The Russian Communists boast that they have true democracy in that a group of leaders carries out the will of the people. We would not call what the Russian Communists have democracy. The American version of democratic government is that it is a government of the people, for the people and by the people. Is this idea of democracy true and does it hold hopes for a better world? If the will of the people is made supreme, is that safe? Is Dr. Rachel King perhaps right when she says, "A democracy whose purpose was not intended to be freedom to let men follow the will of God as they see it, but freedom to let men follow their self-regarding, self-centered desires, would not be holy but would be antichrist?" Is it not true that democracy is safe only when people strive to fit themselves into the revealed will of God?

IT is sometimes suggested that The Mennonite carry more devotional material. This is our aim. Perhaps, in the face of various handicaps, attention should be called to the devotional book reviewed in this issue. The Way by E. Stanley Jones is the product of a man, who exhausted spiritually and physically, found The Way in Christ and now enjoys radiant health of body and soul. It is a mature product. Jones has talked to a great many individuals about the intimate things of the soul. He used over three thousand references for The Way. He is walking the Way himself. Could the need for devotional literature on the part of our people be more adequately met if ministers called attention to this book?

The Remnant in the Multitude

The remnant always determines history. Abraham leaves the Ur of Chaldea to go to a better land. The desert purified Israelites cross the Jordan. The few religious enthusiasts leave the lust fields and fruitful markets of Babylon to go to the parched country area and the wasted city of Jerusalem. All of these changed history.

Today when man is lost in the face of a greedy and materialistic, mechanistic world, one wonders whether there is a remnant somewhere. It may be a remnant still lost in the multitude, without leadership; nevertheless, a remnant of people whose lives are dedicated to more enduring values than farms, business houses, bank accounts, and investments. Surely there are those who can identify their lot with the lot of everyone else, who feel the tragedy of the moment yet who do not give way to tragedy but live in hope. There must be those who in the midst of the chaos of human striving and blundering can see clearly the creative work of God trying to bring help and light to a benighted humanity. Where is this remnant? Will it come forth from the multitude?

It seems too much to hope that our statesman or diplomats, or specialists in world economics, who design the strategy of world order, will lead such a remnant. They seem to follow only the course of expediency. Man's planning will affect what will come to pass, but it must be planning which takes into account man's relationship with God. We need to learn anew some of the lessons of the Old Testament, that God is in the midst of our common activities and that in the process of history God is seeking to guide humanity. We need to come to understand that there is meaning back of our experiences and that what we do not understand is also compelling and sobering.

God must be scanning the multitudes for persons or groups who have sensitive souls, who can think in larger and more imaginative ways, than what is expressed in literalisms. There must be those who understand life profoundly, religiously; people who are immersed in the struggles and tensions and joys of existing crisis but who have spiritual resources to meet them.

Where is this remnant in the multitude? Is it the Church? Is it the Mennonite Church? Or is it a remnant among the Mennonites?

The World Peace and Brotherhood Mission

by Lester Hostetler

A Church of the Brethren minister, Paul Studebaker, Modesto, California, had the prophetic vision some months ago of organizing a caravan of ministers and laymen to go to Washington, D. C., in the interests of world peace and Christian brotherhood. The result was that eighty-five men and women from fifteen states, representing eight or ten Christian denominations spent three weeks of time and a considerable sum of money in a mission which took them to Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia, where they met to hear various speakers on the subject of peace; and then finally to the capital city to make personal contacts with our congressmen to lay upon their hearts and consciences the concern of the churches for world peace.

The mission received some publicity in Washington and we were met everywhere with the finest of courtesy. A large number of contacts with Senators and Representatives were made, some by appointment, and others at random. Occasionally the group met as a whole, sometimes we went two by twos, and often our contacts were made as individuals. If the legislative bodies were in session, we exercised the privilege, as is common practice, to call a Senator or Representative from the floor for an interview. In addition to these interviews, we also met, usually in a small group, with officials in the Department of State. It was all very interesting, often quite exciting, and always instructive.

What the results of our efforts will be we have no way of measuring. The Bible tells us that bread cast upon the water will be found after many days. The value to the missioners is unquestionable. We learned day by day that the problem of world peace is complex and that a legislator, elected to represent a constituency, has no easy task. He cannot act on a pacifist philosophy which his people do not hold. We appreciated the courtesy with which we were received and the apparent eagerness of congressmen to learn what the thinking of the people back home is. We became convinced that there are many able and high minded men in our government who are working hard and faithfully for what they believe to be the best interests of the country.

—Rev. Lester Hostetler was asked to go on the Peace and Brotherhood Mission by the Western District Peace Committee. He was the only Mennonite in the group of eighty-five. Rev. Hostetler was drawn into an active part in the mission, being made a member of the steering committee. He also presided over one of the meetings the group had and was one of the select five who got into the Russian Embassy.

To our surprise, we found that while nearly every one in Washington is in favor of building up our armed forces, none believed that war is imminent. Congressman Walter Judd stated that in his view the international situation looks better now than it has for many years. The big question mark, however, is Russia. Russia is uncooperative, we were told, continues her Communistic propaganda, and is planning to dominate the world. Her leaders are atheistic revolutionaries and understand no language except that of brute force. It is therefore, necessary to build up our armed might, not actually to go to war, but to impress Moscow with the fact that we mean to draw a line and that we expect Communists to stay on the other side. It is the fear of Russia which causes our legislators to vote, almost unanimously, to spend billions for a large air force and a large standing army. We heard, over and over the argument that the best way to prevent war is to be well prepared. History seems to prove the opposite, but not in Washington.

A small group were admitted to the Russian embassy to hear their side of the story. It was this: that Russia suffered indescribable loss during the last war; that their country is trying to consolidate neighboring states to prevent a recurrence of war; that the common people of Russia want peace, they have never been at war against the U. S. and have no desire to be so now. They cited instances of vicious propaganda against them on the part of the press in America. Russia has made proposals for disarmament in the past and is still interested in that America is apparently preparing to fight Russia, and they are afraid.

The man speaking to us so freely and candidly was the first secretary of the Embassy, a well dressed, well informed, soft-spoken young man, serious, yet not lacking a sense of humor. I do not know whether he was speaking the truth or whether he knew the whole truth about his government and his country. He expressed great appreciation of our mission and the hope that the U.S. and Russia can maintain peaceable relations.

Russia is our major problem and as a mission we urged that our country explore peaceful means of getting along with her. We held that war is not an appropriate countermeasure to the Communist propaganda. In fact, war would weaken our own institutions and in the long run probably greatly benefit the Communist party. John Foster Dulles, member of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations, speaking before the Methodist Annual Conference, held recently in Boston, said that the chances of avoiding war with the Soviet Union are "good" providing the churches of the U. S. wholeheartedly subscribe to a program for peace. He called on the church to reject military strength as a primary defence and to resist all thought of war's inevitability. He predicted that if 1,000,000 Americans would agree to "exercise more conscious self-control and do such things as speak to a friend, write to an editor, or write to a Congressman, the aggregate total effect would be enormous and could make the difference between war and peace."

It was the purpose of the World Peace and Brotherhood Mission to contribute in a small way towards the large fund of good will that is necessary to keep the Ship of State from drifting into perilous waters of conflict and destruction. It is our fervent hope that thousands of people will continue with us to speak peace and pray for peace. If the followers of the Prince of Peace maintain their faith in Him and in their fellow men, there is an excellent chance that we will be spared the horrors of another war in this generation.

WORLD REPORT

Our Non-resistance Witness in India

by Martin H. Schrag

A few days ago, I discussed with an Indian Christian professor the attitude of non-Christian Indians toward Christianity. Both of us were concerned about the prevailing indifference and irreceptivity among the educated and higher castes to the message of the Gospel. He stated that one of the greatest inconsistencies seen by the educated non-Christian Indian is the church's proclaiming of peace, love and goodwill and at the same time endorsing modern warfare. To Indians who have seen Gandhi and his numerous followers renounce military force in the upholding and toward the fruition of non-violence, this appears as a glaring contradiction and a flinching in the crises.

Here in India where there is a closer relationship between religion and the State than in America and where the large mass of the people are born into their religion (Hinduism), the actions of other nations are looked upon as the out-growth of the prevailing religious philosophy. Therefore, when the Christian nations (so considered) go to war and destroy civilization, it is difficult for the non-Christian Indian to reconcile such actions with the gospel of love for which Jesus stood.

In the land of Gandhi I had thought there might be a strong pacifist or non-resistance movement in the Christian Church. Although Gandhi's non-violence and Christian non-resistance are two things, Gandhi has crystalized the thinking of the Indian nation in the realm of non-military methods, and one hoped that this would have been the needed motivation to Christians to develop their genius. But one finds very little carryover. One is rather surprised that, percentage wise, a larger number of Christians are in the army than among some of the other religions in India.

It is, therefore, not surprising to note interest in and receptivity to the Mennonite non-resistance concept. We, who feel that Christ's teachings on love mean non-participation in war and a positive expression in our concern for fellowmen, can be of great help in moulding the thinking of those who see the conflict.

The Eastern District Conference in Retrospect

by Ellis Graber

The Eastern District Conference met in its 150th session at Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pennsylvania, for a four-day conference, April 29-May 2. This, the oldest of our district conferences, consists of twenty-seven congregations totaling 4,254 members. All churches, with the exception of one in Canada, are located in Pennsylvania.

The theme of the conference was "The Church and Missions." Some called it a "Missionary Conference" which it was in several respects. The conference speaker was A. E. Krieder, chairman of the Foreign Mission Board. Having personally visited our mission fields, he could picture all the more vividly the work and the needs in each field. In the first of his five lectures he outlined the missionary task of the church and again raised the challenge heard through the Student Volunteer Movement, "The evangelization of the world in this generation." In the four lectures which followed he considered our conference work in India, China, Columbia and among the American Indians. The messages were truly educational, challenging and inspiring and set a high note for all conference sessions.

The communion service on the evening of the first conference day was made uniquely meaningful through the bringing of the Communion message by Puran Banwar, a student at Bethel College, a native of India, and a product of our mission endeavors. His ringing testimony to the significance and importance of our mission work will not soon be forgotten and brought renewed faith in the cause we support.

Then add to all this the message by Wilhelmina Kuyf on Friday evening, the message by a representative of the American Mission to Lepers, the presence of Mrs. S. T. Moyer of India, Orlando Waltner, superintendent of the Leper Home in Champa, India, the Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Friesen, en route to Paraguay, South America, and one can readily understand the stimulating missionary spirit which prevailed. It was a golden opportunity to enrich one's understanding of mission work carried on under the Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference.

Boards and Committees at Work

Reports were presented by the various conference boards and committees. One of the most active of these is the Home Mission and Church Extension Committee. When one considers that eight of the twenty-seven churches in the district are mission churches and that six of these are under the supervision of this committee, one can more readily understand why it is so active. The Committee received about seventy cents of every dollar contributed to the district benevolent budget. This was used to establish churches and to assist those with small memberships. The Committee's recommendation to accept into the onference the congregation of twenty-seven members t Springs, Pennsylvania, was accepted and brings to twenty-eight the number of churches in the district.

The report of the managers for the Home for the Aged showed receipts for operating expenses this year reached a new high of $30,000. Due to expenditures for urgently needed repairs and improvements disbursements were almost as high. In addition to the above the Board last December also launched its Expansion Fund Drive to raise $125,000 by January 1, 1952, and reported contributions to this fund now totaling over $10,000.

The Publication and Historical Committee during the past year inaugurated an Eastern District Conference publication which has been named, The Messenger. At first an experimental publication, it is now to be continued as a quarterly publication during the coming year.

The Peace Committee was also active. It has repeatedly urged opposition to conscription in any form. It had charge of the last Quarterly meeting which centered on Mennonite doctrine. The treasurer's statement showed that seventeen churches had contributed to relief during the year. Total receipts for this cause were $15,000.

Significant Resolutions Adopted

Over seventy resolutions were adopted during the four-day session. Below we give the gist of several which may be of general interest.

1. In view of the help received from the American Mission to Lepers for our work in Champa, India, it was suggested that our churches receive one offering each year during the next two years to help this organization in its work.
2. The conference again went on record opposing Universal Military Training or any form of conscription or armed preparedness.
3. It was again urged that our churches make every effort to devise means to teach the Biblical doctrine of non-resistance.
4. It was decided that the conference continue as a member of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches.
5. The conference expressed itself in favor of continuing the joint meeting with Brethren, Schwenkfelders and Friends.
6. It was suggested that conference churches include the Mennonite Seminary in their budgets with the view of eventually contributing on the basis of $1.00 per member per year for operating expenses.
7. In view of the teaching mission of the Men-O-Lan retreat, it was suggested that the committee in charge consult with the Educational Committee of the Eastern District Conference so that we might have a well-balanced emphasis on Mennonite doctrine.

Conference Secretary Issues Timely Warning

In his report the Conference Secretary made vocal a matter of concern to alert church workers. We quote from his report:

> "There is one serious matter I would like to present. During the year there were 52 less baptisms than last year. The net increase in membership in our district this year was exactly 1/3 of one per cent. This is a rather low rate of interest. In the past 15 years . . . . we have gained a total of 321 members."

The Eastern District, being situated in a heavily populated area with many unchurched people and the percentage of church attendance and participation low needs to give this more serious thought. The matte was not discussed on the conference floor. It migh well be asked, why is it that some of our Genera Conference churches in this district have over period of years been losing membership, that som have barely held their own, and those that increase in numbers have done so all too slowly? The Conference Secretary in his report continues to probe th problem. " . . . . is it because we have not bee sufficiently progressive? Or is it because we hav not been sufficiently evangelical?" All of us need t continue to analyze the situation to find the answe or answers. If the task of this generation is to evangelize the world here and now, we need to begin immediately and in our own land as well as in others.

The Trinity, the Marvel of Marvels

by S. T. Moyer

WHEN ALL nature about us is filled with trinity, we need not stumble over the great Trinity, the Triune God. We see a trinity in all chemical compounds, as solids, liquids, and gaseous states: thus we have ice, water, and vapor. We have three great kingdoms, yet in one basic phase, all one,—the animal, the vegetable, and the mineral. We have earth, sky, water; three genders, masculine, feminine, and neuter; time, past present, future, yet the stream of time is one. It is said that of the countless billions and trillion of snow flakes, no two are ever alike. Yet every one of the countless flakes has a double trinity, is a perfect hexagon. What a dull world it would be if we had only solids, or only present time, or only one kingdom, or only one gender. What a rich world this is because of this triple manifestation.

God likewise has been very rich unto us in manifesting Himself as God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit.

Lest we pass over the richness of God the Father, let us ponder how wonderful He is as a Giver of peace, of pardon, of holiness, of justice, of healing, of judgment, of His Word, of wisdom, of mercy, of forgiveness, of rest, of love.

Does your soul cry out for any of these gifts? Then in sincere pleading humbly ask. He will abundantly give. Have you ever tossed at night, your brain in a whirl, your heart disquieted within? Then pray in all sincerity, and say, "Lord God! give me Your peace," and faith believing, fall asleep.

Do we need healing? "There is available through Christ a healing force from God effective beyond all that medicine can do."

How many walk the streets of our town, go about with eyes blurry, hearts seared not having pardon? The great prison evangelist Beadager tells of the criminals Czarist Russia. Each one who ever committed a crime was given a passport. On that passport was written every crime that he had ever committed, every prison in which he served time. No matter what he did, h could not have this record wiped out. When the passpor was worn out, a new one was issued, and on it was rewritten the full record of every past crime and transgression. The whole past hung everlastingly over hi head like a pall, a terror by day and by night. Escap and release came only in death and the tomb.

In contrast, what a wonderful God of pardon w have. How wonderful, when we go to Him, our Father confess, ask forgiveness in the name of a crucified rise Saviour, turn about face, making what restitution w can, HE, our great God grants complete pardon an wipes out the past. Are you troubled in spirit becaus of sins small or great? Then seek His pardon.

The great words with God are love, pardon, mercy

The great word with His manifestation in flesh i grace.

How many of us must say with Paul, "By the grac of God I am what I am." I Cor. 15:10. We know no the grace of God but through Christ.

Young Bob Swenson had wandered far on the pat of a godless life. Only the prayers and hymns of hi home circle saved him from complete ruination. Finally with all money gone, and all pride gone, in filth an rags he returned home, then left again. The passio for prize fights, for liquor, and for a wild life fough in his soul against the claims of Christ, until Bob o his knees asked God to save him through the blood o Jesus Christ. Then and there occurred the miracle o God's grace. He is the present superintendent of th McAuley Cremorne Mission, 42nd Street, New Yor City.

It is customary for the Indian villagers, as we preac to them, to listen attentively, and sympathetically, an then with appreciation refer to the Lord Jesus as "Bhagwan" or "Aotar." "Bhagwan" means any great one, likeness of God on earth. Many an Indian villager wi fall at our feet and call us "bhagwan," meaning a grea one sent from the unknowable God. "Aotar" means a incarnation. The "bhagwans" have all the failings an

You Can't Pay a $100 Bill with $60

Our General Conference is in the Lord's business. We are confident that he has entrusted our churches with the challenge of entering many open doors.

But the entering of these doors is a very practical thing. In fact, so practical that when our missionaries, for instance, need $100 for the duties assigned them, they find that $60 will not cover their needs. Since the first of the year we have contributed only sixty per cent of the amount needed by May 1.

The reserves in General Conference treasuries would last only a few months were our gifts to be withheld beginning with today.

Ours is a faith work. Faith in the Lord who is rich in houses and lands; faith in the power of consecrated Christian endeavor; faith in the interest and ability of our people to rally to the support of that part of the Lord's work entrusted to us.

As of May 1, with one-third of 1948 past, only one-fifth of the adopted budget of about $950,000 has come in. The income of only one of the committees has exceeded its anticipated needs for the past four months.

The percentages of individual budgets raised are as follows:

Doctrine and Conduct Committee	48 per cent
Biblical Seminary	27 per cent
Mutual Aid	26 per cent
Home Missions	25 per cent
Emergency Relief	20 per cent
Foreign Missions	20 per cent
Education	11 per cent
Publication	10 per cent
General Conference Treasury	10 per cent
Peace Committee	10 per cent
Young People's Union	6 per cent

As stated in the MENNONITE of last week we have received an average of 20 per cent of the budget in 33 per cent of the allotted time.

May we request that you pray earnestly for the work of our Conference? It is a pressing obligation. It will be most difficult to ask missionaries to dismiss evangelists, teachers, and students on the India field, for instance, because of a lack of funds. This will need to be done soon if our giving is not increased.

Shall we endeavor to give account of our stewardship in a worthier way during the coming months of 1948?

"And God is able to provide you with every blessing in abundance, so that you may always have enough of everything and may provide abundance for every good work" II Cor. 9:8, Revised Standard Version.—Walter H. Dyck Executive-Secretary.

meannesses of human flesh. An "Aotar" is a partial revelation of God. The Hindoo believes in ten to twenty-four incarnate beings, and none are perfect. All are partial revelations, with human failings. God the Supreme Spirit is unknowable. The Supreme Spirit created the world they believe, then withdrew, and no one really knows just what God is like. How wonderfully different is Jesus Christ our Lord, Who was the fullness of a holy perfect God come in flesh.

Some of us know God, and His Son, Jesus Christ. But we are not inclined to think of the Holy Spirit as the third Person of the Trinity. We will not have the richness of our life in God until we come to a realization of the work of the Holy Spirit. Dr. Frank Laubach points out, 'Thirty-nine times in eleven chapters the Holy Spirit is given credit for their joy, their power, their courage,—transforming them so utterly that people could tell at a glance who had the Spirit and who did not."

Of course, no one can come to Christ except through the Holy Spirit. But is that all? Ever with me remains the memory of one who for a decade and a half longed to enter a certain type of Christian service. Finally after fifteen years the yearnings were fulfilled. This one later insisted that the Holy Spirit was the power of God by which we come to Him, through Christ, and nothing more. Within three years the life and testimony of this one so deteriorated that resignation followed. This one in service, confronted with limitless power, limited the Holy Spirit, and experienced devastating deterioration.

When John Hyde, son of a Presbyterian clergyman, first sailed to India, a friend in a farewell letter wrote that he was praying that he, Hyde, might receive the empowerment of the Holy Spirit. In disgust and scorn Hyde crumbled the letter in his fist and threw it to the wind on the deck of his outgoing ship. He later repented of his rash act. The prayer was answered. Hyde in the name of Christ in his generation became the mightiest power in the Punjab. The famous Moga school, the great Sialkot Convention, the great church of the U. Presbyterian Mission are monuments recording that answered prayer.

Two great marvels confront us: (a) that Jesus Christ is the fullness of God; and (b) that the triune God indwells in believers. Eph. 3:19 states an almost incomprehensible truth, that we "may be filled unto all the fullness of God." It is God who justifies, Christ who redeems, the Holy Spirit who sanctified. Rom. 3: 24,24.

TRIBUTE TO DR. J. D. UNRUH

When Dr. Unruh's resignation as president of Freeman Junior College becomes effective in June he will have served in that capacity for fifteen years. This is a longer period than that of any of the preceding presidents. His achievements and his influence upon the school have therefore been unusually far reaching. Coming to Freeman as instructor in Social Science in 1930, he became president in 1933.

The most immediate problems facing Dr. Unruh upon assuming administrative duties were financial. Taking over responsibilities when the institution faced virtual bankruptcy, when creditors repeatedly threatened to foreclose, and when even friends of the school had lost faith in its survival was no easy task. Keeping the school going during the depression years with a $63,000 debt took not only courage but business ability and above all faith.

All of these qualities Dr. Unruh possessed. Finally through much work and rigid economy he saw his dream of a financially solvent institution come true in 1944 when the last of the outstanding debts were paid.

Although forced to spend much of his efforts on financial problems, his interests were much wider. Among these was his constant concern for the scholastic dignity of the school. State accreditment officials recognized this repeatedly, and during the period there was never any hesitancy to grant full accreditment. The cultural advancement of the school and community was another concern toward which he worked untiringly.

Though not a theologian, he had a geniune concern for the spiritual welfare of the school. He constantly held to his deep conviction that faith must find expression in daily living. Keenly interested in and appreciative of his Mennonite heritage, he did much in his Mennonite history courses to familiarize and inspire students with Mennonite ideals. His belief in simplicity and the simple life he strove to put into practice both personally and in school activities. The dignity of work mental or physical was another belief he both held and practiced.

The influence of men like Dr. Unruh continues and makes itself felt long after they terminate their period of active service in a given position.

For the coming year the Unruh family will be in Europe. Starting on July 1, Dr. Unruh will assume directorship of the MCC Amsterdam, Holland, office, while Mrs. Unruh will serve as matron at the Amsterdam headquarters. Going with them is their son John.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The College Relief Committee, a joint faculty-student group, is sponsoring a soap drive. Fat has been collected and soap made in the home economics department. Bars of commercial soap have been sold in the college book store and snack shop, students buying these bars and donating them to relief. Paul Goering was a campus visitor May 6 and spoke in chapel. Quite a number of students expect to work in MCC summer service units this summer. Rev. J. N. Smucker was elected by the Middle District Conference to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. A. S. Rosenberger on the college Board of Trustees. Rev. Rosenberger transferred to the Eastern District Conference. The Women's Team gave programs at Nappanee and Silver Street churches in Indiana Sunday, May 9. A combined group, representing the Men's and Women's teams, gave a program in the Berne Church on the evening of the ninth. Lois Oyer, Elizabeth Waterstraw, and Roberta Manges combined in a graduating music recital Friday evening, May 14.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Arnold Nickel presented a report on his trip to Washington D. C. as the representative of this school. Highlights of Arnold Nickel's experiences were contacts with Congressman Walter Judd, a former missionary to China, and meeting with a congressional prayer circle in which he was permitted to make his own testimony.

President Pannabecker announces that a German Mennonite student will be in the student body next year.

The Freeman College choir will visit the Seminary on May 31 as a part of its general tour of Chicago following some concerts in Central Conference churches in down-state Illinois.

Dr. Franklin H. Littell of the University of Michigan will bring a series of lectures on May 18. Dr. Littell wrote his thesis on the Anabaptist conception of the Church.

Our Baccalaureate and Commencement services will be held on Sunday, May 30.

Several members of the staff attended the National Association of Evangelicals which was held at the Congress hotel this week.

Marie Kroeker of Henderson, Nebrasko, visited with us this week on her return from Italy where she served for two years in relief work.

May 9, the leaders of Voluntary Service Units of the Mennonite Central Committee held a worship service here at the Seminary following a two day conference on their plans for the summer.

Staff members also participated in the combined meetings of the Mennonites, Quakers, and Brethren which was held at the LaSalle street Y.M.C.A.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Twenty-five old and new members of the SCA cabinet attended a retreat at Harvey County Park last weekend to review the work of the past year and prayerfully to plan for the work ahead. Rev. Weinbrenner addressed the group in the evening session on "Counselling and Functions of the Student Christian Movement" and on "Resources for Living" for the morning meditation. Adolph Rupp, former Halstead youth and nationally known basketball coach from the University of Kentucky, was the main speaker on May 10 at the eighth annual Buffalo Barbecue, a men's function revived by the Letter Club after a seven-year recess. A Visual Aids Conference, with a demonstration of the latest equipment, was held in the Student Union Room on April 26, with Miss Marjorie Ruth as chairman. In order to supplement the theory of the classroom, Miss Frances Becker has arranged with the Mennonite Publication Office for apprenticeship training on Saturdays for her class in "Office Practice."

Mrs. Elsie Lanning, 5849 North Rockwell Street, Chicago 45, is offering a reward of $500 for information leading to the whereabouts and return of her missing husband, Harry N. Lanning, who is believed to be a victim of amnesia. According to Rev. John Neufeld of Chicago, Mrs. Elsie Lanning is very much in earnest about this matter.

A Church of the Brethren paper suggests that since we cannot all be peace missioners to Washington, we phone several other peacemakers in our neighborhood and arrange to spend one evening planning for peace activities in the community.

NORTHERN INDIANA PEACE INSTITUTE

A Northern Indiana Peace Institute will be held at the United Missionary Church Camp Grounds, Fetters Grove, west of Goshen, on May 29. Albert M. Gaeddert will serve as chairman of the institute which is sponsored by the Peace Section of the M. C. C. The theme will be: "Followers of Christ in a Militaristic World." The morning session begins at 9:30 A. M. Don Smucker will speak on, "Christ and His First Followers." Melvin Gingerich and others will lead discussion groups on, "Scriptural Peace Teachings."

In the afternoon Paul Goering will review "The Current Situation in Washington, D. C." Ministers' and leaders' discussion groups will consider, "Strengthening Our Peace Witness." The young people will think on "Following Christ in a Militaristic World." Representatives of both groups will engage in a panel discussion.

In the evening various men will speak on their experiences in World War I and II. Orie O. Miller will speak on, "A Positive Witness." E. J. Swalm will also speak.

J. R. DUERKSEN HEADS BUILDING PROGRAM AT JANJGIR

Missionary J. R. Duerksen is very busy with various building projects at the Janjgir mission station. Buildings for the Bible school are going up. Under construction is a mess hall and a home for the dean of men, two homes which are to house four married families, and two simple buildings which will serve as men's hostel later on but will first serve as classrooms. Materials are still hard to get, writes Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, but they hope to have the roof up before the rains set in. Bricks are used for the walls with cement for the floors wherever possible.

Last year the Bible school had an enrollment of sixty-five students. At present it is not known how large the enrollment will be when school begins the latter part of June.

Mrs. Duerksen writes that there still is very little opposition to the Christian witness in this area and that there are still many invitations from the villages for workers to come and bring the good news. Mrs. Duerksen is of the opinion that, "The final step of deciding openly for Christ may be even more difficult than it was in the past."

ESTIMATED FOUR THOUSAND ATTEND MENNONITE SONG FESTIVAL

An estimated four thousand people attended the Mennonite Song Festival held in Memorial Hall on the Bethel College campus, May 2.

Twenty-eight churches, with about five hundred singers, participated in the festival. Guest choir at the event was the choir of the Bethesda Church of Henderson, Nebraska. The Henderson church belongs to the Northern District, while all the other church choirs were from Western District churches.

The Women's Association of Bethel College, served lunch to guests during the intermission.

Robert Senner, who served as chairman of the meeting, was re-elected as president at the business session held during the intermission. Other officers are: Arthur Banman, Jacob J. Goering, and Elizabeth Nickel.

The offerings at the Festival amounted to $550.39. The surplus of these offerings goes into an organ fund for Memorial Hall.

A mass chorus of about one hundred and fifty voices sang in the evening. Dr. Walter H. Hohmann directed. The Bethel College Orchestra also participated in the evening program.

Thoughts on a Pair of Shoes

Here is a pair of shoes our son has worn,
But now they are too small;
He is a healthy, happy boy, and he has grown.

He spent glad hours in play
While he was wearing them:
He has run races which he won;
He has played ball
And walked long miles along the lake
To watch the birds he loves so well.
He wore these shoes on many a hike
Our family took on bright spring days
Or golden autumn afternoons.
The shoes are sturdy shoes,
And they have served him well,
But now they are too small.

The shoe repair man has put on new soles,
And we have polished them
And strung them with new laces
Now they are ready for some other boy.

We send them on, and with them send a prayer:
We pray that as they go to some small boy in need,
That they will carry him through many a joyous hour
As they have in the past carried our son.
We pray that the small feet which wear these shoes
May learn to walk in ways of love,
So that when they are grown,
They will not march to war's loud drums,
But follow Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace.

A New Game of Authors

How often have you played the game of authors and wished that someone would think up a new variety?

Here's a new variety.

For instance, play a game of "Authors of Our Great Hymns," and ask questions like the following:

1. What composer of one of our great hymns had hands so big that he could span an octave and a half on the piano keyboard?
2. Who wrote a great hymn while piloting a ship loaded with slaves for sale on the London market and wrote, "I have never had such sweet communion with Jesus as I had on that voyage."?
3. What great hymn was written primarily for use on Saturdays?

We could add many more, but it would take half the fun or more out of the game if we thought up all the questions for you. What you want to do is place your order now for a copy of the HANDBOOK FOR THE MENNONITE HYMNARY which is now being prepared and which is due for distribution some time this summer.

Every hymn has a story behind it, and as you read them you will pause after each one, hating to go on, lest you forget some of the interesting things in the ones you have just read.

The Washington Scene

By Paul Goering

May 12: The Senate Armed Services Committee voted 7 to 2 in favor of its bill S.2655, providing for the drafting of 19 through 25 year olds for two years of service with 18 year olds given the opportunity to volunteer for one year military training in order to avoid being drafted.

Although the House Armed Services Committee turned down any proposal for "blending" UMT with the draft, there is a dangerous possibility that a 6-months UMT will be accepted as a compromise between the Senate and House bill.

The Senate Committee dropped the provision for pay and dependency for C.O.'s in the final bill adopted. The bill provides almost exactly the same provisions as the C.P.S. program in the 1940 Act. The Committee rejected all of the amendments submitted for improving alternative service.

The proposal to defer C. O.'s under the House bill H. R. 6401 will likely be changed on the floor or in Conference Committee so as to require them to do civilian work.

Rep. Allen's bill, H.R.6444, for paying a bonus to volunteers, appears to have little effect on the outcome of draft legislation. Opponents of the draft are hoping that the Allen proposal and the pending fight on segregation will provide a means for defeating the draft.

House Report No. 1881, available from the House Document Room, contains the minority views of the five members of the Committee who voted against H. R.6401.

Book Notes

THE WAY by E. Stanley Jones. (Abingdon Cokesbury, $1.00)

In his latest book, The Way the world missionary, Dr. E. Stanley Jones, has given what he considers an advanced course in human living. The book has one dominating aim and that is to show that the life in Christ is "The Way." The author asserts that we are created for this Way and can be truly happy only in "The Way." He shows how we can get out of the self-life and into the Christian Way which is "The Way." He uses the ladder method a great deal which helps to make the message clear and easily retained. For instance, he gives "Ten Steps to Victory," "Steps out of Oversensitiveness," "Steps out of Indecision," "Steps to Freedom," "Steps to Victory over Jealousy," etc. etc. His points are generously illustrated and all pertinent to life. Whoever reads this book will find many helpful suggestions on how to live the Christian life amid the problems of today. The message may be like balm for those who seek mental and spiritual health. The author constantly keeps before people the need of surrender to God and Christlike living as the key to true happiness. No matter how difficult the problem of life may be, "The Way" never leads to a dead end. Christ is always the way out of our troubles. This the author drives home unceasingly. The book lends itself very well to daily devotional reading. By giving this book one gives much more than a gift.—W. F. Unruh

Young People's Delegates Go to Capitol Hill

Three delegates, representing the Young People's Union and the three Mennonite schools, Bluffton, Bethel, and the Mennonite Seminary, appeared personally before congressmen and senators in Washington, D. C. to give testimony to the convictions of Mennonite youth concerning military conscription and war. The delegates, William Keeney of Bluffton College, Loris Habegger of Bethel College and Arnold Nickel of Mennonite Seminary, spent three days, April 26-28 in Washington on this special mission.

The plan to send delegates to Washington to give voice to the deepest Christian convictions of the church regarding the present drift of our nation toward war, was authorized by the young People's Union on the basis of Resolution 17 passed by the Young People's Union General Assembly at Berne, Indiana, August 25. The resolution states in part that we oppose . . . "as a peace church military conscription of any type or form." In cooperation with the conference schools, delegates were chosen to present directly to the congressmen the unqualified opposition of our church to Selective Service and Universal Military Training of any type or form.

Visit Congressmen of Constituency

The delegates were instructed to visit as many as possible of the Congressmen who have Mennonite constituents. This was done. Where a Congressmen could not be seen, a prepared statement was left with the secretary to give vote to these convictions.

The prepared statement contained some of the following material:

> "The scriptural commands are clear on the matter of the ethics of dealing with the evil in men and with evil systems.
> "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." (Matt. 5:44)
> "Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good" (Rom. 12:9).
> "Bless them that persecute you; bless and curse not." (Rom. 12:14)
> "Render to no man evil for evil." (Rom. 12:17)
> "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." (Rom. 12:20)
> "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12:21)
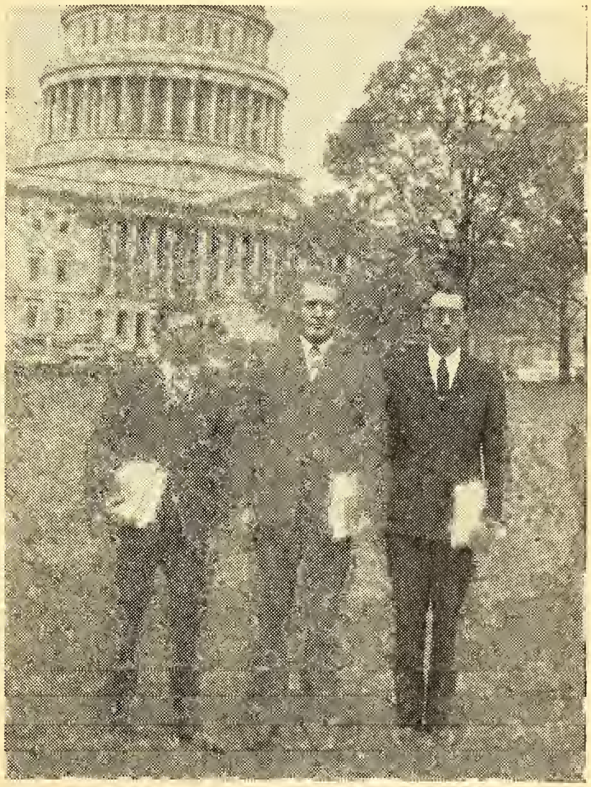
> "As we therefore have opportunity, let us do good unto all men." (Gal. 6:10)



Pictured are William Keeney, Bluffton College, Loris Habegger, Bethel College; and Arnold Nickel, Mennonite Seminary, the three delegates jointly sponsored by their schools and the Young People's Union to present to the Congressmen in Washington, D.C., the convictions of Mennonite Youth regarding military conscription and war.

> We believe profoundly that the highest ultimate welfare of individuals, groups, or nations is served only to the extent that peoples and their leaders believe and live the Scriptural injunctions. He who sincerely professes to follow Christ and takes seriously the Bible as his rule of life and faith dare not ignore these eternal truths.
> We are under no illusion as to the implications of the way of life we advocate in terms of the suffering it may entail. Nor do we believe that genuine peace and good will can be bought at a bargain price. Redemptive suffering is at the heart of the Christian way of life, but it is the only safe way ultimately. We say this in spite of the fact that the history of the Mennonites during the greater portion of 400 years of their existence has been a history of persecution, suffering, death, homelessness and deprivations of every conceivable sort. During the first half of the twentieth century, the Mennonites of Russia, Prussia, and Poland have again seen thousands die a martyr's death, and many thousands more have suffered indignities and torturous persecutions of indescribable intensity. Their numbers have been decimated and their remnants reduced to slavery or to wandering homeless-refugees. Militarism and war has been the scourge which our people have repeatedly encountered and often their only recourse was an attempt to escape. Such persecutions and sufferings have not been entirely absent in this country, especially during the periods of the Revolutionary and Civil Wars, and occasionally in more recent times. It is this evil which was largely responsible for Mennonites leaving their well established homes and prosperous communities in Europe and migrating to this country which offered them a haven of freedom of worship and religion according to the dictates of conscience. We have enjoyed a period of glorious freedom and liberty in this country for which we are deeply grateful. However, we fear that if the scourge of militarism is saddled to this country and her people, the judgment of God is inexorably to follow.

Experiences of Delegates

The delegates report many and varied experiences from their mission to Washington. They met stern oppostion on the part of some of the Congressmen they visited. Likewise, they met with men who understood and respected their position and those who frankly expressed grave concern over the present trend of events which, it was felt, was in the direction of war. One Senator, for instance, felt that the United States would not be in war for another five or seven years because armies observe certain "ethics" by not engaging in war until each side is adequately prepared!! The delegates were greatly impressed by the large number of men that were in uniform on Capitol Hill. The Senator was gravely concerned over the trend toward military control of events on Capitol Hill. One representative stated 80 per cent of the government's budget is used for the military.

A deep and unanimous impression made upon the delegates was the fact that the congressmen do listen to a Christian voice expressing the principles and convictions of Christ on these events. One representative stated that our world's only hope is a United Nations based on the principles of Jesus Christ. Other Congressmen frankly recognize governmental policy is against Christian teaching and they do not try to do anything about it.

Conclusions Made from Visit

Some conclusions the delegates came to are:

1. That the peace churches and other peace groups should do all in their power under God to present their testimony on Capitol Hill.
2. That we need to reinforce our peace teachings in our own churches and communities.
3. That we are in dire need of Christian statesmen. We need to send some missionaries both to Russia and Congress!
4. Congressmen seem to have a great sense of confusion and futility which leads to apathy.
5. It would be extremely difficult to be a Congressman and a Christian. The oath requires defense of the United States and only by redefining the real intention of the oath can you consistently serve the state and God at all times.
6. There is always the temptation to do the expedient thing in the present situation instead of maintaining an eternal or long-range perspective.
7. The New Deal and the Communists are being made the scapegoats and being saddled with the responsibility for a lot of decisions being made by a predominantly Republican group.
8. Above all we need to pray and work for peace while it is yet time, and the time is never too late before calamity actually strikes.

Congressmen Visited

The following is a list of the Congressmen visited by the delegates: Dr. Walter Judd, Congressman from Minnesota; Mr. August H. Anderson, Member of Congress, Minnesota; Rep. Joseph O'Hara, Minnesota; Sen. Hugh Butler, Nebraska; Rep. Karl Stefan, Nebraska; Rep. Walter Huber, Ohio Rep. Raymond H. Burke, Ohio; Rep. Cliff Clevenger, Ohio; Rep. Henderson H. Carson, Ohio; Rep. William M. McCulloch, Ohio; Rep. Bertrand W. Gearhart, California; Sen. C. Wayland Brooks, Illinois; Rep. Joseph Martin, Speaker of the House, Pa.; and Rep. Samuel K. McConnell, Jr., Pa. Sen. Arthur Capper, Kansas; Rep. Geo. W. Gillie, Indiana; Sen. Clyde M. Reed, Kansas; Rep. Rees, Kansas; Rep. Mundt, South Dakota.

Arnold Nickel was invited by Rep. Stefan of Nebraska to attend a Congresmen's Breakfast Club at which a small group of Congressmen meet to discuss the political problems of the day and how they are affected by Biblical teachings. Arnold spoke briefly to this group telling them of his mission. Those present were: Karl Stefan, Nebraska; Robert F. Rich, Pennsylvania; Brooks Hays, Arkansas; J. Vaughan Gary, Virginia; J. Percy Priest, Tennessee; Charles B. Hoeven, Iowa; John Phillips, California; Harve Tibbett, Pennsylvania; W. M. (Don) Wheeler, Georgia.

In addition to these personally contacted, the delegates saw the secretaries of the following: Chan Gurney of South Dakota; Rep. Allen of Illinois; Senator Myers of Pa.; Rep. Cleavenger, Ohio; Senator Taft and Senator Bricker of Ohio; Senator Brooks, Illinois; Senators Ball and Thye of Minnesota; Sen. Capehart, Indiana; and Sen. Jenner, Indiana.

The Value of a Mission to Congress

No doubt there are many Christian people who question the validity of a trip to our nation's capitol for the purpose of bringing our peace testimony to the attention of Congress. In the first place, such an undertaking is valuable in that our peace testimony becomes better known to our Congressmen, and at the same time those who go on such a mission become better acquainted with the views of representatives and senators. A second value that becomes apparent is that the peace witness may become a positive testimony for our Christian interpretation of the Scriptures, and especially of the teachings of Jesus Christ. A third value we may cite is that those who go on this mission may return with a more sympathetic understanding of the problems that our nation's leaders face, and thereby be able to inform intelligently the people at home of the "goings on" in Washington.

Perhaps the greatest danger of the peace churches today is to "hide their light under a bushel," or to withdraw from such responsibilities as are required of us in these strategic times. The peace testimony is not the exclusive possession of the historic peace churches, but is an important Christian principle which must be shared with all peoples. Only as we witness to our peace testimony in word and action, can we expect it to become more vital within our own churches and at the same time reach out to others.

Recreation in the Deep South

(In the Gulfport Area)

The recreational and cultural life of the rural people in particular is limited and inadequate. Miss Dorothy Dickens of the State Experiment Station says, "About the same proportion of the total family living expenses of owners (of farm families) was spent for recreation as for tobacco. Tenants spent relatively twice as much for tobacco as for recreation . . . , forty-one per cent of the owners had radios, while only 20 per cent of the share renters and 14 per cent of the share croppers had them . . . . One of the favorite forms of recreation of families in all three groups was visiting with relatives and neighbors." This was her report of a group of rural families in some pooer countries which she surveyed. As one looks at local recreation, one sees how large a part taverns and so-called night clubs, better known as "juke box joints," are the congregating place for teen-agers and young adults. At this age youngsters drop out of church and Sunday school. One wonders whether the high veneral disease rate is not caused by the lack of wholesome leisure-time activities such as crafts, hobbies, and social activites.

In this respect the city of Gulfport has organized a recreational program recently. At Camp Bernard we have experimented with an educational film program, especially to Negro communities, crafts and hobby classes, woodworking classes, boys' and girls' clubs, and similar activities. It is a needy field in which much can be done to mold human personality and channel energy to constructive ends.

Although the South has always been regarded as the Bible Belt of the nation, the 1940 census reveals that only 35 per cent of Mississippi's people belong to a church in contrast to the national average of 52.5 per cent. Miss Dickens found that in her study, two-thirds of farm owner families attended church once a month or more, while one-third of share-renter families and only one-twenfth of share-cropper families attended. Rural ministers receive meager salaries, have to work hard, and travel much, and usually have three to six churches to serve. It is small wonder that the most promising tend to go to city churches. Typical is the case of a young Methodist minister in northern Harrison County who had six churches to serve in some manner—be it only by one morning or evening service a month. Worship services at infrequent times and a small Sunday school often comprise the sole activity of such churches. The pastor-congregation relations become quite impersonal in such cases. When the deacon of a church was asked to give the address of his minister, he could only tell that he lived in Gulfport. The Negro church in North Gulfport has its minister travel about 50 miles. The Baptist and Methodist churches, which are strongest locally, have begun to realize their responsibility, and are trying to develop their rural ministry. In an evangelization program this spring, one little Methodist church with a membership under 100 added 70 new members to its church. Many people who have moved during the war years or who used to be too poor to have Sunday clothes and collection money can attend now if there is a church that will reach them. Through a Sunday school and worship services, Camp Bernard is reaching a group of people who feel they cannot afford to go to the richer churches. In the more extensive sense the camp carries on a program of religious pictures to the smaller rural churches, gives programs, and cooperates where it can help fill religious needs. A tract distribution program, a service to the county jail, the old people's home, a bimonthly sing at the hospital are some of the other projects.

ISSU

The low economic status is a concern of the B.A.W.I. (Balance Agriculture With Industry) commission which is encouraging northern industries to move to Mississippi by offering land, labor, and often buildings, as well as a period of tax exemption. As a result, Gulfport has a sizable garment factory, and a large Phillip's Milk of Magnesia plant is to open soon. This means a steady source of income and a chance to raise standards. During the war, numerous near-by airfields furnished employment. The fishing industry was unionized, and by a series of strikes won much better wages for fishermen who had been poorly paid. As a result the typical fisher hut with one room housing several families or up to fifteen persons is disappearing.

We have sketched some of the desperate needs of the community not merely to criticize it but rather to show how national, state, and private agencies like Camp Bernard are approaching these needs. After all is said, Gulfport is a community with undeveloped resources and advantages. Its proximity to the coast makes for cool summer nights and warmer winters. Pecan raising, tung grove development (the oil is a dryer in varnishes), dairying, and other types of agriculture are profitable here.

Those persons interested in special trades and business find that there are opportunities in this region since it is just changing from the lumbering economy to a more permanent agricultural and industrial state.

The Mennonite community of some fifteen families has suffered a bit in the depression era and in establishing itself in a new environment, but now it is known throughout the county for its good farms and agricultural output. Two men who were at Camp Bernard during C.P.S. have made this community their home and others might follow their example.

Probably the secret for those coming in from other states to farm is expressed best by one of the more successful Mennonite farmers who says that "one must learn to work with nature rather than against nature." That is, one must recognize the types of crops that grow best here, the long growing season, and the precautions necessary due to climate and rainfall.

If you have an opportunity some day to travel south of the Mason and Dixon line you will want to visit the Gulfport community. Such an experience will give you a better appreciation of our country with its many-sided cultural and geographical components that make it the fascinating America it is.

Oklahoma school board members who won't fight for the United States if necessary should be dismissed, the state attorney general has ruled. The opinion emphasizes a state law of 1941, requiring all school board members to take an oath, 'To take up arms in defense of the United States in time of war or national emergency," if they are required to do so. It is our guess that there are Mennonite school board members in Oklahoma.

Memorial Day Should Clarify Issues

an editorial

MEMORIAL DAY services afford an excellent opportunity to advance the interests of the Kingdom of God on earth. The day is observed in memory of those who have lived and died before us. Remembering the dead should not take on the color of ancestor worship. Nor should the dead be honored indiscriminately. Memorial Day services lend themselves well to an evaluation of our heritage and the faith by which our great men and women have lived. Memorial Day presents a setting in which people spontaneously enter into wholehearted thanksgiving for the noble lives of those who have gone before. The day also carries an atmosphere in which it should be easier than usual to repent and confess our part in the guilt of the accumulative evil in the world. The seemingly inescapable impasse in which the nations of the world find themselves today has resulted from the unethical inconsistencies and the "illegitimate pressures" of self-willed lives. At the graves of loved ones, many of whom have died early because of unchristian things that have been done or have been allowed to happen, it should not be hard to humble ourselves and confess before God our part in bringing about these sad conditions in the world.

Towards Righteousness and Peace

Memorial Day observances should not confuse people. They should rather clarify what contributions toward righteousness and peace have been made by our forefathers. Too often Memorial Day celebrations become a glorification of war. When we hear Memorial Day speakers say, for instance, that on this day we honor all soldiers on both sides of all conflicts, it means that they hold up war as honorable, regardless of what the reason for fighting may have been at the time. Parades of soldiers in uniform, firing salutes, and display of war weapons glorify war and help to culture the very evil that has taken the lives of unnumbered people in the past.

The Will of the Lord, Not Self-Chosen Plans

Everything about a Memorial Day service should be calculated to contribute toward righteousness and peace. On Memorial Day we should hold up those qualities and deeds of the dead which have contributed toward peace. This is a day when it needs to be emphasized untiringly that the Will of the Lord is our hope for peace and happiness. As long as people act on the idea that they must succeed at all costs in their self-chosen plans, they will allow themselves unethical inconsistencies which in turn press others to do the same sort of thing. And thus there is built up a force of illegitimate pressure which becomes a colossal evil. On Memorial Day, if ever, we should "preach the laws and love of God on pain of death, and with unapologetic authority present the imperious authority of God's judgments." The threat to freedom is within, not so much outside. Direct responsibility of the individual to God is the basis of freedom and democracy. When people advocate government controls in the interest of order, something very precious has already been lost. The Will of the Lord is our peace. Therefore our goal and prayer should always be, "Thy Kingdom come. Thy Will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

> "Memorial Day observances should not confuse people. They should rather clarify what contributions toward righteousness and peace have been made by our forefathers."

THE UTTER detachment from the varying fortunes of world states and empires with which the apostolic church regarded her destiny is one of the most needed lessons that the modern church must learn. The apostolic church was so conscious of the urgency of winning people to Christ and a higher, much more inclusive Kingdom, and she was so sure of the eternal nature and results of this task that she had no time to squander trying to preserve corrupt, godless, and temporal national entities. Whenever the church becomes involved in efforts to preserve by force values that can only be preserved by the faithful presentation of a world-wide Gospel buttressed by faithful Christian education and followed out by radiantly Christian lives, then she not only betrays her Saviour but will sink into oblivion with the nation she is seeking to perpetuate. Pentecost is the answer to questions raised by Memorial Day.

What Can We Do?

1950, 1952, 1954, sooner or later: Through the thick censorship of the radio comes the report that one of America's largest cities has just been wiped out by an atom bomb (Drew Pearson claims that the Russians already have one or two A-bombs.). The populations of the other large cities are panic-stricken, but every worker is compelled to stay at his job. The air battles with the enemy are of an unprecedented scale. It looks as though the war will not stop until life in all countries has been practically extinguished.

"Oh, that isn't coming," someone may say. Why isn't it? Before the Second World War some good men thought that the nations would never again butcher one another.

Will the armed might of the United States prevent it? Can armed might ever be relied upon? Did the Maginot Line and the air force of France keep a Hitler from arming and eventually marching?

If a 70-division air force and all the rest will not keep us out of war, then something Christian must be done by Christians.

We have such a temptation not to think of something until it becomes a "pressing matter." Shall we go on in our usual routine of work and sermons and Sunday school and C. E. until the bombs burst? Are the children of light working and planning as diligently as the children of Mars? What is each one of us doing for the right, for peace, for God?

Something Christian can be done. Small groups of concerned men and women in every one of our churches can meet together and ask, "What can we do?" Let God give the answer. It's not organization or numbers that we need so much. We do need the Creative Spirit

O Young and Fearless Prophet

O young and fearless Prophet of ancient Galilee,
Thy life is still a summons to serve humanity;
To make our thoughts and actions less prone to please the crowd,
To stand with humble courage for Truth with hearts uncowed.

We marvel at the purpose that held Thee to Thy course,
While ever on the hilltop before Thee loomed the cross;
Thy steadfast face set forward where love and duty shone,
While we betray so quickly and leave Thee there alone.

O help us stand unswerving against war's bloody way,
Where hate and lust and falsehood hold back Christ's holy sway;
Forbid that love of country should blind us to his call,
Who lifts above the nation the brotherhood of all.

Create in us the splendor that dawns when hearts are kind,
That knows not race or color as boundaries of the mind;
That learns to value beauty in heart, or brain or soul,
And longs to bind God's children into one perfect whole.

O young and fearless Prophet, we need thy presence here,
Amid our pride and glory to see thy face appear;
Once more to hear thy challenge above our noisy day,
Again to lead us forward along God's holy way.

of God. He can move and perform wonders.

If there is no other time available, let Sunday school time or the C. E. hour be used for meeting. Or is the threat of the hour so unimportant that we can go along in the usual way?

As peacemaking Christians we can talk to other Christians about the ministry of reconciliation. We can begin our witnessing right in Jerusalem.

All of this isn't spectacular. No, but it may be significant, for Jesus suggested that he who is faithful in a very little shall receive authority over much, that is, find the little opportunities becoming great opportunities.

The World Peace and Brotherhood Mission

by Lester Hostetler

"Perfect love," the Bible tells us, "casts out fear." America is in a torment of fear and the reason is that we lack love. We are afraid of Russia, afraid of Communism, afraid of the atomic bomb, afraid of each other. Our possession of the atomic bomb has not brought us a sense of security, but rather the opposite. We were told on good authority, during our mission, that 65,000 people are at work, day and night, in three shifts, making the world's largest stack pile of atomic bombs. Yet a wave of fear has overtaken us. We listened to a speech in the Senate by one who pointed out the danger we are in. "Who can guarantee," this senator asked, "That these bombs will not be dropped inside our own country?" When a pilot is sent out on his mission of death, it is assumed that he will carry his burden of destruction over the enemy before he drops it. But who can guarantee that he will do so? If Communistic propaganda should infiltrate into the army itself, it might mean that our stack pile of defensive weapons would be turned to our own destruction. It is the argument of fear.

In New York, our mission listened to an address by J. J. Singe, a native of India, who has spent a number of years in the United States. He told us that something very terrible is happening in this wonderful country. Fear is taking the place of freedom. For the first time in his experience, he said, he becomes conscious, when talking to others about international relations, that someone might be listening in. The free conversation over the dinner table that has characterized America in the past is now plainly inhibited. We are afraid, and so we wage a campaign of suspicion and intimidation and talk about armed might.

There is another way of dealing with Russia than through armed might. But to say so has nearly becomes a crime in America. To express the elementary Christian doctrine of love and respect for all mankind seems to make one a Communist and a criminal.

But Christians must keep on saying that regardless of consequences. Most people in Russia bear no malice toward us and have no desire to be at war with us. They have just had a war and will be many years paying the price of it. The common people in Russia want precisely what we want—peace, security, work, homes, schools and freedom. These are the fruits of peace not of war. It is the conviction of the World Peace and Brotherhood mission, and we believe of Christians generally, that our differences with Russia can and should be solved by peaceable means. War would solve nothing. It would only engulf the world in still greater misery.

It is somewhat incongruous that atheistic Russia should make the first official proposal to settle our differences by peaceable means. It is difficult to know everything Stalin has in mind. But it should not be difficult for the government of Christian America to accept the proposal and give the way of peace a chance. No proposal is more futile than that of using our money and resources for the waging of war which promises only to destroy our enemies and us. We want our country to take action based on Christian morality. Let church people tell this to their congressmen. Let it never be said that an atheistic government proposed moral action, to which our Christian government gave an atheistic response.

Rev. Lester Hostetler, who was a member of the Peace and Brotherhood Mission to Washington, continues the report of his experiences in this issue. He will write again next week.

China, Land of Turmoil

by Dallas Voran

SHANGHAI, May 3, 1948—Most of North China and Manchuria are under the control of the Chinese communists. In these areas they have put into practice their ideas of land reform, taking the land from the landlords and giving it to the tenants. A large portion of the refugees from war areas were wealthy people and landlords; those who do not escape are publicly tried and humiliated and some are killed. The common people react to the prospect of a new regime with apathy. They have suffered greatly under the Kuomintang; their tax load has been crushing. They say that the new cannot be worse than the old. As with common people the world over, they are primarily interested in a chance to plant and harvest their crops and to have a certain amount of security; they are not interested in politics.

The Ministry of Social Affairs estimates that at the present time 46 million people have fled from their homes in war, flood and famine areas, a number probably as great as the hordes who trekked west before the Japanese advance during the war just past. Starvation conditions exist in some places. Church World Service's American Advisory Committee, U.S. government's China Relief Mission, Mennonite Central Committee, missions, and the national government's Ministry of Social Affairs are carrying on mass feeding programs in areas of high refugee concentration.

Some three thousand missionaries have returned to China since the close of the fighting war. They have come back in the new role of advisor, teacher and friend, for the Chinese church has come of age. It made a good record for itself during the war when it was under Chinese control. Missions have generally found it impossible to operate in communist areas; their personnel have been transferred to other parts of China or have been farmed out to other organizations. Paochi, Shensi, the city chosen as center of the new General Conference Mennonite Mission field, was taken by communist troops last week and missionaries have been evacuated. Another search for a new field seems inevitable.

The Mennonite Church of Asuncion

by Ruth and Ernst Harder

TEN years ago only a few Mennonite families were living permanently in Asuncion, Paraguay. Only a handful of young people found temporary employment to supplement their parents' meager earnings as colonists of the Chaco. A few students were trying hard to earn their way through the Paraguayan high school. Once in a while this little group would meet in the tiny chapel of the German Lutherans, sing hymns, and one of the students would read from an old German sermon book. Once or twice during the year an occasional visit by a colony minister would cause them to gather in the botanical gardens or "Parque Caballero" for a picnic. These meetings were cherished like a family reunion, because people felt the emptiness of churchless Sundays and were hungry for contact with likeminded persons of their own people. The arrival of a Mennonite in Asuncion was always a special event, and everyone who could make it possible would meet him at the port. During hard times in the Chaco the Mennonite population in Asuncion grew; during better years almost all Mennonites went back to the colonies.

Growing Number of Mennonites in Asuncion

Today the picture has changed and is changing constantly. In 1947 a large group of immigrants had to wait in a camp near Asuncion until the revolution was ended, and some of them found jobs in the city and later stayed on. Some are coming from the colonies because they are unable to adjust themselves in the country after years of factory experience in Russia and Germany. A large percentage of our Mennonite population are girls working as cooks and maids, or young men who have found employment in stores and the different kinds of shops. With the increase of the Mennonite population in Paraguay, we expect the group in Asuncion to grow also.

Mennonite Home Center of Activities

The Mennonite Central Committee has seen the need of ministering to this group of isolated Mennonites. Several years ago they established a Mennonite Home which was to serve three purposes: (1) colonists coming to Asuncion for business, visiting or seeking medical attention were to find friendly quarters at a reasonable price; (2) the Home was to provide a social and religious center for Asuncion Mennonites; and (3) the Home should offer room for MCC personnel and offices. The Home has fulfilled these purposes for several years. With the coming of refugees and the additional work connected with that and the large group of Mennonites staying in Asuncion, the Mennonite Home has become too small to serve all of these fields. MCC is now planning to reorganize the whole setup of this service center.

Have Regular Church Services

The Home Mission Board of the General Conference has long been supporting the spiritual service given to our Mennonites in Asuncion. For several years colony ministers were asked to come to Asuncion for two or three weeks to preach and visit the people. The services were then held in the Mennonite Home or in the Baptist Hall. In 1947 MCC assigned the writer to give part of his time to religious services in Asuncion. Since then we have tried to break the Bread of Life with these people at Sunday afternoon and evening services and midweek prayer meetings. All of these meetings are usually well attended. Our average attendance at the Sunday afternoon service is about 110 now. To seat all of these people we use the gospel hall of a Plymouth Brethren Missionary group. They offered us its free use, but our group voted to contribute to their treasury. The other meetings are held in the yard of the Mennonite Home; this is often too small. Another MCC couple and we are now living in a private residence, which is also being used for choir practice and other young people's meetings. Mrs. Harder is conducting a Sunday school class of sixteen eager children.

This work has grown to such an extent that it requires a minister, who together with his wife, can spend full time in religious service for these people. They are craving for a friendly visit and religious counseling and are asking for Bible classes for the young people. In view of the fact that our Mennonite population will increase still more, and that the city will probably be an important Mennonite center in the future, we are en-

DR. SCHMIDT STARTS NEW INDUSTRY IN PARAGUAY

Mennonites Will Profit from Oil Made from Cotton Seed

Reported by Mrs. Herbert Schmidt

(Several months ago Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Schmidt of Newton, Kansas, went to Paraguay. Once there Dr. Schmidt got busy with setting up the factory which is to produce cotton seed oil. In the following article Mrs. Schmidt describes this industrial enterprize and also adds a few other items of news. Dr. Schmidt is no newcomer to the Mennonites of Paraguay, for he served them as medical doctor several years ago. The Schmidts are to return to Newton, Kansas, by June 1, where Dr. Schmidt will resume his practice at the Bethel Clinic.)

THE Doctor busied himself at once with plans for the oil press and has already—in one day—set up his own little laboratory in one of the buildings. In 1942 when he was here on a medical mission he was impressed by the wonderful initiative on the part of these Mennonites and their complete lack of facilities as far as the cotton industry was concerned. Together with his brother, Dr. John Schmidt, he immediately began plans to buy and send to Philadelphia a small cotton seed oil mill and refinery.

For twenty years these Mennonites have raised cotton but have not been able to use the seed to advantage. This year they have 2,000,000 lbs. or 1000 tons of seed, which they cannot process for lack of equipment. The sale of the seed has not been profitable either. This seed will produce over 200,000 pounds of cooking oil which these refugee people use at the rate of 150 gallons a week, at $2 to $4 a gallon. They have been pressing their entire peanut crop with a small press and use this peanut oil exclusively for their cooking. As one woman expressed it to me they are tired of it—"wie sent herzlich med daavon!" They are so happy at the prospect of other oil for kitchen use.

The refined oil gives or leaves behind fatty acids to make more than enough soap for the 7,000 people. Soap can be bought at a high price here—and sometimes cannot be gotten at all. After the oil is pressed out of the seed, the remaining seed cake is superior to whole seed as feed for the cattle, because of its high protein content. Since cattle raising provides a major industry here, the feed is very important.

The stages required to produce the refined oil, soap and feed from the raw cotton seed are several. The seed first has to be cleaned, then it is ground and as much of the hulls removed as is practical. Then the ground seed is cooked and fed into a huge screw-press that subjects it to the tremendous pressure of 30,000 pounds to the square inch. That forces the oil out of the seed. This oil is then filtered.

Due to the free fatty acids, this crude oil is not edible. In a small chemistry laboratory the concentration of these free fatty acids is titrated on each batch of 200 gallons. With such determination made, the acids are carefully neutralized in a 200 gallon refining tank equipped with steam coils to heat the oil and to stir it with the agitators. Stirring the oil rapidly at 24°C. the pre-determined amount of sodium hydroxide is added. The chemical process is completed in 24 hours with a resulting refined cooking layer on top and soap stock layer at the bottom of the kettle.

With some more chemical treatment, soap is made out of the remains in the kettle after the oil is drawn off. It is immediately apparent how important such an

Convinced Christian Faith Must Express Itself in the Material

Rejoices in India's New Constitution

I am sure it will interest the readers of The Mennonite to hear something about the new constitution that India hopes to work. I shall here give a few important points of that constitution which gives us Christian workers a lot of joy and courage. But before I make those quotations, I wish to write a few words about the establishment of the Christian Church in India in our area.

Christianity, a "Materialistic" Religion

It is generally agreed in our Mennonite church that the whole of the man must be considered in the following of Jesus. Somebody once said that the Christian religion is the most materialistic religion in the world. When I first read that statement I was a bit shocked, and thought it untrue. But coming to consider the facts, it is not untrue.

When Jesus gives us a picture of the last judgment scene in Matthew 25, He tells us that the judgment will be largely based on how our religion has worked out in the material.

Many non-Christian religions, some of which we have learned to know so well in India, are much, yet very much more, separated from the material than the Christian religion is. The pious non-Christian can very compunctuously go through all his prayers and worship, and then turn right around and cheat and falsify to the nth degree, and his god never reprimands him. He can do far worse than King David did in connection with Uriah, yet no prophet will point the finger at him and say, 'Thou art the man."

The Christian believes that his religion must express itself in the material, and this our Mennonite church sees and acts upon more and more, hence the very creditable relief work going on all over the world.

And in this respect. India has not been forgotten. We are most thankful to our churches ir America for sending us Mr. and Mrs. Willard Unruh and Mr. Irwin Schrag. These men, we believe, wil do a very great service in the Kingdom of God ir showing the young church in India how the handiworl of God (creation) can be dedicated and in what wa material skill can be a most useful servant in the upbuilding of the church.

And we do hope that some young men will soor be ready to come to India to help the young churcl in India in the line of agriculture and dairying, together with horticulture.

Our Mennonite church in India is rural anc agricultural. We have hundreds of farming families We have an agricultural high school, but no specialist in agriculture. How long must we carry on thi way?

Rejoice in India's New Constitution

And now I would like to ask our readers o The Mennonite to share India's joy for her nev constitution. I can give here only a few extracts as published in the papers of India.

Here are some. "The Constitution which India will give herself promises justice, liberty, equality and fraternity to all her citizens . . . ."

Then again: "The chapter on fundamental rights prohibits discrimination on grounds of religion, caste or sex, guarantees equality of opportunity in matters of public employment, and abolishes untouchability forbidding its practice in any form." And still further "Great emphasis is laid on freedom of conscience, and the profession, practice and propagation of religion. Every religious denomination is free to manage religious affairs and to own, acquire, and administer properties for religious and charitable purposes. But no religious instruction shall be provided by state funds."

Mission Schools Not Dependent on State

These are some of the key points to my mind in the new constitution as far as Christian work is concerned. The very last sentence we think also proper. Already a few years ago our Indian church conference decided not to ask the state for financial help to run our schools. That, I do think, is good and is Mennonite. True, it means that our schools will have to depend upon the good will of Christians in India and America to support them in every way, including financial support.

But again I say that is good, because we believe in the separation of church and state; and if the state is not asked to finance the schools, then the schools are more free to teach religion to the growing and formative child and youth as the church sees fit.

Furthermore, government officials, as far as I have learned to know them in India, are heartily in favor of religious instruction in schools, because those officials with any educational acumen at all know that children and youth must not be deprived of heart foundations of life—religion.

But the matter of religion is a delicate matter. Just what religion shall be imparted to the child and youth? Most fortunately the new Constitution of India promises liberty in this. So we as Christians in India and America should rejoice and thank God for this bright outlook in India.

New Industry in Paraguy

industry is to these refugees and to the Mennonites who help support them. The people here are all so happy over the prospect of this industry—they can hardly wait to see it get started. Now Friesland is clamoring for such a press also; is there not some kind-hearted soul among our readers who would want to invest some of his money in this worthy project?

On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings Doctor does the surgical work—more than 40 people have asked for operations. They are to receive a preliminary examination and may not all need operations. They come from all the various villages—from the Menno Colony and also from Friesland. Doctor's first big operation was performed last Saturday on a woman from Friesland for the removal of a breast cancer. She seems to doing very nicely. I make it my work to visit and comfort the sick. Perhaps I shall read to them when they are recuperating.

We had the privilege of witnessing the baptism of 11 young people yesterday, Sunday, April 4. It was a most impressive service, each candidate giving a stirring testimony before receiving baptism. Rev. Jacob Isaac is doing a wonderful work among these people. The choir was excellent, under the fine direction of a Mr. Redekopp of last year's immigrant group—and anything I had planned to do here, musically, certainly would be superfluous. This colony has existed for so long that one's services along most any line do not seem to be needed as much as they probably would be at Volendam or at the newly organized colonies. Whatever we can do, however, we will gladly do—we fear only that our six weeks will be over with too soon.

With heartiest good wishes to all in our churches and communities at home—from us two in far away Paraguay.

God created us all in the beginning
But men spoiled it all by sinning
We hope that the story
Will end in God's glory
Right now it seems the other side's winning.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

On Wednesday a discussion was held of the various positions of the conscientious objector including those of the absolutists, the C.P.S. man, and the non-combatant position. Those participating were Robert Hartzler, Arnold Nickel, Jake Goering, Esko Loewen, and David Habegger.

The student body was moved by a great message from President Rufus D. Bowman concerning the challenge of conscription. He said that the real problem is modern culture which often is stronger than our Christian faith. He urged that the authority of the Bible be restored, that a sense of sin be restored, that the authority of Jesus Christ be made preeminent, that a revival of the doctrine of nonconformity which fits conditions in 1948 should be revived, a stronger emphasis on the home is needed, New Testament ordinances should have proper support, and a great teaching program should be launched in the church. He said that in order to make the position of the church of the Brethren quite clear, fifty men who have boys of draft age should go to Washington and say, if justice is not done we will go to jail for our boys or with our boys.

A number from here heard Kirby Page's address on "The Christian Attitude Toward Russia" which was given in the First Presbyterian Church.

On Tuesday Edmund J. Miller and family will move their house-hold goods to Freeman, South Dakota, where he will take up his work as president of the college.

Among the summer appointments of our students will be Arnold Nickel who will be at the large church in Henderson, Nebraska, Orlin Frey at the Reedley, California, church, and Marjorie Wiens in the daily vacation Bible school at Beatrice, Nebraska.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The President's Office has recently announced the names of three alumni from among the new faculty-staff members for the coming year. Jacob J. Enz, '41, will serve as Assistant Professor of Bible and Christian Education. He received the B.S.T. degree from Biblical Seminary in New York and has done graduate study at the University of Chicago. Harley J. Stucky, '41, will join the staff as Assistant Professor of History and Government. His graduate work was done at Garrett Biblical Institute, where he received the B. D. degree, and at Northwestern University, where he is now working toward his Ph.D. in Political Science. Both men have held pastorates since 1944, Rev. Enz in Nappanee, Indiana, and Rev. Stucky in Chicago. In connection with the new curriculum arrangement with Bethel and Axtel Hospitals Miss Jessie Brown, '42, R. N., will come to the campus as Instructor of Nursing Education. She received her training at Bethel Deaconess Hospital and, after a year in European relief work, has since been serving there as Instructor of Nurses.

THE TURFS SHRIEK WITH CROSSES

Scattered over Europe are green turfs on plains and rolling hills. These turfs shriek with acres of crosses. At the foot of each cross lies moldering the body of a darling boy who left his parents' fireside to slay a fellow boy whom he did not know nor had ever held a personal grievance against.

Across the vast expanse of Europe, family life is crying over the suffering and loss of loved ones. Memoirs are in nearly every home as a grim reminder that in a distant foxhole or turf or among the ashes of a portable incinerator are the remains of a dear one. Constantly tears, heartaches, poverty are multiplied as new memoirs are added because of land mines, duds, and crumbling ghostlike walls.

Hunger rides through the land like a mighty chariot, grinding under its wheels love, hope, peace, and leaves in its wake sullenness, cynicism, sadism, and soulless savagery.—C. Warren Long

Foreign Student Fund Folder

Appearing with this issue of Mennonite Youth is a folder informing the readers of the Foreign Student Fund which has been under the auspices of the Board of Education with other boards and committees aiding in whatever way they could. The Young People's Union participates in this general program of education by sponsoring the education of four young people. Three of these are from Puerto Rico and are studying in Bethel and Bluffton preparatory for their return and service to their people. The fourth, from Paraguay, is at present in Freeman. He also is preparing to return to serve his people as a medical doctor.

The folders well describe the general educational program that has been undertaken for European students in our midst and the four above-mentioned. This undertaking is proving fruitful in providing personal contacts between young people in other lands and young people of our church. It has a two-way effect in that it makes possible broader contacts, better understanding, and Christian fellowship for our young people with these students. And, likewise, it provides them with an opportunity to learn and fellowship with us. This makes possible a more personal Christian bond between peoples of many lands. It makes possible their preparation to serve. It provides a means whereby the Church of Christ may transcend the human boundaries of nationalism thus giving witness to the basic weakness of today's social and political organization, because it proves these boundaries to be utterly artifical.

It's a Date

by George Stoneback

Life that is normal is a process of growth—of expanding personality. We start by being interested only in ourselves. Gradually we expand that little personality to include the family. When a boy gets on toward the age of twelve, his personality expands again, and includes his "gang" of boys. Girls are despised. This is the club and Boy Scout period. After about three or four years as a Boy Scout, another expansion is made, and the Boy Scout becomes a girl scout. He begins to take an interest in the girls he despised few years ago. In order for his personality to continue expanding, he must have companionship with members of the opposite sex. He's interested in having a "date."

Fortunately, a parallel process has been going on (likely even more rapidly) among the Girl Scouts and all their sisters. They are waiting (more or less patiently) to be asked for a "date."

Since this is America and not India, it is not the business of our parents to make the dates for us. That's our job. We should have some facts and principles in mind to help us do it intelligently.

First, remember that (although early dating is not usually and should not be with a view toward mate selection and marriage) the arrow Cupid uses most effectively is propinquity. Don't let that word scare you. It merely means that the person whom you eventually marry is in all probability one who lives near to you, goes to the same school that you do, works in the same factory, goes to the same places, belongs to the same church, does the same things you do, or likes the same things you like. Dr. Bossard, one of my teachers at Penn, who made extensive studies in this field concluded that Cupid may have wings, but "apparently they are not adapted to long flight."

So be careful with what group you spend your time, from which you draw your dates; for likely it is the group from which you will select your life partner. This is one of the most important reasons for working with church groups, Christian Endeavor associations, good clubs. This is one of the values of attending church sponsored summer camps and for planning to enroll in a Christian college when you finish high school.

Within these wholesome fellowship groups, date various individuals in order to have fine experiences with a wide range of different types of personalities. You'll see the value of this when you later start making your selection toward courtship and marriage. If you are out with a group, do not monopolize your "date" — enter into the fellowship of the whole group.

You will find that your friends will be more delighted to "date" with you if you show a genuine interest in others—your "date" and all your friends. It will be hard to get a repeat date if it is impossible to get you away from your favorite topic of conversation (especially if that topic is yourself); and what's more, news that you are interested only in yourself will get around in your circle of friends. And be sure you can converse about more than the weather!

Be creative in your recreation. Don't always depend on commercial entertainment, feeling that you must spend a lot of money on a date. You will find that the dates you remember longest are likely those on which you spent more thought than money. A date I will never forget included four of us in a Ford, my date and I in a rumble seat, a hike, a picnic lunch, and then as a carillon played great hymns and anthems an unforgetable sunset unfolded in the west. We enjoyed a religious experience. In all that you do, plan those things which will further the growth of your personality and the personality of the other person. Life is a process of growth, and if your dates do not stimulate wholesome growth, they are time wasted.

Why not plan a Youth Fellowship or C.E. meeting or a series to discuss this topic? You might show the filmstrip series on Boy-Girl Friendships issued by Church Screen Productions, 5622 Enright Avenue, St. Louis 12, Missouri. There are three in the series:—"Boy Meets Girl," "Boy Dates Girl," and "Boy Marries Girl." Each comes with discussion guide. Your visual aids dealer can likely get them for you.

Public Affairs Pamphlet No. 127—"Keeping Up With the Teen-Agers" — has some good material in it. This would also be a good pamphlet to give to your parents to help them understand what makes a "slick chick" tick, what bewildering choices you face, and how better to help you. It also has some ideas on how you can cooperate with them as well as on how you can meet your own problems. It is published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., 22 E. 38th Street, New York 16, New York, and sells for twenty cents. (My Dear Ego by Fritz Kunkel is a little book that has some excellent material on boy-girl relationships.—R.W.)

Regina Westcott Weiman has written a good booklet entitled, Boy and Girl Friendships. It sells for twenty cents.

A 16mm film, "You and Your Family," presents some of your problems in this field and in your relationship with your parents in a dramatic way and opens the way for a fine discussion. We used it in our church a year ago and could hardly stop the discussion.

Voices for Peace in Europe

Charles and Ruth Webb, Brethren workers in France, sent some heartening newspaper clippings. One was headed, "20,000 EUROPEAN CATHOLICS DEDICATE THEMSELVES TO PEACE," and told of the Pax Christi conference in Germany, early in April. Delegates from France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, Luxembourg and Germany met for four days; they heard Monsignor Theas, the French founder of Pax Christi, say, "The real Christian France forgives Germany and offers it love." Cardinal Frings, of Cologne, said, "If peace in this year again is jeopardized, it only can be saved by Christ."

The second source of hope comes from England, where the newspapers applauded a plea for peace that was made by Mrs. Leah Manning, a member of the House of Commons. During a debate on defense, she said, "Before the ink is dry or indeed before we have even signed the peace treaties, we are rattling our swords in our scabbards and hurling abuse at one another across the ether. It is a terrible commentary on our times; how we can be expected to sit here and not feel any kind of emotion while we discuss such things I do not know. Maybe the men can do it, but I know women cannot.

"The 'iron curtain' which we are told exists between East and West has today given place to a kind of sheet in a shadow-play across which both sides see a phantasmagoria of distorted, horrible, grotesque people passing by. Someone has to tear down that sheet and show people on both sides that we are all ordinary human beings hating war and longing for peace. Unless the government can do that, the government has failed in all that it set out to do."—Gospel Messenger

Passing Shadows

A cloud
May veil the light

But when
The shadow lifts,
The light seems brighter than it was

Conscription and the Church

By the time this is printed, very likely the legislation for military conscription will be pretty well through Congress. It is generally felt at the time of this writing that Selective Service will be a reality again. At the time that representatives from the Mennonite colleges and of the Young Peoples Union were sent to Washington, it was already then quite well realized that this mission would not necessarily stop conscription.

Doubtless those delegates could catch the feeling of some of the old Prophets such as Amos or Jeremiah who, went to the center of Hebrew government life and there proclaimed the visions or God's judgment that came to them. The prophets, likewise, saw clearly that their mission would not necessarily stop the headlong movement of Israel toward judgement and calamity. But, that did not deter them from dispensing with their commission inspired by God.

A much more grave question even than the trends and action of our nation is the position of and the action that will be taken by Christian people. Selective Service confronts youth squarely with a decision. Those who are older and not directly affected may not think much about the significance of such service. It would be both desirable and spiritually to their benefit if they did seek to participate actively in the burden that confronts youth when conscription is upon them. The whole church should participate in the burden placed upon youth with conscription. And such participation should not be just financial. It should be a sincere prayerful effort to think through anew the Christian answer to sin and violence on a national scale. For such is the ultimate significance of conscription. Conscription indicates how men propose to handle evil in the world.

That is why the Christian conscience must be especially acute regarding conscription. For the Christian Gospel has a way of dealing with violence and evil. That is the faith of the Church. In this case the gospel of Christ and the policy of government are in conflict.

This conviction is not held generally in our church. There are many who by one means or another have cleared themselves from a conflict between the Christian Gospel and war. As C. F. Yake in the Youth's Christian Companion states, "Many so-called fundamentalists, apparently strong church members, are bold in teaching that it is the Christians duty to fight, that it is his business to be yielded to the State. Noted fundamentalist papers which want to be champions of the faith make no apologies for such teachings. Among the most outstanding of these are the Sunday School Times and Moody Monthly, which are strong in their promotion of dispensationalism coupled with premillenialism. One of the most subtle things of the times has been and is taking place—the infiltrating of our people with teaching which has a tendency to break down the staunchness of their faith."

C. F. Yake speaks of the Old Mennonite conference in this statement. What he says is true of the General Conference as well. The so-called fundamentalists are to be commended on their evangelistic fervor, their enthusiastic and vigorous support of missions, and the general spirit of enthusiasm and self-assurance they display. On the question of war and the Christian, they have never come forth with as positive, direct, or clear a position as they have, for instance regarding evangelism and missions. By far the large majority make no issue over their participation in war. Some few, it is true, are in conscientious opposition to war. Somehow, while reading the books of the Bible as Ezekiel, the individualism of chapter 18, 20, and 33, for instance, caught their attention. For their great emphasis is the individual's salvation and his relation to God while the social relationships are left in the background. However, these same chapters have tremendous significance in the moral demands on the individual in his relation to society as well.

The question now facing the Church is whether it will see clearly the Christian Gospel's teaching regarding man's relation to man as well as man's relation to God. These are challenging days which offer great opportunity for a clear Christian witness to the only ultimate answer to evil and violence —that of redemptive Christian love. Will the Church be up to it?

Volunteers Renovate Castle

The volunteers going to Europe this summer will serve in two work camps in the occupied zones of Germany. The American Zone project will be located at Roennenberg near Frankfurt. Here an old castle will be rennovated and made into a Christian youth center. The British Zone project will be located in Hamburg in the Alsterdorfer Anstalten, a mental institution caring for 1,400 patients, which was 50 per cent damaged during the war. The group will rebuild the assembly hall, and if possible, also work on a barracks for delinquent boys.

An additional service project in the United States will be located near Nathrop, Colorado, at the Mount Princeton Commonwealth School for delinquent or potentially delinquent children. Members will serve as counsellors for the children, and work, play and worship with them. Construction work and preservation of foods for the winter may also be a part of the work.

Peace Team Will Visit Canadian Churches

Visiting Saskatchewan churches and making a special emphasis on the Christian peace position of the Mennonite church, a team of three will make up a special voluntary service unit during the summer months. The team plans to make special one week visits to a church during which time a special study and effort will be put forth to seek anew the widely varied implications of the non-resistant position to each individual member of the church.

The leader of the unit is David Schroeder, at present student at the Mennonite Brethren Bible College Winnipeg, Manitoba, and a former leader of a mission youth group. Ramon Jantz of Drake, Saskatchewan, who has studied at the Rosthern Bible Academy and Bruno Epp, student at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, Manitoba, will also serve in the unit. A special week of preparation and training will take place June 21—25. The team will function until August 16.

The Peace Term is one of the several voluntary service units sponsored by the Voluntary Services Committee of the General Conference, the Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee, the General Confrence Peace Committee and the Young People's Union.

WHO IS THE GOD OF THE AMERICANS?

America spends twenty-seven million dollars per day in preparation for war. The United Nations spends exactly that much per year for building peace.

THE MILITARY AND HOUSING FOR OVER THIRTY MILLION PEOPLE

Speaking of the present re-armament program being considered in Congress, a Christian Century editorial recently declared, "Before this fantastic program goes through, we should realize that Congress is pouring down the sewer of military extravagance a sum which would provide comfortable housing for over thirty million people."

OUT OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA

A demonstration for world peace, sponsored by all the churches of Czechoslovakia, took place in Prague on February 2. Out of that demonstration came the declaration that "war is an irresponsible and criminal solution."

A SIT DOWN AGAINST WAR?

"A worldwide sit-down strike against war by the peoples of the world to avert the terrors of a World War III is within the realm of reasonable belief," Dean Wesley A. Sturges of the Yale University law school declared recently. He said, "The peoples of the earth still have it in their own several powers as human beings not to do many things, while their capacity to organize for positive doing be speculative and remote."

IF THE CHURCH WOULD HAVE INFLUENCE

George H. C. MacGregor, of the University of Glasgow, Scotland, recently spoke in New York and declared, "You and we are increasing armament and attempting to fight evil with evil. Armament programs make war inevitable . . . . There is only one possible way to overcome evil: by the active power of consecrated and sacrifical life. The church will not have influence until it makes a final renunciation of war."

The Washington Scene

By Paul Goering

May 17. Two events of the past week reflect on the unyielding and stubborn attitude of the Truman Administration towards Russia and the shifting policy towards Palestine.

One was the failure of Truman to seize upon the opportunity to discuss differences with the Russians. The exchange of notes between the U.S. and Soviet governments was greeted by foreign officials and unofficials, as well as by many U.S. and Soviet citizens, as a new and hopeful break in the tension between the two governments. Truman made it clear that this government would not take the initiative in getting together with Russia. He has said that his hopes for peace have been severely shaken by recent events and he apparently does not intend to get out of that mind set nor alter the Truman Doctrine of "stopping Russia"—by war, if necessary.

The second event is another step in our confused and shallow policy with respect to Palestine. The Palestine situation apparently caught Truman between the horns of a dilemma. After the U. S. delegate to the U.N. had been instructed to support partition it was claimed that the decision was made after the New York Democratic boss, Ed Flynn, had told Truman that he must support partition in order to carry New York with its large Jewish vote in the elections. Then after an independent U. N. commission brought out the partition plan for Palestine the U.S. backed down. This was ascribed to our unwillingness to have Russian troops in Palestine as part of a U.N. police force and also to our concern for our Saudi-Arabia oil interests. Dillon Read, Wall Street firm, of which Secretary Forrestal was a member, owns the American Arabian Oil Co. After abandoning the U. N. plan for a separate Jewish state, which resulted in arousing pressure from Zionist sources, the President recognized the newly-formed State of Israel within twenty minutes after it was formed.

NEWS BITS

Drew Pearson claims that definite information has now been obtained that Russia has the atom bomb and that one or two have been made. The Christian Century suggests, "For in less than the four years of the next presidential term Russia will have enough atomic bombs to bring an abrupt end to any idea that she can be scared into retreat."

One thousand two hundred people recently met in Trinity Methodist Church, Denver, Colorado, and adopted and signed resolutions calling for: (1) Setting into operation the processes by which the United Nations may bring about worldwide disarmament; (2) internationalizing atomic energy control; (3) placing all disputed areas rich in natural resources under United Nations trusteeship for the use of all nations; and (4) a guarantee by the United Nations that all peoples may choose their own form of government and way of life without interference by other nations.

From Tokyo comes this story. Last year police and railway authorities were helpless in the face of a gang of toughs which terrorized the trains east of Kyoto, robbing passengers and even schoolchildren. The matter was brought to Merrell Vories, head of the Peace Preservation League. Mr. Vories tackled the matter. He and his wife invited to their home groups of the villagers who had been taking part in the raids, the villagers being known as "Eta," who have been under social disabilities for centuries. At first the Eta thought they were going to fall into a police trap. Instead, they were met with friendliness and a challenge to help clean up the situations blackening the reputation of that part of the country. No mention was made of the terrorism on the railways. Soon the young men from the villages were policing the very trains they had robbed before, and they have now gone on to clean up situations in their own villages.

A Church of England commission on the use of atomic power has come out with the statement that it is the commission's view that "In certain circumstances defensive necessity might justify the use of atomic weapons against an unscrupulous aggressor."

Father Flanagan, of reknowned Boys' Town, died recently in Berlin. Flanagan founded Boys' Town on the outskirts of Omaha in 1917. He has become known throughout the world for his credo: "There is no such thing as a bad boy."

In the recent debate on the anti-Communist bill, Rep. Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, said, "I question very seriously whether it is possible to enact a law against the growth and development of ideas."

At last the Federal Court in California has ruled that in the treatment given Japanese-Americans after Pearl Harbor "there was a complete lack of constitutional authority for administrative, executive, or military officers to detain and imprison American citizens not charged criminally or subject to martial law."

From Athens comes news of mass executions of people for the recent assassination of the Minister of Justice. This is being carried out by the government supported by our own democracy.

Less than twenty-four hours before the British gave up their mandate over Palestine, the United Nations announced that an American Quaker, Harold Evans, of Philadelphia, had been agreed upon by Jews and Arabs for appointment a neutral mayor of the Holy City.

The British are not sure at all that the American Military aid as at present planned would save western Europe from destruction or from Soviet domination.

The Federal Council of Churches recently urged greater concern for the care and education of mentally deficient persons. It commended the holding of the first International Congress on Mental Deficiency in Boston beginning May 18.

GREAT HYMN WRITER EXCLUDED FROM UNIVERSITIES

Isaac Watts, who had composed six hundred songs of worship by the time of his death, was a non-conformist in religion. As such, he was barred from the leading universities where admission was limited to Church of England adherents. However, he became the author of outstanding books and gave us such hymns as, "Joy to the World," "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," and "O God, our Help in Ages Past."

LOOKING FOR GOOD MUSIC?

Choir leaders are usually looking for good music, and the suggestion of your Board of Publication is that one of the numbers you might enjoy singing either as a choir or as a special feature is the little song, "Wo du Hingehst," written especially for Mennonites in appreciation of what Mennonites in America have done for the victims of war in Europe, by Heinrich Krehbiel.

"ON OUR DOORSTEP" IS EXCITED READING

The Home Mission study book for the coming year is On Our Own Doorstep. The book treats the home mission fields of Alaska, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and other areas. Some sentences are: "Half the population of Puerto Rico doesn't know what milk tastes like." "Out of this melting pot is emerging a new Hawaiian American Race." ". . . . toasts are being drunk all over Alaska: 'Here's to Joe Stalin—Alaska's best friend!' "

MISSIONARY BROWN SENDS THEM OUT TO PREACH

Shanghai, China, April 29.—Misionary H. J. Brown recently went to Kaifeng to attend the annual conference and re-organization of the General Committee of the Mennonite mission in China. Reverend Brown reports how the native workers talked over their joys and sorrows, how they exhorted one another, and how they prayed together. He says that now they feel encouraged to go on with the preaching in the cities and in the country. He quotes the workers as saying that "Once it was money we were after, but now it is souls!" The students want to stay in school and prepare for Christian service. They are faced with the question of what to do during the summer months when school is out. They have no home to go to and there is no chance for earning a living when local people are hard hit. Reverend Brown reports that he has given them this simple direction, "Organize in groups and go preaching in the city and villages. I will see to it that while you break the bread of life to the thousands and thousands of people in fear and sin you will have your daily portion of bread."

One church reports eighty-seven inquiring into the Christian faith. This class meets all day for a period of two weeks. Reverend Brown concludes, "So the work goes on; souls are converted and baptized and the Gospel is preached. Pray, pray, pray, dear friends, pray for this work of the Lord!"

H. P. FAST HOLDS SPECIAL MEETINGS AMONG THE HOPIS

Rev. H. P. Fast held evangelistic services among the Hopi Indians of Arizona, March 9-25. Reverend Kliewer reported from Oraibi that the messages were very good and right to the point and that some of them were received by the Hopis and others not. The attendance was considered pretty good considering all that was going on in tre village, such as basketball games and dances. There were no definite decisions, but it was felt that Christians were strengthened in their faith.

Mr. and Mrs. Shirmer report from Hotevilla that the attendance at their meetings was fair because the roads were very muddy at that time. There was an unusually good attendance of boys at Hotevilla. These boys promised Reverend Fast that they would continue coming to church. They do. They enjoyed the new chorus, "I have decided to follow Jesus." This was the first time that the boys and girls were not afraid to hold up their hands for prayer. Although there were no open confessions, the Hopis really seemed to enjoy having Reverend Fast. He spoke at one sewing class. The women told Reverend Fast to thank his wife for letting him come out here to bring the Jesus message.

The Wiebes report that the attendance was fair at their meetings. Boy scout meetings during the time kept some of the children away. Attendance was very good the first and the last nights.

At Moencopi, the people requested that Reverend Fast's church in Oklahoma remember the Hopis in prayer. He also spoke to the sewing class at Moencopi.

About the same time that Reverend Fast visited the field, Mrs. W. C. Voth and Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz also came for a short visit.

fifty-seven per cent of all sponsored radio shows on the air. This is an amazing rate of popularity when you consider that in this is included every big program on the air, most of them at times which are considered much better listening periods than the hour at which "The Greatest Story Ever Told" is broadcast. Add to this fact that this is a religious program, and religious programs usually get very poor listener response. The program seems to show that America is willing to turn to religion, if it is presented in an effective way. The program presents the teaching of Christ, as important to the world today as they were two thousand years ago, in a forceful, dramatic manner. It treats Christ's teachings in the light of our problems today; it seeks to make them just as alive and important as His words were during His lifetime. If the public can be made to feel the need of something, if they can be shown that religion is part of their lives today just as much as it ever was before, they seemingly are willing to listen.

Book Notes

GOD'S BOYCOTT OF SIN by Rachel King. (Fellowship Publications, 2929 Broadway, New York 25, New York.)

This little book presents a philosophical basis for pacifism. The author gives a clear rational basis for belief in hell which is essential for the pacifist position. She contends that the clergy's neglect to teach a clear doctrine of hell has done great harm. The breakdown of belief in hell has undermined the doctrine of the righteousness of God. She feels so keenly on this matter that she suggests a good slogan for the 1940's would be "back to hell" in teaching and preaching. Her own idea of hell is perhaps not as Scriptural as one would wish it were. She speaks a great deal about potential hell. But her insistence on the reality of hell punishment after death is a word that needs to be spoken to the clergy because the clergy should speak more about it. She says that the liberal view of hell as the misery which comes to sinning people in this life is totally inadequate and has done great harm.

The book contains an enlightening discussion on the causes of war in the chapter on "Trivial Illegitimate Pressures." Our common unethical inconsistencies grow into great accumulative evils. The reason for these inconsistencies is the false idealism by which so many people live. We find here a clarification of where the guilt in war lies and where we should expect repentance. In the chapter on "The Unsynchronized Moral Tempos" she points out that the judgments of God come to man in waves, and this explains much of the innocent suffering in the world. She insists that in all situations and even in the hour when the world may destroy itself, our one duty is to remain true to the Will of God. In order to remain true to God it is important that we have a clear and firm belief in the righteousness of God, in the last judgment, in hell and in heaven. The book will be found very helpful in thinking through the problems of life in these confused days.—W. F. Unruh

THE CURE FOR INTERNATIONAL LAWLESSNESS

by Kirby Page

GOVERNMENT is one of God's gifts to his children. All human experience shows that government is essential to peaceful and friendly relations. A simple parable will make this clear. Think of what would happen if five angelic beings possessed automobiles and each one drove according to his own inclinations. The first angel would say: "By nature I am a conservative and always follow the custom, so I will drive my car on the right side of the road." The second angel would say: "My experience is that customs are bad more often than they are good, so I will drive on the left side of the road." The third angel would say: "I always try to avoid extremes, so I will stay in the middle of the road." The fourth angel would say: "I like excitement and so I will zig-zag across from one side of the road to the other." And the fifth angel would say: "I like to experiment and so I am going to find out what happens when I drive backwards down the highway."

The result would be chaos and accidents and death. No one could drive safely on such a highway, even though the drivers were all perfect beings with noble intentions. There must be agreement about the use of the highway. The agreement may be that everybody drives on the left side of the road, as is actually the rule in England; or the agreement may be to drive on the right side. Either way will be equally satisfactory if everybody abides by the agreement.

If people are to live by agreement, that is, if they are to be governed by law, there must be agencies through which agreements may be reached, through which they may be carried out, and through which their meaning may be determined. That is to say, there must be legislation, administration, and adjudication—through legislatures, executives, and courts. On heavily traveled highways there must be a system of red and green lights and drivers must not dash through red lights. The best intentions can never be an adequate substitute for agreement.

Experience has taught the necessity of government, and so agencies of local government have been established everywhere. Individuals live together in the most peaceful manner when they are law abiding. In frontier communities where there are no laws and no officers of justice, where men depend upon their own speed and accuracy of aim, human life is cheap and quarrels abound.

Experience has also shown that it is not enough to establish laws and courts for individuals; organized communities must likewise be drawn within the sphere of law and order. There were long periods of human history when clans were laws unto themselves, when tribes did as they pleased, when cities claimed sovereignty and made their own decisions, when states determined their own course of action.

History shows plainly what happens when each patriarch did as he pleased, until he came into conflict with a neighboring patriarch who also was doing as he pleased. The same result appears when each chieftain determined his own course of action. The civilization of ancient Greece was destroyed by the inter-city wars between Athens and Sparta, each exercising the right to do as it pleased.

Sovereignty is the right to make the decision, the power to determine the course of action. This power of sovereignty has sometimes been wielded by the patriarch, sometimes by the chieftain, sometimes by the city, but always the result has been war. The cure for sovereignty is government—inter-clan, inter-tribal, inter-city government. Individuals and groups have been brought under law.

In the beginning we had thirteen colonies which in time were bound together by a loose confederation. The Continental Congress, however, had little power and broke down almost completely. The reason is to be found in the power to decide wielded by the thirteen states. In the Articles of Confederation we read that "each State retains its freedom, independence, and sovereignty." Nothing could be done unless the States were in agreement. The result was impotence and chaos.

> "Throughout history, sovereignty has produced war, and everywhere the cure for sovereignty has been the creation of government and the bringing of ever-wider units of people within the sphere of law and order."

The cure was found in government—inter-state government. In the Constitutional Convention our fathers delegated certain specified powers to the Federal Government. In these areas where sovereignty was thus delegated, the States no longer made the decisions. Sovereignty was exercised by the Federal Government, and the States were made obedient to law.

This momentous step was taken in spite of bitter opposition from old-time patriots. In the primitive days, patriotism was loyalty to the clan, then to the tribe, then to the city, then to the state. Patrick Henry provides us with a good illustration. He was opposed to the creation of the Federal Government of the United States. He was a state patriot and was not greatly concerned about the people of New England. He refused to be a delegate from Virginia to the Constitutional Convention, saying that "he smelt a rat." When the newly drafted Constitution was finally submitted to the states for ratification or rejection, Patrick Henry got into action. He was elected a delegate to the Virginia Convention and there he fought bitterly against the ratification of the Constitution. He looked upon the proposed Federal Government as a super-state which would destroy the right of Virginia to do as it pleased and impose upon the Virginians tyranny and oppression. He went so far as to say that he preferred the British House of Commons, House of Lords and King to "a government so replete with such insupportable evils."

Men like Patrick Henry were defeated and the Constitution was ratified but by a narrow margin. In the big state conventions, if one delegate out of eleven who voted for ratification had changed his mind and voted against it, the Constitution would have failed of ratification and the Federal Union would not then have been brought into existence. Thus we came within one vote out of eleven of perpetuating state sovereignty and inter-state lawlessness.

In spite of these lessons of history, millions of patriots are still insisting that the nation must retain its sovereignty and continue to exercise the right to do as it pleases. These men are as blind as were the ancients who insisted that the clan must never give up its right to do as it pleased, and that the tribe must never submit to the authority of a super-tribe. They are as blind as were the city patriots of Athens and Sparta who would not bow to inter-city government. In our day international government is as urgently needed as were these lesser forms of government in their day.

If five angelic beings could not peacefully and safely drive automobiles on a congested highway if each one did as he pleases, how much more true is it that vast nations of a hundred million patriots—patriots who are by no means angelic in character—cannot live together in peace and harmony if each national government does as it pleases.

This truth may be emphasized by examining the basic doctrines of nationalism: national sovereignty, national interest, national armaments. The theory now is that the nation must make the decision, the nation must look after its own interests, the nation must be prepared to use arms in supporting its interests. Thus God's family is divided into sixty-five sub-divisions, each part claiming the right to do as it pleases.

Millions of patriots in our day are as bitterly opposed to international government as Patrick Henry was opposed to inter-state government. Throughout history, sovereignty has produced war, and everywhere the cure for sovereignty has been the creation of government and the bringing of ever-wider units of people within the sphere of law and order. In the light of this truth, I plan in another article to examine The United Nations.

WORLD PEACE AND BROTHERHOOD MISSION

What Can We Do?

by Lester Hostetler

The perennial question arising in our minds is, what can we do about it? We discussed it frequently during our mission. It is one thing to diagnose the causes of war and to analyze the present dangers of war throughout the world. It is quite another thing to suggest something the individual Christian can do toward a solution of the problem. The policies of the government are determined by men who do not entirely share our thinking. Our Congressmen make the laws and they, for the most part, have only scorn for the Christian doctrine of non-resistance.

There are, however, some things which all of us can do, individually or as groups. We can, if our hearts are clean from hatred, talk peace with others in our business and social contacts. Our newspapers and radio commentators are all saying the things which incite people to war. Everything they say of Russia, for example, is designed, consciously or unconsciously, to instill the idea that all Russians are bad; that they can never be trusted; and that the only way to deal with them is by violence. We can counteract these inflammatory ideas by seeing the good in others and speaking about it and reminding ourselves and others that Christ died for all people, including our enemies. The true Christian always holds a certain optimism regarding human nature. He believes that all people have the capacity to respond to love and good will and that it is possible to deal with them on that basis. If a million Christian people in America would live and talk in this faith, the public sentiment would turn to peace and our legislators would be compelled to reckon with it.

It may be that as a group, peace minded people could do more to advertise their beliefs. The American Friends' Service Committee recently ran full page advertisements in the Chicago Tribune, the New York Times, and other metropolitan dailies, clearly and succinctly stating their views of the present world problem, and suggesting the need for peaceful relations with other countries. It was an effective use of the printed page. We are inclined to hide our light under a bushel; to let war minded people control all the media which create public opinion, and to allow others to distort our peace doctrines and prejudice the public against peace groups. There are millions of people who will follow a Christian peace program that is stated openly, in practical and effective terms.

We all can write to our Congressmen and express to them our concerns. Sometimes we wonder if the men in Washington take the time to read our letters and cards and petitions. The answer is that some do and some don't. Most Congressmen welcome any expression of sentiment from the people, especially in personal letters. Others have said that they pay little attention to letters and petitions. One Representative declared that a stack of telegrams or form letters received in one day help nobody except the telegraph company and the post office. For he is convinced that such periodic deluges are the result of a small minority's activities, probably a single spell-binder who persuades people to write or telegraph. But the expression of honest opinion in plain and sincere manner is every voter's privilege and may do some good. It certainly does no harm and most Congressmen welcome it.

Personal correspondence with people abroad, if carried on in the right spirit, is interesting and helpful. It permits the writers to get closer together in spirit, to feel each other's heart beats, and to understand each other's problems and needs. If the common people from our country could keep up individual ties with the common people of other countries, it would build bridges of understanding and give support to the desire which all people have for peace. It is lamentable that the notes which heads of governments and their representatives pass back and forth have in them so little of the spirit of reconciliation.

All of us can continue in the work of relief and rehabilitation. We can be friends in time of need. We can bring new faith to those in despair and thus keep clear the channels of peace and good-will.

The problem of peace is never simple. Peace does not come by saying, "Peace, Peace," when there is no peace. The implications of peace are many and far reaching. Consider how difficult it is to keep peace in our own hearts and to maintain an attitude of good will in the home and neighborhood and school and church. Unless we live at peace with ourselves and in our own circles, it is not likely that we have much to contribute to world peace. The greatest thing any of us can do is to live so closely to the Prince of Peace that we will absorb His Spirit and become channels for the streams of living water that flow from Him for the healing of the nations.

Good News for at Least Some People with Asthma

There is good news for at least some asthma sufferers in the fact that it has now been clearly demonstrated that in certain cases asthma is due to mental and emotional conditions. David Fink tells the story of a man who developed asthma when he saw roses. The roses became significant in the case when Fink learned that this man used to give roses to the girl who later jilted him and filled his life with pain. George W. Gray tells of a man who entered a hospital for asthma treatment, was about to be released, and then came up with an attack of asthma every time he was to leave the hospital. It turned out he was a college teacher who had become entangled in a faculty fight and feared for his job. The walls of the hospital seemed more protective than the battleground of the college. E. Stanley Jones tells of a very conscientious man who was given a job too big for him. This man developed asthma every time he got into a jam and couldn't handle the situation. Some men of the Harvard Medical School cite the case of a man with a history of many years of severe asthma. After having doctored a great deal, the man entered the hospital with the idea that he might be studied from the psychiatric point of view. He came with a bag full of medicines which were to be taken according to the directions of his family doctor, but the psychiatrist in the hospital ordered the nurses to stop all medication. The patient was tremendously annoyed by this fact, especially so when he began to suffer from a fairly severe attack of asthma. He insisted upon seeing his new doctor, and when the doctor arrived, the patient was in the midst of one of his severe attacks. First, he asked the doctor for his medicines, but when the psychiatrist told him quite firmly that he could not have them, the patient flew into a terrible rage, cursing the doctor with a great vigor and volume. A moment later the asthma seizure abruptly stopped. James S. Chubb tells of a Kansas woman who came from a much divorced family and suffered from colitis and asthma. Both were in pretty advanced stages before things began straightening out. This woman heard Dr. E. Stanley Jones give a series of lectures the material of which was later incorporated in his book, Is the Kingdom of God Realism? This woman became more outgoing, she entered into a lot of service activities for others, she forgot herself, and after a few years the asthma was gone.

A CITY MISSION

by David Habegger

Interior of Mennonite Biblo Mission, Chicago.

The cry of many people today is that the place of the Mennonites is in the country, but there have been people with a larger vision who have felt that we also have a message to give to the people in the cities. Through the efforts of these people there is now situated among the thousands of people in Chicago two General Conference churches. One of these, the Mennonite Bible Mission, under the pastorship of Rev. John T. Neufeld, is located in a district that has many opportunities for the Christian Gospel. Although this district is only a mile long and a half mile wide, it contains twenty-five thousand people, and the Mennonite Bible Mission is the only Protestant church located in the whole district.

Ninety Per Cent Catholic

Among this large group of people the Catholics hold claim to 90 per cent, which leaves two thousand five hundred that either belong to some Protestant church or are non-church members. Although the church works among all the people, special attempts are made to reach the unchurched. Along with this work, the church tries to find and work with the Mennonite people who have moved into the city.

Race Mixture and Residence Shift

All city populations have two main characteristics in common which make them distinct from rural groups. The first is the mixture of races, and the second is the shifting of residence. This is especially true of the district I have mentioned. The people in this district have been classified into seventy-five different national backgrounds. The largest block of people, however, come from the central-European countries. The fact that the people in any one place are continually moving is evidenced by the fact that approximately fifty new children are enrolled every year into the Sunday school. Because the people move, there are not very many possibilities for a long-time on-going program. The children that you work with one year are not the ones you will work with the next, and also, the people you have attending church one year may not be the people you have attending ten years later to a large extent. It takes a person of faith and courage to keep the work going when the visible signs of progress are absent.

Begun in 1917. Membership Eighty

However, the church is growing. It was started in 1917, and today it has a membership of eighty. Fifty-five of the members are living within the district and form an active group. The average attendance is sixty.

Mission Church Is Conference-Minded

A remarkable thing about this church, which is not often found in any other church of its kind, is that it feels itself a part of the Mennonite Church and is conference-minded. During the war they supported the C.P.S. program and also the relief program. They are interested in missions, and one of their own members, who grew up in the community, has become a missionary. There are others that have gone into various phases of Sunday school work.

The Purpose of the Church

The purpose of the church is to bring people to a complete surrender to Christ and His way of life. The light of the Gospel is shed in dark places and the life of the church has an influence that cannot be estimated or evaluated.

THERE ARE OTHER MEN

"It seems to me there are other men in other lands, yearning and thoughtful. It seems to me I can look over and behold them in Germany, France, Spain, China, Russia and India, talking other dialects. It seems to me if I could know those men I should become attached to them as I do to men in my own lands. I know we could be brethren and lovers. I know I should be happy with them."—Walt Whitman

" . . . We respectfully declare that further extension of the power of the state over the lives of men through military training is not desirable; that government control of immature young people is undesirable; that God does have a way of dealing with evil doers through forgiving love and moral judgment; that history is a clear warning against this policy."

What I Think Most Significant in the Book, "Alternative to Futility"

(The book, Alternative to Futility, by Elton Trueblood was nominated more often than any other book by members of General Conference boards and committees when they were asked to name a book for review in The Mennonite. We hope that this symposium-review will bring some of its ideas to the readers and stimulate many of them to reading it.—Editor)

S. F. Pannabecker, President of Mennonite Biblical Seminary:

The Christian today is torn between the tendency to give up hope that the present world can be salvaged and the pressure to turn to unchristian ways of staving off further deterioration. The little book, Alternative to Futility, stands as an attempt to point a Christian way out. The first significant impression is just this, that there is a way out. This is most encouraging in face of the insipidity of much of the usual Protestant program and the bigotry of the Catholic.

The way out is found in redemptive societies, or fellowships of the redeemed—something once displayed in the early church and repeated in church history. The key word is fellowship. True fellowship is, first of all, a gift of divine grace and, secondly, the work and thought of dedicated men. It is marked by affection, a sense of equality, inner peace, and even boisterous joy. It is realized through commitment, witnessing, mutual responsibility, and particularly discipline.

The analysis of fellowship and suggestions for realizing it are stimulating. The book is a challenge to attempt the same thing in one's own prayermeeting or within the church group. There is nothing essentially new but rather a reinterpretation of the power of small groups when infilled with the Spirit and dedicated to God. Today's society, if infected with this type of fellowship, could rebuild the world as rapidly as the Germans, under Nazi-fostered morale, rebuilt their little land in the thirties.

Ralph Bargen, Bethel College student:

The terrible awareness is not so much, now, of the sense of "decay." Already we grow restless when we hear talk of decay.

The terrible need, now, is of some redemptive formula. Trueblood's book is given to this mood of urgency.

It is the urgency of immediate action, immediate revival of that elementary fellowship. It is no simple, middle-of-the-road formula. It is radical, just as the first Church in the first century was radical; radical, as the Franciscans were radical; as the Anabaptists were radical.

Trueblood speaks of a fellowship that we do not generally know in our day. The churches we have are not, generally, such fellowships. They are empty, "insipid."

Our churches could become dynamic fellowships of adventure in Christianity. But, first, there must be that conviction of each individual, the willingness to abandon the old forms that have proved useless, and the willingness, the desire, to venture into the new experiment.

And there must be a determined witness; "membership" must take on a new significance. "Make all... members of the crew and permit no passengers."

And throughout, there must be this sense of urgency, the sense of all-important choices, a sense of life or death. The "old," "in-between," "dependable," must be forgotten. It is a choice between the amoral mood of a scientific age and the urgent mood of a critical age.

Russel L. Mast, Pastor of First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio:

One of the most penetrating minds of our day is that of Elton Trueblood, who has recently published, Alternative to Futility. Perhaps more than other present-day writers he would appreciate the emphasis which Mennonite writers have been making in recent years. For instance, he declares that our hope lies in the creation of small redemptive societies within the Church Universal, "devoted to the recovery and fulfillment of radical Christianity." That, we believe is what Mennonite communities and churches should endeavor to do. But on the other hand, there are statements which ought to challenge the emphasis usually made in Mennonite circles. Consider this: "We cannot be loyal to adventurous movements in the past (The Anabaptist?) by copying from their procedure: the only way in which we can be loyal to an adventurous movement is by going beyond it in being adventurous ourselves." One wonders whether the founders of the Anabaptist movement would feel quite at home in the quiet, complacent, conservative atmosphere of our Mennonite communities. Another point of issue which he raises concerns the nature of the church. "Those who make up this nameless order are not united by their virtue, for they are not virtuous . . . " "The Christian church is a society of sinners." That emphasis is exceedingly important in a group like our own which emphasizes the absolute claim of Christ in the whole of life. Any perfectionist ethic must offset the dangers of legalism and pharisaism by holding to the concept that we are yet a society of sinners, albeit, sinners who recognize their need for Christ.

Along with our historical research let us dare to blaze new trails, not to forget the old, but to fulfill it, not to lose our historic emphasis, but to make it vital within the framework of the modern world.

L. L. Ramseyer, President of Bluffton College:

Dr. Trueblood sees escape from the sense of futility which is common in our society today to be in a renewed and revitalized faith in God. This must become active through Christian fellowships. The individual must be thoroughly committed to the life and purpose of this fellowship. The church has become too inactive, with responsibilities held far too lightly on the part of its members. He stresses the great importance of discipline on the part of the members of the church body. In the early church such a disciplined, concerned, and deeply spiritual group brought about great changes. We cannot expect the church to have a great impact on the world until we recover that deep concern and are willing to accept Christian discipline. This deep concern must become active in service.

The spirit of the book can best be shown by a few quotations. "We are in a time of crisis when we need a dynamic fellowship to turn the world upside down." "How is civilization changed? It is changed, early Christianity answers, by the creation of fellowships which eventually become infectious in the entire cultural order." "Once a church was a brave and revolutionary fellowship, changing the course of history by the introduction of discordant ideas; today it is a place where people sit on comfortable benches, waiting patiently until time to go home to their Sunday dinners." "Powerful groups, for whatever ends, are disciplined groups, whereas libertarian movements end in futility." "Worship that does not result in service is barren; service that does not arise out of worship is superficial and rootless."

The church will become powerful when its members become more deeply concerned, more deeply spiritual, and more willing to accept discipline for what they believe. This is Dr. Trueblood's theme.

Contrast in India

(The following letter by the Edward Burkhalters was written to the Executive-Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board on April 3, from Champa, C.P., India.)

We wish that you could have been with us early Easter morning to attend the Easter Dawn Service held here in Champa in typical Indian fashion. It made quite an impression on us who were in India for our first Easter. Easter begins early in India!

At 4 A. M. we were awakened by the ringing of the nearby church bell. We turned over for a couple more minutes of rest, but thoughts of sleep left us as we began to hear the jabbering of Christian children from the local compound. They had come to the chumpa tree near our beds to shake down the beautiful white blossoms, with which they intended to decorate the graves in the Christian cemetery.

In a few minutes they were gone, and then shortly they reappeared in a group, carrying bamboo torches and singing the Hindi version of "Christ the Lord is Risen Today." That, and other Easter songs, came floating over the dry rice fields, for three other groups of Christians from the local community were marching toward the forks of the road. They also held their torches high, and as the groups converged in the dimness of the early morning they looked like a regular "Gideon's Band."

We joined them as they marched on to the cemetery. The first rays of the morning sun were just breaking as the Easter Dawn service was held amidst the flower-bedecked graves.

This service was quite a contrast to the heathen festival called "Holi" which occurred just three days before. This "Holi" festival is far from holy, for the celebration is used as an excuse for all kinds of evil, and a woman with any moral standing whatever certainly won't be seen in the village "streets" that night.

In mythology there was a king who had a son and a daughter. The daughter, whose name was Holika, had the power to emit fire. The king set himself up as a god and obtained the worship of everyone except his son. The father tortured his son, but to no avail. Finally Holika was called to do away with this son by burning him, but he would not be burned for he was such a good man. To commemorate the life of this son, and the dislike for Holika, they now have this heathen festival called "Holi" after Holika.

The festival is indescribably vile in its obscenities, especially in south India where they almost always include animal sacrifices. On the night before the festival, the people get into groups and build a large fire which is to represent the fire of Holika. They sit around it all night, singing songs to the weird rhythm of the drums and giving "golli" (Indian swearing) to Holika.

Early the next morning they throw rocks and dust to put out the fire. However, the throwing doesn't stop there, for they throw things at each other and spray everyone in sight with red water. What a contrast this was with the Easter Dawn service held by the Christians:

We are studying Hindi with an added impetus after witnessing these events. In a few weeks we will be joining the other language students in traveling to Landour to attend language school. We will appreciate your continued prayers as we all strive to master this necessary tool for making the gospel known.

Our Home Mission Work

by Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

BEFORE Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Friesen flew to South America recently, they were privileged to attend the Eastern District Conference where they renewed friendships and made new friends who were interested in the Mennonite refugee problem. Reverend Friesen spoke in three Eastern District churches on May 2.

By this time, the Friesens have undoubtedly already visited and conferred with General Conference Mennonites in Brazil. After a short visit there, they were to fly on to Paraguay, where they will work most of the two years they will be gone. Let us pray that God may give them the necessary vision, patience and wisdom to make the right decisions to help our brethren in their new conditions and circumstances.

Ministers Change in Mexico

Rev. and Mrs. Frank P. Dyck, who have served nearly two years in the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church, Cuauhtemoc, Chih., Mexico, are returning to Canada with their daughter. Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Boldt, Osler, Saskatchewan, will succeed them. Reverend Boldt has been teaching public school in Saskatchewan. Both he and his wife have felt the call of the Lord to give themselves fully into His service and so the decision was not hard for them. They hope to attend the Canadian Mennonite Conference in July, and soon thereafter leave for the new field.

Developments in Toronto, Ontario

The field in Toronto, Ontario, was opened in the fall of 1943, when Rev. Arnold A. Fast went there as full time worker. On January 1, 1947, Rev. and Mrs. H. Albert Claassen, took up the work for a period of two years. The group had a temporary organization until recently. In the last few weeks they have voted to form an organization, adopt a constitution, and to accept charter members. The group has adopted the official name of "United Mennonite Church of Toronto."

Early in the year the Claassens asked the Board to be permitted to return to their home in Beatrice, Nebraska, before the winter snows would set in. The Board, in cooperation with the group, extended a call to Rev. Frank P. Dyck to take up the work in Toronto. The call was accepted, and so the Dyck family will begin its work in the United Mennonite Church of Toronto, September 1, 1948.

practically every form of medicine, have good news in knowing that it may not be so much the physical body but rather the mind and the emotions that may cause their asthma. The individual with emotional trouble can frequently find help in a good Christian counsellor. This Christian truth was expressed by James long ago when he said, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed."

Peace Committee Boosts Institute of International Relations

The Peace Committee of the Western District is boosting attendance at the Institute of International Relations to be held in Wichita, June 4-13. The ticket referred to may be used by one or a number of persons.

The Committee feels that during these threatening times " . . . . our Mennonite churches have a serious obligation to get behind all those efforts made in the direction of international peace and understanding."

CALL FOR CHRISTIAN SCHOOL TEACHERS

Elsie Pfister, Incline, Kentucky, writes to the Board of Home Missions that they have need for Christian teachers in their country schools.

"Our country schools are almost closed now (March), but July, when they open again, is not far away. Teachers are very scarce and our superintendent asked us, just a few days ago, if we could find a Christian teacher or teachers who would be willing to teach here. Anyone with sixty-four hours of college could be placed without question. You might know of someone who would like to take up this ministry, if only for one school year. We would be glad to be put in touch with anyone who may be interested.

This seems to be a real opportunity to render Christian service in a needy field and to study rural conditions where our mission workers are laboring. Since July is not too far off, we suggest that anyone interested write to Miss Pfister immediately.

Mennonite World Conference Coming

Fourth Mennonite World Conference to Convene at Goshen, Indiana, and North Newton, Kansas

The first post-war Mennonite World Conference has been in preparation for some time. It is being sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee which has set up a number of sub-committees to work out detailed plans. A wide-range program including all vital phases of Mennonite practices, concerns, and activities has been prepared for discussion. The subjects will be presented by Mennonite representatives from various countries.

Some fifty delegates are expected to come from countries like Holland, Germany, France, Switzerland , Brazil, Paraguay, and the foreign mission fields. Various groups of Mennonites from the United States and Canada will be present in great numbers.

The Conference is to convene from August 3 to 10. The first session of the Conference is to be held at Goshen, Indiana, from August 3 to 5 and the second at North Newton, Kansas, from August 7 to 10.

A World Conference of Mennonites is by nature and purpose somewhat different from the usual American Mennonite group conferences of organized bodies which meet mainly to discharge their regular business. Little business will be taken up, but like at other conferences, there will be ample opportunity for fellowship and for gaining inspiration and information—all on a world-wide scale. It will be most worthwhile to attend. Keep these dates in mind when you are planing your summer's activities.

This will be the fourth Mennonite World Conference. The first one was held in Switzerland in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Mennonite Church. The second took place in Danzig and dealt mainly with the problem of helping the Mennonite refugees who had just come from Russia. The last one, in 1936, was held in Holland partly in commemoration of Menno Simons' conversion. It was the best planned and best attended of all. We are looking forward to a well represented and a well attended fourth World Conference in America.

A WORD FROM P. H. RICHERT

Dear Mission Friends:

A few weeks ago Miss Kornelsen from Canada stopped in here to bid me farewell on her way to India. The Board has appointed her for India, but the treasury does not at present permit to send her. She is only the second missionary from Canada to India. So I believe the churches in Canada will wish to help send her. Miss Marie Duerksen from Newton is also ready to go to India. So this appeal is also for her. I should perhaps have waited with this appeal until the Secretary of the Board made the appeal, but he is usually very busy. So he will not object to this.

Sincerely yours, an old mission friend,
P. H. Richert

I.R.O. to carry Mennonite refugees to South America, left Bremerhaven, Germany, on May 17. The Charlton Monarch, is carring 258 men, 268 women, and 232 children under sixteen years of age. Arrangements are being made to transport these people inland by river boat from Buenos Aires, to Paraguay.

With the departure of this group, the number of Mennonite refugees who have been able to leave Europe since the end of the war totals 3,923 to South America, somewhat over 1,100 to Canada, and 36 to the United States. This represents nearly half of the 11,000 homeless Russian Mennonites who were located in Western Europe at the end of the war. It is hoped that a substantial number of those remaining can come to Canada within the next months, and that legislation in the United States will also permit entrance of a larger number to the United States.

In order to help coordinate the efforts in Mennonite refugee migration, William T. Snyder, Director of the Mennonite Aid Section, left on May 20 for a short period of work in Europe, contacting not only our Mennonite workers, but also various officials who are in position to give assistance in our refugee program.

Thanks In Advance

Some people never say "Thank you."

Some people are courteous, and say "Thank you," whether they mean it or not.

Some people say "Thank you," but it took them a long time to get around to it.

And some people say "Thank you,"—in advance.

Take, for example, Paul Schrauder, refugee artist from the French Zone in Germany. We received a little note from him some weeks ago indicating that he was an artist and wondering whether there might not be some people in the States who would be willing to send him a food parcel—say, for example, a CARE package—in exchange for some paintings. We wrote him asking whether we could see a sample of his work.

Lo and behold, one day a package arrived on which there was $2.20 duty, and upon opening it we found four oil paintings.

You can't eat oil and when a man is hungry—and can paint with oils!—no wonder he wonders whether there aren't some people—somewhere—who would be willing to give him something to eat for these oils.

This morning three more oil paintings arrived—three more dollars duty . . . .

These oil paintings—as many as are still left of them—are on display now at 722 Main. Each painting is Schrauder's "Thank You" in advance for something to eat. Oils are permanent—these pictures will grace any home permanently!—but good will is more so—the greatest of these is, after all, "love."

College and Seminary News

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Commencement exercises this year were held on Friday, with Rev. Edmund Miller presenting a challenging address on "Planned Lives for Kingdom Services." Fifty-four students graduated, twenty Academy Seniors, nineteen First Year and six Second Year Teachers Training Students, and nine received the Associate in Arts Degree. In connection with this service Rev. Edmund Miller was formally installed as the new president of Freeman Junior College. The installation services were opened by Adolph Preheim, President of the Board of Trustees, who presented the "charge" to the new president. This was followed by a dedicatory prayer by Dean Harold Gross, after which Rev. Miller responded by accepting the charge presented to him. Rev. George Warkentine, chairman of the Mennonite Ministerial Association of this area, pledged the prayer and co-operation of the churches to President Miller in his new work. The services were closed when Rev. Orlando Goering pronounced the benediction. We wish to welcome President Miller and his family to the campus and to the community and to pledge them our co-operation, our prayers and wishes for great usefulness in the important field of Christian Education.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Arnold Nickel of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, who will graduate in 1949, was elected president of next years student body, succeeding Jacob Goering of Newton, Kansas.

Katie Andres, the librarian, was in Newton, Kansas, this week attending the funeral of her brother, Gus Andres.

Andrew R. Shelly of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church of Kitchener, Ontario, was on the campus two days this week discussing the plan for the elimination of the Seminary debt by the end of June. In addition to visiting churches across the United States and Canada, Brother Shelly has sent out almost four hundred letters to various supporters of the Seminary in connection with our financial needs.

The lectures of Dr. Franklin H. Littell of the University of Michigan were also greatly appreciated. Dr. Littell emphasized that the Anabaptist vision is being rediscovered by many Christians today.

One of our students, Harold Thiessen, is a piano tuner by avocation. This week he practiced his skill on one of our seminary pianos.

BETHEL COLLEGE

A pre-enrollment for the summer session was made on May 22, promising a larger than usual attendance during the summer terms, which run from June 3 to July 9 and from July 12 to August 4. Mr. Eldon Graber is director of the Summer school. Campus building and improvements, which have been carried on throughout the winter, will be intensified during the summer months. Among the larger projects is the erection of the new Student Industries Building on the corner of Twenty-Fourth Street and Main, providing for more classrooms in the main buildings. Maple Home, the former dining hall, will be moved to West Twenty-Seventh, the upstairs remaining an apartment and the downstairs made available to the Music Department. The completed Health Center will also provide four new apartments and extra guest quarters, and a house for faculty use has been moved in on West Twenty-Fourth. During the month of June the A Cappella Choir will visit communities on the Pacific Coast. At least twelve Bethel students plan to serve in MCC Summer Voluntary Service and seven will be among the Mennonite students on tour in Europe.

Two terms of summer school will be offered at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, beginning on June 3. The first term will end July 9 and the second will convene on July 12 and end August 4.

In addition to regular Liberal Arts courses that will be offered, special provisions have been made for teachers to meet certificate renewal requirements. Several new courses will be introduced for both five and three quarter hour credits. Among them will be "Guidance in the School," "Family Health," and "Agricultural Economics."

Students may earn a maximum of eight quarter hour credits the first term and five quarter hours the second, and a quarter hour of music for both terms. This enables a student to earn a total of fourteen quarter hours for the summer.

Classes will meet only in the morning. The library, laboratories, dormitories, dining hall, gymnasium and other facilities of the regular school term will be open to summer students. A program of recreation is planned.

Registration will be held on Thursday, June 3, for the first term and Monday, July 12, for the second.

Anyone interested in securing information regarding the summer terms may contact the Director of the Bethel College Summer Session, North Newton, Kansas.

The Washington Scene

By Paul Goering

May 25. The draft appears to have a high enough priority to enable it to get through the legislative log jam facing Congress, and despite the evidence piling up in congressional hearings showing how the Army and defense department scuttled the Reserve components of the armed forces, it seems unlikely that the draft can be stopped. Many congressmen would prefer not to vote on the draft, but they are reluctant to vote against it.

Although the military has demanded UMT on the grounds of building up the reserves, members of Reserve organizations have testified that the Army hasn't even written to the men who enlisted in the Reserve after the war nor given them training. This and other recent events have slowed the military drive, and opposition to the draft is now the highest it has been at any time since the President's message on March 17. But the break is not big enough to defeat the draft.

The Pentagon has been turning the heat on Rep. Allen, chairman of the House Rules Committee. Allen has given the bill a severe testing and it is reported that his Committee is equally divided on the question of giving the bill a rule for getting it on the floor.

They are highway and cabin tract distributors. They showed a sound film.—Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: A few weeks ago on Sunday evening, Everett Mishler told us about his experiences in Washington, D. C., trying to contact a number of Congressmen against the draft peace-time conscription bill. The Sunday our pastor attended the Middle District Conference in Wayland, Iowa, Dr. J. E. Hartzler took charge of our services. The young adult class has completed mimeographing the church constitution. We celebrated Mother's Day in our church as "The Festival of the Christian Home" and also had infant consecration. The Girl's Gospel Team quartet of Bluffton College had charge of our evening service. We had our annual Mothers and Daughters meeting of the Missionary Circle on Tuesday evening and our speakers were Tineka Spuijman and Frieda Siemens of Holland and Paraguay respectively, both students of Goshen College. Those Who Have Died

REV. CORNELIUS FREY, who passed away on March 24, was interested in education and missions. When young he attended various schools, including the Halstead Seminary. He attended Bethel College part time for a long number of years. He had a hunger for wide reading and self study. Mission work was also close to his heart. For eight years he served a church in Oklahoma, and for many years he served churches when called to help out. He also taught school, did editorial work and in addition farmed. He was a man who was interested.

It's All Over

Ah! It's all over! School is over! The work is one, the grades are in! And this is the end result. tiny mark tells what was accomplished after months f effort. If those months of work were done with nthusiasm, interest and application, the little mark ells about it. If those months of work were ones of etting by, idleness, and lack of interest, the little ark tells about it.

It is always interesting to learn what others ink of us. The eagerness on these faces reflects that interest. What does the teacher judge I was worth this semester? How do I rate with the school and with my fellow students?

It always feels good to finish a job. It always feels good to wind things up and then be able to say, "That's that." So it is with school. Yet, doubtless most students will by next fall be looking forward to the beginnings of a new session. School has ended. Now for a summer, active, profitable and with lots of interesting fun.

The Winner

A Story

by Ruth Steffen

"I'm awfully hot—aren't you?" cried Tom as he wiped off his perspiring brow.

"Yes, same here, but we'd better hurry if we intend to make it to the swimming pool in time for the race," said Larry. And with that they both peddled their bikes all the faster.

On this sultry summer afternoon with not a cloud in the azure sky, Tom and Larry, who were pals, were making their way to the swimming contest. They were going to try to win a lifesaving race, for whoever won the contest became the pool lifesaver. There was no doubt about it that Tom would win, but he was a modest chap and wouldn't admit his skill.

The rules, however stated that the contestants had to be at the pool at a certain time to be eligible. The boys, with a fear of arriving late, suddenly heard a shrill woman's cry—"Bobby!" Bobby!"

Without hesitation the boys tried to place the cries. Then they heard, "Boys! Oh, boys! Come quickly!" Up the road a piece they saw Mrs. Johnson frantically waving to them.

"I wonder what's wrong," said Larry.

"Let's hurry!" called Tom.

Mrs. Johnson was weeping and calling, "Hurry—please!'

"What's the trouble?" inquired Tom.

"Bobby, Bobby's lost!" she exclaimed.

"Lost!" echoed Larry, "when did you see him last?"

"Oh, about an hour ago he was playing by the near woods and when I looked out for him, I couldn't find him. Please help me!"

Tom and Larry exchanged looks; the same things passed through their minds; they would miss that all important race! They stood looking at each other when Tom finally spoke, "I'm staying. Quick, go call the police and tell the other kids that they might help in the search."

Quickly Larry was off and Tom started running toward the large woods calling for Bobby. There was an emptiness in Tom's heart as he ran and a big lump in his throat. The rules of the contest said that you must be on time. He'd never make it! He'd never get the chance to try out to become lifesaver!

Soon he forgot the race and was all in earnest in finding three-year-old Bobby. "The first thing," he said to himself, "is to locate any wells or creeks round about here." It came to his mind that there were creeks around and possibly no wells. Yet somewhere in the back of his mind he vaguely remembered once seeing a large well around the woods. The all-important thing was to find the well!

Tom kept looking for any evidences that might show that little Bob had been around. After looking for over half an hour, he found a little dirty shoe. Evidently it was Bob's finding the shoes which gave him new courage.

Just then he heard a noise which sounded like a faint cry. He stopped and listened—perhaps it was just his imagination working tricks on him, so yelling all the time, he continued his search.

As he kept going deeper into the woods he heard another noise—sure it was Bobby! Exhausted he ran towards the noise and sure enough about five hundred yards ahead of him was Bobby sitting on the well looking down. Tom was about to yell "Bobby" when he remembered it might scare him, and in he'd fall. But before Tom could bat an eyelash, Bob had lost his balance and had fallen into the well. Tom heard the large splash, and was so scared he could hardly think. As he remembered it, that well was deep and filled with water. He ran with all his might to the well and peered into its deep blackness. He couldn't even see Bobby—.

Hastily pulling off his shoes and shirt, Tom slowly descended the rope. The walls were brick and very cold, for the day was hot. The well was wide and deep, and he thought he'd never get to the water. He finally hit with a splash. In order to locate the boy he had to wait a moment to catch his breath, then he dived down not knowing where Bob was. Shivering in the cold, black water, he felt all around for him. Soon he had to come up for air; then back down he went again. Still no trace of him. Up he came again. Maybe Bob never fell in—he had heard that sometimes people saw things they really didn't see—mirages they were called. But he was sure he had seen Bob. He prayed for help; God had never failed him before and wouldn't now.

His lungs filled with air and a prayer on his lips, Tom dived down again. After he had swum all around and was almost out of breath, he felt something soft—it was Bob! Quickly taking him by his hair, he swam upward. He grasped the rope and put little Bob around his neck. The question now came to him—how was he going to get out of the well. It would have been a job getting himself out let alone carry a burden up. He got a strong hold on the rope and began yelling at the top of his lungs for help. However, the walls just seemed to re-echo his voice with "help, help, help," and died away. Tom felt little Bob's pulse. It was very, very weak.

Tom continued calling for help. He himself was weak and little Bob's thirty pounds seemed like ninety. Bob felt so cold, too. Tom prayed hard and asked God to help him hold out and to bring someone to help.

The race at the pool, no doubt, was on, perhaps it was over; he didn't know; he couldn't even guess the time. He then looked up and in the sky saw a star. It seemed to encourage him and revive him. Scripture verses he had learned came to him—"Lo, I am with you always"—were Christ's words and also, "Be not afraid, neither be dismayed, for I am your God and will deliver you." These verses strengthened him and Christ seemed very near. Yet Tom continued calling.

His arms ached and his legs felt like lead wrapped about the thick rope. His hands were numb and he felt chilly. He was slowly giving out. He had been in the well over a half hour. When his strength was about exhausted, he heard footsteps and voices. Tom called and called in a very weak tone. Before he knew it, he was being raised out of the musty old well to safety! Policemen were standing around and cries were set forth from different ones to others that Tom and Bobby were found.

People seemed to be coming from all directions. Tom, with a little meager amount of strength left, managed to administer artifical respiration to Bob, and in about ten minutes Bob's eyes fluttered open and he muttered a weak, "Mommy, Mommy."

Tom stood up and his eyes met Mr. Brown's. Mr. Brown was the man who was to judge the swimming race. He asked Tom briefly what had happened. Tom told him. Mr. Brown raised his hand for silence, since a number of people were standing around.

"Tom, I consider the thing you did very heroic and exceedingly noble. Not everybody could have done the job you did and have done it so well. I'm sure Bob's parent's are most grateful to you, and in reward for your work, I'm giving you the position as lifesaver at the pool."

Tom couldn't believe his ears—"But, but, what about the race? Didn't you have the race?" he stammered.

"No, Tom, Larry came just as the contest was about to start and we all volunteered to help find Bob. We won't need a race—you've won! Congratulations!!

"Before You Decide" —

The tense nature of world events, the sharp conflict existing between world powers, the continued militarization is all a deep and thorough-going challenge to the church. The fact that the Church of Christ was non-resistant throughout the first two centuries of its existence and, in the main, it continued so the first three centuries is startling to us today who see the Church of Christ in the main condoning and supporting war.

Yet, we find in the ancient church of the first centuries a vitality and drive which did not permit the severe persecutions of the Roman government to quench its fire. Rather we find each bit of Roman violence met with an ever larger body of Christians until by 325 the Emperor himself condoned Christianity.

Today the scene is all too different. Where the early church charted its own course, all too often the modern church follows the course charted by the state. Where the early church was unapologetically Christian, all too often individual Christians today are apologetic about it. Where can strength lie in such a situation? It can't for there is no strength in a body which is humiliated over the fact that it is a body!

There is a certain amount of indifference among individual Christians is the church of today. Indifference, that is, toward the demands of Christian faith. Since everyone orders his life around some goal, we find all too often those who order their life around a goal quite inadequate and insufficient. And by so doing, they leave the riches of Christian faith untouched in their lives.

There is a reason for this. The reason would seem to be that life values are tied up more in things other than that offered by the Church. Somehow the Church of Christ has not adequately presented the depths of Christian truth or people have been so busy they have not understood the truth proclaimed. Likely both sides have failed somewhat at least.

These days are again challenging men with choices. Their choices are between Christian reality and lesser reality. Certainly the machinery of war and all it implies is a lesser reality! When a nation, such as America, proclaims itself a peace-loving nation and at the same time spends 80 per cent of its national budget on the machinery of war, it is obviously mixed up in its thinking. When that is true, it means that either once again the church will knuckle under and permit the nation to decide its course of action, or it will stand up to be counted among those who choose to serve the Lord.

In the Book of Isaiah we read that the Israelites chose to depend on horses and chariots, and it resulted in their destruction. Isaiah saw a choice between horses and chariots and God. Will the church of today see such a choice, or will the church work out some neat compromise permitting it to get on the saber rattling band wagon, while it mouths platitudes about the righteousness of God? Now is the time to decide.

Collecting Pins

by Adina Albrecht

So many seem to think that hobbies are a nuisance. Maybe they are to some extent, but it all depends on how you go at them. As for any invalid, handicapped, or shut-in. person, I would say, have at least one or more hobbies, as you prefer.

They are a very nice pass-time, and one more or less forgets about his worries and troubles. I would also say, exchange hobbies with others, some just exchange or swap, that's all—no writing necessary if you don't care to write. But I, for myself, prefer pen-pals. They seem to give you a new interest in life, and it does seem that you get more in contact with the world and its surroundings.

I am handicapped, and get around in a wheel chair. I cannot use my legs; my arms and hands aren't any too good. I was stricken with polio in my early teens, and have really missed out on all the activities of life which one enjoys as he goes along in life, but do enjoy life as it is.

For the last seven or eight years, I have taken up my pen-pals and hobbies. Others may prefer other hobbies then what I have chosen. But there are so many different kinds, so one can choose as to his likes.

My hobbies are collecting pins, postmarks, seals, and snapshots of friends and pen-pals. I also collect coins—mostly U.S money. However, I do have coins from India, Iran and Deutschland.

Another thing of interest in my line of hobbies is the "widow's mite" which you read about in the Bible, Mark 12:41-44. This was given to me by a minister who had been to the Holy Land.

Pins are my main and most interesting hobby. I take them old and new, such as the brooch or dress pins, novelty, and the button or campaign pins.

I started this collection in November, 1941, and have 1,885 pins at present. My aim is to reach the two thousand mark by the end of the year. I have them from all the states, and many foreign countries, namely, Alaska, Japan, South and Old Australia, Puerto Rico, Manila, Norway, Russia, Ireland, England, Germany, China, India, Palestine, Old Mexico and Canada.

Why have I chosen this hobby? I always did take an interest in pins of various kinds, I had seen a small collection at a friend's home, which really appealed to me. So I decided I would start one too, A sister from Montana was here on a visit then, and she insisted on getting me started. I began with only one, but it didn't take long until I had hundreds of them. My intentions were to get at least one from each state which took quite some time, for I got most of them by exchanging hobbies with pen-pals. But there are a great many given to me by friends. People seem to take a great interest in them, and ask to see them which makes it all the more interesting.

Now to tell you something of the various pins I have. One of great interest is from our late missionary to India, F. J. Isaac of Mountain Lake, Minnesota. This pin is made in the form of an elephant, from Sandal wood which only grows in India. This wood has a fragrant, spicy odor, the oil being used for perfume and medicine. It is also used in many ways in the religious worship of the Hindu people. Then I have pins from other missionaries. One from Wilhelmina Kuyf, our missionary to China; another from missionary Browns when they were prisoners in Japan during our last World War.

One of my pins has an interesting history. A sweetheart gave it to his lady friend before he went to the Civil War. She treasured it greatly because he never did return. This pin is now in my collection.

NOTE: When writing specify both old and new address.

Another one is from an eighty-year-old lady. It was her grandmother's when she was a girl, which proves that it must be a real old pin. I have another old pin, one from Norway which is between seventy-five and one hundred years old.

The Jewish Star from Palestine is among my various pins. It has the writing on it in the Hebrew language, meaning "Zion." The three monkeys—"Speak no evil, see no evil, and hear no evil" is also in my collection. Others are from a Montana agate; South Dakota pheasant; the world's only Corn Palace at Mitchell, South Dakota; Rushmore Memorial in the Black Hills of South Dakota; one pin, hand carved, from the California Redwood Burl; New York's World Fair; Remember Pearl Harbor; and one of the capitol at Washington. I also have the Russian soldier's insignia, and the Italian Guard insignia pins. To top it all off, I have the British Windle pin, or the safety pin which is probably more familiar.

My pins are mounted on compa board covered with material, and classified according to the style of pin. The foreign pins are on a separate board.

You can probably understand now what I mean when I say hobbies are interesting and a nice pass-time. I'm sure everyone will find it so, especially handicapped people. I really would recommend hobbies for all.

New Peace Publication Available

Just off the press is a booklet entitled "Before You Decide" which is designed particularly to help our young people understand and follow the nonresistant way of life. The writing of this booklet had been planned some time ago, but only recently has it been possible to bring it to completion. However, in view of the recent developments within our country and among the nations of the world, the timeliness of this publication could hardly have been better chosen. It is felt that a copy of this booklet, "Before You Decide", should be in every Mennonite home, especially in those homes having young people. Copies may be secured from the Peace Section, MCC, Akron Pennsylvania for 20c per copy, or 15c each in lots of 12 or more.

THE HIDDEN REALITIES OF LIFE

by Jacob J. Enz

WHEN Paul said, "The things that are seen are transient (or temporal), but the things that are not seen are eternal," he underlined one of the most foundational truths of life. He was saying that the most treasured elements of life are not those that are the most obvious. He was saying that life's richest beauties cannot be seen with the physical eye. He was saying that life's greatest pleasures will not be found in the satisfaction of the desires of the body. He was saying that life's most valued possessions can never be identified with an abundance of wealth or earthly goods. In fact he was saying the abundant life is not necessarily to be identified with the our physical life, the one thing that we love more perhaps than anything else. In other words for the things that are most enduring we must, so to say, look beyond what the five senses make available.

Now on the surface of things there will undoubtedly be few who will object to this statement of a great fact of life. Many of us will be ready to affirm that Paul is exactly right when he says that the eternal things are the things that are not evident to the casual observer. But having affirmed this with our minds and lips, we fail the test with our lives.

A rich young ruler once came running and fell breathlessly at the feet of Jesus. He had faith in Jesus that he could give him the answer to what was for him life's most upsetting question, "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" He had faith in the ten commandments too, for when Jesus inquired about these the young man said, "All these have I kept from my youth up." But when Jesus put his finger on the one thing that eclipsed for him the very eternal life he was seeking with the words, "One thing thou lackest," the record has it that he went away sorrowful. Great possessions had come to have so much significance to him that he could not imagine himself in a world without them even though he had due respect for religion. He had become so taken up with the things that his eyes and hands craved that it was impossible for him to fulfill the craving of his heart—a craving that would continue long after the craving of his eyes and hands had passed away.

How common that temptation is even for the most sincere Christian! In the course of our God-imposed contact with the things of this world we, almost unknown to ourselves, confuse the appearances of this world with the enduring things of God. Of course God intended for us to enjoy the world that he created for us, but he never intended for us to let our attachment to this world become so intimate that we should come to feel that we could not live without them. For when we become enamored by anything or anyone in God's creation to such an extent that our love for God himself becomes secondary, then we are like the child who lavishes all its love on a puppy given to him by his father instead of loving his father all the more for his thoughtfulness in giving the dog; the child is the poorer for having received the dog even though it was given out of love. And how many of us though we have an abundance of God's gifts are veritably spiritual paupers because we don't have God himself who is life's only enduring treasure! Can we imagine a bride who spends all her time sitting and admiring her wedding ring and paying no attention to her new husband who longs for her love? That ring remains a treasure only as long as there is love manifested in devotion, helpful service, and tender concern for the one who gave it. If she continues however, in her admiration of the ring to the neglect of her husband she will lose her husband and happiness in the possession of the ring. This law of the hidden realities of life is everywhere evident on the human level; how urgent then that we begin to apply it on the divine level.

There is a law in God's realm, for example, to the effect that the only kind of permanent treasure a man has is the truth, the love, the righteousness, the unselfishness that he has learned in giving himself and all that he has to the advancement of the Kingdom of God. There is a law in God's realm that the kind of greatness that will be recognized forever is the humility of a man with a towel who washed his disciples' feet—humility that could stoop to the most menial task to help others. There is a law in God's realm that makes enduring peace the product of men who give their lives in the services of all and redemption of all mankind rather than the product of men giving their lives to sustain one nation with little concern for all. In fact, Christ said the only way of really being sure of having your life is to give it up.

The world and all that God has put into it for us is souring for us because we have wanted to put it into our pocket and walk off with it, instead of living lives of loving appreciation and devotion to the Father who gave it all to us. But this takes faith—faith to see God at the giving end of all we have, all we love, all that we experience; this takes faith—faith to see that love is more powerful than hate, that righteousness will overcome evil, that truth will surmount lies, that humility is greatness, that giving is really receiving, that dying is living, that giving up our lives to the will of God is the only way of ultimately possessing them. This faith, as the writer to the Hebrews states, "is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen." Only the eye of faith, hope, and love can behold the hidden realities of life.

We Need To Witness

Pacifists need to be inoculated and they need to be contagious. Both can be accomplished through a program of witnessing. In the first place, pacifists need to be grounded in the faith so that when the storms of war come, they can stand firmly. Such loyalty under testing is not achieved in a moment; it is the net result of a continued period of growth against increasingly severe obstacles. It is produced by something like inoculation. Let the pacifist be inoculated with a fairly severe dosage of opposition again and again and he will be able to withstand the fever of militarism when it rages. Thus as an individual witnesses of his faith, first in comparatively easy circumstances, and then in more difficult ones, he learns to know the arguments and feelings of those who disagree, and he grows in strength.

In the second place, pacifists need to pass their faith on to others in this day of threatened doom. There are some Mennonite communities—and some large ones at that—where it is practically impossible to find in the other churches of the community one individual who has been won to the C. O. position by the efforts of Mennonites. Perhaps, Mennonites could enter into programs with other people, or in small cell groups they could fellowship with those non-Mennonites who are most receptive to the attitude of non-resistance. Mennonites need to think through with others the question, "What can we as individuals do to prevent an atomic war?." We need to interact with others to get their views and to think creatively with them. If we are wrong, then we need to know that. If we are right, then we have something to offer. No man can be a pacifist unto himself and be a good pacifist.

French Show Lack of Faith

by Marvin Wasser

Nancy, France, May 24.—Have you ever considered how many common things happen during the course of a day that have the element of faith in mankind behind them! Take, for example, an imaginary day out of your life. After getting up in the morning you go to the front porch to get the bottles of milk. The milkman, in good faith, left them there before the sun had come up. Yet you probably never have given a thought to the possibility of them not being there. After eating breakfast you take your bicycle and ride to school and at the bike-rack at school you leave your bicycle unguarded and probably unlocked. On your way back from school, in the evening, you see a policeman at an intersection directing traffic, but you have no fear of him. Arriving at home you meet the news boy. It's the evening to pay him for the week. You pay him and, very likely, don't even bother about a receipt.

If you were to take these same circumstances in a French city, your picture would be completely different. You would not find any milk on your front porch, for who would want to have his precious ration of milk left outside unguarded. In France when you take your bicycle to work, to school or any place, you are sure to lock it when you leave it. And when you encountered the policeman, you wouldn't be at all surprised if he stopped you and demanded to see your ownership papers and your personal identity card. Paying a bill without placing a special government stamp on it and having the creditor sign it would be foolhardy according to French law.

This lack of faith in one's fellow-man in France is deplorable, and not only deplorable but dangerous, for it is contagious. It spreads, and the "trusting-soul" can easily "contact" the mistrust that is around him. He begins "to make sure" on action promised, he mistrusts his neighbor and eyes his servants suspiciously. Naturally this mistrust is not without cause: the impact of the War, five years of occupation, insufficient food rations, present world unrest, prices beyond reach, etc. But while it is explicable it nevertheless must be fought. Building up mutual trust is a hard and long assignment, but it must be one of the tasks of relief workers if their accomplishments are to advance the Cause of Christ's Kingdom.

THE UNIVERSE AND I

by Freeman Swartz

"The Heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handywork"
Psalms 19:1.

The boy took great delight in his uncle's new, hand-model, telescope. He was amazed to find that far off fields seemed to come to his backyard. He noted the brighter sparkle of the stars at night. The figures on the moon were seen in clearer lines.

One day he turned the "scope" around and looked into the large end. Nearby and close-up objects suddenly seemed far-away. A strange sense of distance came to objects which normally were within the reach of his hands. This was his first introduction to the principles of perspective and the laws governing optics. Of physics, he knew nothing!

I

The farmer riding his tractor was thrilled as he watched the finely textured soil roll of his mouldboard. An earthworm wiggled on the upturned sward; a mole blindly ran along the furrow, seeking for cover. He stopped, stepped down, picked up a handful of earth, squeezed it between his palm. While studying the resultant lump, to his mind came the report of the soil analyst as to its acidity and its fertility. He now saw its composition through the eyes of the chemist and appraised its productivity. He threw it away!

The husbandman walked over to an old peach tree, apparently having outlived its usefulness. As he drew some branches toward himself, he observed some faint pink-tinted buds pushing from their protective sheds. Here was evidence of new life that was vitalizing all things. Across the tall weeds which hid the meandering brook, he heard the clear raucus call of a pheasant, whose colorful carriage spoke of the energy that was stirring all animal life this warm spring day.

The toiler sat, awearied by the day's tasks, watching the evening stars come out. He cared not for constellations, nor regarded planets in rotations; he found release from the day's tension and received inspiration as their brillance lit the spacious dome above and beyond him. The chirp of a nearby cricket drew his thoughts earthward again.

II

The theologian sat in his study, pondering the thought of the ages. On the desk before him lay several large volumes. Through their media, he again walked in the grove surrounding the Academy and listened to Plato's enchanting "Idealism." He heard the echo of Socrates' sage council. The stimulus of Aristotle's subtle and penetrating wisdom moved him. So did the dialectics of St. Augustine, the clever skepticism of Abelard, the dogmatics of anselm and Thomas Aquinus.

He turned to fresher pastures, "The Age of Enlightenment." He followed the weighty, though somewhat unwieldly, stitches of the Saddler's Son as he threaded together the arguments in "The Critique of Pure Reason." He laboriously sought to follow the titan strides of Hegel as he explored "The Phemonenology of the Mind."

About him were volumes of encyclopedic and theological knowledge, shelves of literature, scientific textbooks—all within the small confines of his study. Here was brought to a focus the sum-total of man's discoveries of the mysteries of the Universe—and his mind could comprehend them— if time and energies allowed!

III

This blending of human knowledge and experience, the smell of newly turned earth, the soothing gurgle of the brook, the mating call of the bird, the sparkle of the star, the intricate meanings of angles and planes as they were related to geometric designs and relationships, the thought of the ages—religious, philosophical, scientific— this strange synthesis of facts and knowledge—Was this God?

Is the freshly plowed soil, the pruned tree, the landscaped lawn, the farmer? No! It is merely his handiwork. Is the study, the books, the notations, the theologian? Nay! They represent spheres and actions. They are both source and summation of his knowledge. They are the media of his expression. The form, the pattern, which makes up his being, but he exists apart and beyond them. The destruction of all of them is not the annihilation of the theologian nor of his personality!

Is this whole Universe—one whole, teeming with life, limitless in space and light, governed by laws and energies beyond the creation, control, or even conception of the human mind, God? Does God only exist in His Universe? Nay—no more than the farmer in his fields or the theologian in his studies—God is more than the sum-total of the whole. He is greater than the combination of all the factors—GOD IS!

"Thus saith the LORD, the heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool . . . ."
Isaiah 66:1

Confronted with such amazing revelation of the Greatness of God— a greatness of which the vastness and multiplicity of the Universe is not even a unit on a measuring stick—The Psalmist cried:

"Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it."

A poet fittingly prayed:

"'My heart leaps up when I behold
  A rainbow in the sky;
So was it when my life began;
So is it now, I am a man:
So be it when I grow old,
  Or let me die!
The Child is father to the Man;
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety."

Should Mennonites Register for the Draft?

by Gordon D. Kaufman

IT is becoming more and more apparent that another peace-time draft is imminent in America. President Truman has been repeatedly calling for such action on the part of Congress, and it looks as though Congress is at last going to heed his call.

Prior to the last war, when Congress passed a draft law, provisions for alternative service for those who had conscientious scruples against participation in war were obtained by Mennonites and other groups. It was felt by most pacifists that this concession on the part of the government was indeed a step of progress from the pacifistic point of view, and most pacifists were happy to cooperate with the program which was set up. However, there was a small group of pacifists who refused to cooperate with conscription at all. As the war progressed, this group was enlarged by numerous men "walking out" of Civilian Public Service camps and being sent to prison with the rest of the "non-cooperators." It is interesting to note that very few, if any, Mennonites were to be found among this group. Mennonites remained in the Civilian Public Service system throughout its duration. Quite a number of Mennonite men in C.P.S., however, began to re-think their position, and began to wonder if they should cooperate with such a program again, in the event of its enactment.

Officially, the various branches of the Mennonite Church have given little evidence of such a re-thinking of policy. This is probably partly because of the fact that official policies on such matters are not determined by the men who are actually affected by them. Perhaps the time has come for some of the younger pacifists within the Mennonite Church to call attention to some of the factors which have been influencing them in their re-thinking of the whole question of conscription. The fact that many non-Mennonite pacifist groups, such as the Quakers, have reconsidered their earlier positions on this matter should also cause Mennonites to take cognizance at least of the fact that other positions than the one they have officially committed themselves to, also have some merit, and should, perhaps, be considered.

I

The whole question of whether or not Mennonites should cooperate with the conscription machinery of the government can be analyzed usefully from at least three standpoints. The first is from the standpoint of the historic Mennonite opposition to war. (The position of non-resistance to which many Mennonites subscribe is assumed throughout this paper. No attempt will be made to defend this position, as such. Rather, we will here be concerned with the point at which the Mennonites, in view of their pacifist convictions, can and should draw the line on cooperation with the government.) There is probably only one reason for our government's use of conscription—that is to raise an army. As a matter of fact, conscription is defined by Webster as the "compulsory enrollment of men for military or naval service." Conscription bills have been introduced into Congress only when it was thought to be desirable to have a larger army than was available by voluntary means.

Now, looking at this from the Mennonite point of view, which considers the raising and use of an army as unnecessary, undesirable, and even unChristian, would it not seem highly inconsistent to cooperate with such a program?

When we turn from conscription proper to the question of registration, it becomes apparent that registration is for one and only one purpose: conscription. Hence, we can say that registration also is for no other purpose than to raise an army. Even though certain Mennonite leaders would like to have us believe that there is nothing "wrong" with registering, it would seem rather difficult to show how registration can be divorced from its sole purpose—to provide a list of names from which an army can be conscripted. And if it cannot be divorced from this purpose, is it not difficult to see how a Mennonite who claims to be a conscientious objector to war, and who refuses to go into the army on these grounds, can then go ahead and register, even though his registration is put into a separate list? It must be remembered that the sole purpose of the registration is to provide an army, not to set up several different lists of men available for different kinds of jobs.

II

Turning now to view the question from the standpoint of Christianity and democracy, we run into some interesting contradictions. One of the basic tenets of Christianity is the sacredness of personality. The reason for this position goes back to the corresponding belief that there is a special purpose which each life has to fulfill—every individual is in this universe because there is something which he, and only he, can contribute. Christianity, then, tries to bring out this unique capacity within each individual and tries to make him creative. Most of us believe that some form of democracy, with its emphasis on the individual personality, is the form of government under which Christianity flourishes best, because democracy allows the individual sufficient freedom to develop the unique, creative possibilities within himself.

Gordon Kauffman is a former C.P.S. man who is now doing graduate work at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. Mr. Kaufman states that he has not yet decided just what course of action he will take but that he thinks that these issues should be brought to the attention of Mennonites. (Editors note: By publication of this article The Mennonite by no means seeks to counsel those concerned not to register. We are publishing the article because we believe in the free exchange of ideas among men.)

Now let us turn to conscription. Conscription, we find, has its emphasis in an entirely different direction. In the army and in C.P.S. the most desirable draftee is the one who can take orders and perform them automatically, without raising a question. The individual is forced to become as nearly like the next fellow as possible. It is assumed, and correctly so, that the more thoroughly individuality can be drilled out of men, the more effective the draft program will be. While it is correct that this was more true of the army than of C.P.S., the system of complete authority from the top over the common draftee also prevailed in C.P.S. along with its implicit assumption that the ordinary person has neither the ability nor the right to determine for himself, with God's help, where he can be of greatest service to his fellowmen. Instead of viewing each man as having some unique feature to contribute, he is viewed as but one of many, all of whom must be forced to carry out the orders of those in authority. Conscription, whether for the army or for C.P.S., destroys the creative aspects of personality. Registration is the first step in the conscription program. Can Mennonites afford to participate in this program whose aim is to submerge and destroy the uniqueness of personality?

III

Now let us turn to view conscription from the pragmatic standpoint of what effects it will have on the international scene. Recently Russia announced her desire for peace talks with the United States. All of the peoples of the world desire disarmament and peace. Yet our government is reactivating bomber plants, building atomic bombs as fast as it can, and now is asking for the authority to conscript men again—a huge step in rearmament. The United Nations, we are told, was organized to keep the peace. How can the U.N., with practically no power, keep the peace when the most powerful nation on earth is doing all it can to prepare for war? Conscription is the last and biggest step necessary to announce to the world that we are ready and willing to fight another war. If our government takes this step, it is up to the American people who desire peace to make it known that they are unwilling to follow their government into war. Is there a more effective way of doing this than for a large number of people to resist conscription by refusing to be conscripted—by refusing to register? If we Mennonites are really working for peace, is there not a real opportunity to make a positive contribution by refusing to cooperate in any way at all with this, the most important remobilization step being contemplated by our government? Would it not serve as a clear witness to the entire world if there were thousands of people within America who would have nothing to do with the steps toward war which the American government is taking and who would be willing to show their resistance by refusing to register?

IV

In summary, we have very briefly surveyed the question of registration for conscription from three points of view. First, we have noted that the purpose of such a registration is only to provide a list of names from which to draw an army. Such a purpose is in conflict with the historic Mennonite pacifist position. Second, we have observed that the aim of conscription is to destroy the unique aspects of personalities and to make men into automatons, whereas the aim of Christianity is to bring out these very same unique characteristics in the Christian life, so that each man can make his contribution to his fellowmen. Registration, being nothing but the first step toward conscription, shares with it its anti-Christian aims. Therefore, we raised the question whether it should not be opposed as surely as conscription itself must be opposed. Third, we have noted the effect which conscription will have on the possibilities of world peace, and have also noted the possible beneficial effect the refusal to register by a large number of people might have.

In view of all of the implications in the above brief analysis of the question of registration, would it not seem that conscription and registration for conscription can accomplish only those things which Mennonites have historically opposed? In view of the above, then, what really significant reasons can be given in favor of pacifist Mennonites registering?

What Will I Give

by Elma Esau

"The army is advancing! We must leave our homes tonight before sundown! We may take only small suitcases with us! We must walk; the cars and wagons have all been taken by the army! We must take food for three weeks! We must take our bedding! What type of food shall we take? Is it more important to take food or clothing? We must take extra clothing, for it is bitterly cold!"

"The army is advancing! Come, children! Come quickly! Who will carry this suitcase? Who will push the baby carriage? Who will help grandfather?"

Those might have been some of the thoughts which raced through the minds of many and many a mother during the war years in the war torn countries over the face of the earth. The mother packed her clothing, bedding, and food as quickly as possible into small suitcases or bags which could easily be carried—wondering all the while whether she were taking the right things and whether their family would return in a few weeks. Of course, it was very, very difficult to take many provisions—especially when there were small children.

Not only mothers, but also fathers, grandmothers, grandfathers, small children, babies, doctors, invalids, butchers, shoemakers, bankers, farmers, the rich, and the poor—everyone had to move before the face of the oncoming army. This happened in many countries—not only once, but often two or three times to the same persons!

After several months—or even after a year when Elma Esau, who works in the M.C.C. headquarters, Akron, Pa., did several years of relief work in Europe. Before going abroad she worked in M.C.C. clothing centers. This is the first of a series of articles by Miss Esau.

the army had gone, some of the refugees were able to return. And what did they find? Homes which were bombed, burned, or looted. Their beautiful cities were heaps of ashes. Their farms were overrun with entanglements, and crops and livestock were destroyed. They did not find things as they had left them. And what of those who were unable to return to their homes? Many of them moved into barrack camps or lived in temporary shelters in the ruins.

Of course, their CLOTHING was gone, too. All that they had was what they were wearing on their backs and what they were carrying in their worn bags. And what of those who had lost even the little they had saved from their homes? An only dress or suit which was worn day in and day out, and which had to be repaired at the end of every day, was almost ready to fall apart. Wooden soled slippers oft times served as foot wear. The children had wholly outgrown their clothing.

And how might these poor ones help themselves? The shops are empty. They can not buy additional clothing. They must help themselves by saving, if possible, what they have. Many tedious hours are spent every evening mending clothing for the next day's use. Of course, mending materials are very scarce. Threads are pulled from the materials to serve as mending and sewing threads. Worn knit garments are unravelled and reknit. Salvaged table colths, drapes, and other materials are used to make clothing. Wooden soled slippers are made to replace leather shoes—if materials and nails are available. Often the labor is in vain because the materials used are so poor that the mending does not wear well. Then the process must be repeated again—and again. The winter evenings are cold and the lights are poor. Much, much time must also be spent in procuring food and fuel. Then, too, there is the seemingly endless task of rebuilding homes, character, principles, and life.

This is in part a background for the great need for clothing today. The war ended more than two years ago, but conditions are yet far from normal in the former war areas. The shops are still empty, and the clothing saved from prewar days is worn to shreds. For these needy ones we are meeting in sewing groups to use our time, our money, and our efforts—that we may assist in relieving their needs, that we may bring them courage, and, above all, that we might witness to them of the love of Christ.

Back Yard Evangelism

There is a tendency, on the part of those who are interested in evangelistic work, to feel that Easter is the harvest season of the church year. While no doubt there are hundreds of people who come to church on Easter morning who, with the possible exception of Christmas, probably never darken the doors of any church yet the work of personal evangelism goes on—and must go on. One witnesses not only in a "Week of Witness" but one witnesses every day, and sometimes in the most unusual places.

Our interest was aroused on this particular point while we were doing a little editorial work on the manuscript for the new book HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY. There was something about the write-up of how the song "Take My Life and Let It Be," No. 215 in the HYMNARY, that struck us as being peculiarly modern. What follows here is a verbatum quotation as it will appear in the new book, tentatively scheduled to come off the press some time this summer.

> There are ten persons in the house, some unconverted and long prayed for, some converted but not rejoicing Christians. He gave me the prayer "Lord give me ALL in this house." And He just did. Before I left the house everyone had got a blessing. The night of my visit, after I had retired, the governess asked me to go to the two daughters. They were crying. Then and there both of them trusted and rejoiced. I was too happy to sleep, and passed most of the night in praise and renewal of my own consecration; and these little couplets formed themselves and chimed in my heart one after the other, till they finished with "Ever, ONLY, ALL for Thee!"

The hymn appears here unaltered from the original.

MUSIC.—Hendon. This tune appeared first in America in Carmina Sacra, 1841, edited by Lowell Mason. The composer, Henri Abraham Cesar Malan, 1787-1864, born in Geneva, Switzerland, was a man of many interests. He was a well educated minister, a blacksmith, carpenter, printer, and artist. He had a burning zeal for the conversion of souls. Convinced that the national church stood in need of reform, he aroused much opposition. After preaching an unorthodox sermon at the College at Geneva, he was dismissed from his regentship at the college and was finally driven from the state church. He then built a chapel in his own garden and preached there for forty-three years, attracting overflowing crowds and becoming widely known throughout Belgium, France, England, and Scotland for his evangelism. He wrote more than one thousand hymns and set tunes to them, a remarkable achievment. As the originator of the modern hymn movement in the French Reformed Church, Malan has a permanent place in French Hymnody.

Dedicate Home Mission Chapel in the Southland

by J. J. Plenert

The Home Mission Board has been interested in mission work at Paint Rock, North Carolina, for a period of about nine years. This work had its beginning with Miss Elsie Grantland, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Chicago, Illinois. The First Mennonite Church, Chicago, and the Home Mission Board have jointly carried on this work.

Miss Grantland did splendid work under great handicaps. They had no church to worship in; all they had was an old community building. Naturally, as community building it was used by every organization or group that came along, and therefore did not have an atmosphere of worship. It became a matter of much prayer by all concerned, that the Lord willing, it might be possible to have our own chapel as a place of worship.

In the Paint Rock community stood a two-room public school building which was no longer in use. Members of the Home Mission Board looked over this building and considered this suitable for a chapel and parsonage. We, as a Board, at once proceeded to make the necessary contacts to either rent or buy this building. The Board faced many problems in this connection, but by the Grace of God, and with much prayer, patience, and labor we finally were able to buy this building.

Last August the Home Mission Board undertook to renovate this school building so as to make a chapel and parsonage out of it. This big job was carried out, through the faithful and able service of Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Holliman, our missionaries stationed there, with the help of carpenters and local people.

The fruition of all the prayers, labor and devotion was climaxed on Sunday, April 18, 1948, when it was my privilege to represent the Home Mission Board of the General Conference and officiate at the dedication service of Grace Chapel, Paint Rock, North Carolina.

Already early Sunday morning there was action in the community in preparation for this sacred service. People began to come in much ahead of time. The Lord granted us a beautiful day in every way.

I, for one, was anxiously waiting to see how the people of the community would respond to the idea of having a chapel dedicated for the specific purpose of worship. At the same time I was anxiously waiting to see how a two-hour service, as planned by Rev. Holliman, could be carried out in Paint Rock, knowing from past experience that the people did not sit still for a one-hour service, let alone to have no Sunday School and have all the children be quiet. Thank God, it was a wonderful service with a large attendance. The Spirit of God was there in power, and for two hours there was reverence and worship.

Rev. Holliman presided at the service with his daughter, DeAnna June, playing the piano. Brother Holliman had a brief, but very interesting, service with the children before the worship. I then was called upon to bring the sermon for the occasion on the subject, "Workers together with God," and to offer the dedicatory prayer for the Grace Chapel, parsonage, hymn books, and the new church pews. After this I received Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Holliman, by the right hand of fellowship as members of Grace Chapel, and then turned the meeting over to Brother Holliman who, as pastor, received the others into membership. There were fourteen that joined the church with reverence and devotion. Among those that joined was Miss Elsie Grantland, Chicago, the former mission worker. She came especially for this blessed occasion.

Grace Chapel is beautiful. It is painted white inside, has a nice platform, and a pulpit and piano. The pews, home made, are beautiful and comfortable. They were made by Rev. Holliman and some of the local men. In time they hope to paint the floor and put up some shades and drapes. All in all, the chapel has a fine appearance and is conducive to worship. This, no doubt, added much to the fine worship service on that Sunday. The people have respect for the chapel as a place of worship, and in time it will help much to offset all the disturbing factors that in time past have hindered the worship services in the community.

The parsonage has a kitchen, dining room, front room, one bed room, a pastor's study, with several closets all downstairs; and two bed rooms, closets and a storage room upstairs. This is a great blessing to the Holliman's and to the community.

As a member of the Home Mission Board and one that has been closely associated with this work, and now at this dedicatory service have seen the fruition of the gifts, prayers, and labor of God's children, I thank every one who has a part in this great spiritual work. May you continue to give and pray for the work and workers, Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Holliman and their three daughters, so that the work may continue under God's guidance and that many souls will be helped and added to the Kingdom of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Fed 19,477 in Austria during March

March was the heaviest month of distribution so far for the MCC Unit in Vienna, Austria. A total of 19,477 people received M.C.C. food, representing 92,526 lbs. of food valued at $11,830.93. This food was given to needy hospital patients, tuberculosis patients, aged persons, refugees children, and others. Clothing has been given to cripples and war invalids in Austria. Two ladies' sewing groups are also being supervised regularly. The ladies participating have made some very fine and practical garments, which helps to alleviate their own need for clothing, as well as the needs of others.

BRINGING IT UP TO DATE

In last week's issue there was an item about the Misses Kornelson and Duerksen. Let it be noted that Miss Duerksen has left for India and that arrangements are being made for Miss Kornelson's ordination and sailing.

We Escaped

by P. J. Boehr

Had you been where we were during the early twenty days of April at Paoki, you would understand better. What a "trek" of missionaries there was through Paoki, and away from this city, which is at the eastern head of hundreds of mountain auto highways, from Shensi Province to the northwest into and through Kansu Province, and farther and toward the southwest into Szechwan, Kweichow and Yuannan Provinces.

Suddenly there was a rapid rushing out of Paoki of hundreds of heavily loaded motor trucks, and away from the oncoming Communist troops, which, had broken the railroad about half-way between Paoki and Sian and had approached the city where we were, so that we could expect their entrance almost any hour.

On the twenty-first some of our missionary group could leave by trucks hired by the Catholics, and by the twenty-third, in the afternoon, we brought up the rear, after the military headquarters had already moved out or had withdrawn from the city, southwestward along the mountain highway. The "neighbors" were approaching Paoki from three directions.

It is said that thirty thousand of them did finally get in, and a pitched battle was fought April 26. They remained in the city and suburbs for two days and two nights, according to reports which have just reached us from our own Christians who stayed at Paoki.

They report fourteen hours straight fighting. At least one shell hit one of our newly built cottages in the newly acquired plot of ground toward the bluff in the northeast section of the city. The room in which our Mary Ellen and Pauline Wang had lived for a few months was used for a breast-work for the C's and so naturally drew the fire from the Nationalists. Through the holes cut through its walls the "neighbors" were pouring fire against their attackers. Also the Bible School building and yard, where we five missionaries lived for two months, was the scene of firing, and looting went with it all. Most of us lost valuable things, but our Chinese friends lost heaviest, we believe, in clothing, other valuable goods and foodstuffs.

Our MoT'ien Yuan (Touch heaven yard) became a refuge for many, maybe hundreds of the many poor refugee neighbors, who came rushing for shelter into the few fairly well constructed caves in the side of the bluff. Our Christians there report that the poor citizens were very thankful for a refuge, and a goodly number came to the small improvised chapel after that to listen to the Gospel with a ready mind. We thank God that none there lost their lives and that there was not much loss of our goods and only one shell hit in one of the buildings.

Some forty missionaries, all the way from Sian (the capital of) Shensi, and from in and around Paoki and cities in outlying districts, must have come though Paoki, leaving most of their things behind, one couple among them having been "cleaned out" of all their belongings at least three times before. It is said that on the night of April 22 as many as one thousand loaded auto trucks (loaded high with goods, thirty to fifty people on top of each one) groaned through the streets and out of Paoki.

On the morning of the twenty-fourth, it was reported that the Wei River bridge (over which all traffic had to leave the city) had either been broken by the rushing waters underneath or destroyed by other means. The weather was very disadvantageous, to say it mildly, for we had had days and nights of heavy downpours, and the mud was so bad that it was difficult enough to get about let alone carrying heavy cases for loading on the trucks. But even at that thousands, maybe ten thousands, of people fled that city of around two hundred thousand people.

And oh, the jam on the highway and the truck climbers. As a result also broken arms and legs. And the truck accidents were not a few—some turning over into the ditch and ours rushing down the mountain grade without control, after we were along well over

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE BOARD OF MUTUAL AID

What It Is and How It Works

What is Mutual Aid?

Mutual aid may be defined as a way of two or more individuals working together to attain common goals in such a way that all parties benefit. Mutual aid is different from relief or charity which is generally an outright gift from one to another. Through mutual aid individuals or groups help each other to help themselves. It is a scriptural principle that Christian people should assist one another. In Acts 4:32-35 the New Testament principle of mutual aid is clearly stated as being each according to his ability and each according to his need. In Phil. 2:4,5, Paul urges the brethren not to take account of their own interests alone but of the interests of others as well, and to the Galatians he says that they must bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ.

What Is the Board of Mutual Aid?

The Board of Mutual Aid is a newly created organization of the General Conference officially approved at the triannual session of the Conference held at North Newton, Kansas, in June of 1945. The Board consists of six members with an executive committee for the purpose of carrying on the assigned function of the Board when the full Board is not in session. It is to carry on functions separate from that of the Emergency Relief Board, the Home Mission Board, and other existing Conference agencies.

What Are the Functions of the Mutual Aid Board?

The functions of the Board as stated in the by-laws are:

1. To promote and provide a service of vocational counselling.
2. To provide a simple employment service for members of Conference congregations such as helping them to find jobs or employers to find employees.
3. To provide information regarding opportunities for small business ventures.
4. To provide modest financial assistance to worthy members toward establsihing homes, getting a start in farming or business, and to completing an education.
5. To provide information about colonization and settlement opportunities.

The overall function of the Mutual Aid Board is to provide some of those practical services which a significant number of church members constantly need but which they cannot well provide themselves and which are not now provided for by any other church agency.

Is Mutual Aid a New Idea?

The practice of mutual aid among Christian people is new only to recent generations because they have neglected its practice. It is a very old custom among Christian people. Mennonites however have had a stronger tradition of mutual aid practices than almost any other Christian group. European Mennonites have had certain mutual aid organizations for centuries, and in Russia, the Mennonites developed a comprehensive system of mutual aid within their colonies. In all periods of migration and resettlement, the practice of mutual aid has been one of the significant explanations accounting for Mennonite survival during periods of persecution and pioneering. In Paraguay today the Mennonite colonies have a thorough-going system of mutual aid. Without it they could not have established so successful a series of colonies in so short a time. The establishment of the General Conference Mutual Aid Board is a reflection of the revived interest in this ancient Christian practice. Other Mennonite groups are likewise reviving an interest in mutual aid. The Old Mennonites have set up an organization for this purpose of rendering extensive mutual aid services.

Why a Mutual Aid Program Is Needed

A mutual aid program in the church is needed where the church wishes to accept responsibility for the welfare of its members rather than having them depend on Government agencies and secular social security programs. Because of the complexity of modern life the purely spontaneous practice of mutual aid is no longer satisfactory. Mutual aid must be organized and systematically administered to prove most effective in our day. Three specific reasons can be given why a mutual aid program in the church is needed:

1. A channel is needed whereby Christian people can invest their money so as to strengthen their brethren economically as well as spiritually encourage the fellowship of Christ's followers. Consecrated men and women may thus use their surplus funds and exercise consecrated Christian stewardship without supporting secular business ventures.

It is needed because in every community some young people need assistance in getting a vocational start.

2. An intelligent program of mutual aid can provide the kind of guidance which is needed by a large number of young people.

There are always those who need help in knowing where jobs can be found and those who need the counsel of older people to help them get into the kind of work for which they are best fitted.

3. Many young men need financial assistance to get a start in farming or in business; others need help to get an education. Such young people may not have the support of parents who are financially able to help them. There are resources for this purpose in the church which an organized program of mutual aid can satisfactorily meet.

What a Mutual Aid Program Can Mean to the Church

1. It can develop greater loyalty of youth to the church.

2. It can make more meaningful the term "Christian Brotherhood."

3. It can strengthen youth in the Christian faith.

4. It can be the expression of a love for Christ in daily life.

5. It can be a way of emphasizing the materialism and secularism of our time.

6. It can be a corporate Christian witness of genuine Christian fellowship to a sinful world.

How Does the Aid Program Operate?

Applicants for the kind of assistance which the Board is prepared to give should discuss the matter first with the minister, the deacon, or one of the lay leaders in the local congregation. If the problem can be solved locally that is most desirable. If this is not possible, a personal visit or a letter to the Mutual Aid Board whose headquarters are at North Newton, Kansas, may be written stating the problem and the type of assistance that is desired. This inquiry will receive prompt attention and, if considered advisable, the applicant will be asked to fill out a written application. The Board's secretary then investigates the applicant and recommends either favorable or unfavorable action to the Executive Committee of the Board. The Board's decision is then conveyed to the applicant.

What Is a Local Aid Committee

For the most effective expression of mutual aid in the General Conference it is recommended that each congregation appoint or elect a local aid committee consisting of three members. This committee should be chosen with great care. It should be composed of individuals who have demonstrated ability in their own chosen fields of work and who are men of the highest ethical character and deepest religious devotion. As suggested in Acts 6:3, men of the local committee should be "men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost." Members of the local committees should be the kind of people in whom the young people of the church have confidence and to whom they will willingly come for advice on financial and vocational problems.

What Are the Functions of the Local Aid Committee?

Each local aid committee might survey its members and especially the young people to see what their needs are for counsel and financial assistance in getting started in earning a living. Some men will need jobs, some will need small amounts of money to set up housekeeping, others will want to rent land or buy equipment to start farming, or open small businesses locally. Alert committee members will quickly sense needs and will arrange for confidential talks as to the best way of solving individual vocational problems. Some young people will want sound advice on such matters as to what job to take, whether to start farming or not, whether to start in business and, if so, how best to proceed. Local committee members, as individuals or as a group, can provide much help in these areas. In cases where money is needed it may sometimes be a simple matter of bringing the member with a need in contact with a member who has money to loan. Again it should be emphasized that mutual aid should not be thought of as charity but as brotherly assistance on a loan basis.

The local aid committee might be the agency to receive contributions or encourage periodic offerings in the local congregation for the larger conference work of the Mutual Aid Board. Also, the local committee could report job openings and jobs wanted to the Mutual Aid Board office. In this way, if a local member needed a reliable young man to work for him and he did not have such an individual in his local congregation, there might be other congregations having a surplus of help that would be available locally. This would also hold true with regard to opportunities for renting or buying farms or getting established in some form of business. The local committee may provide a practical way of helping small churches attract new members for its community. In the large churches such communities might help young people find new homes in less crowded communities.

Who Is Eligible for Assistance?

Anyone in the congregation who is honestly in need of help should be eligible for assistance. Since a church is a Christian brotherhood members ought always to be ready to help one another where there is genuine need. Help should not come merely in hours of desperation but should be provided early enough to prevent hardship and poverty, if possible. Help should be given wherever it is needed so that all members of the brotherhood might be established in earning an honorable livelihood.

This does not mean that everybody who asks should be given what he asks for. Some people ask amiss; some people in all sincerity make foolish plans. A request for financial credit may be made when wisdom may dictate that such credit would be unwisely used. Projects where money is needed may be financially sound at one time but not at another. It may also be that one person is unqualified because of lack of experience or ability for the work he is planning. Such matters would come under the head of counselling. The well qualified aid committee may do a genuine Christian service by being prepared to give wise guidance to those who seek for it. It should be made clear to those who are refused financial assistance that a refusal, in the long run, may be a greater blessing than a loan would have been. Loans unwisely made may be a burden as well as a help. In the mutual aid program it is necessary to do all things in the spirit of Christ. Problems need to be solved through prayer, through careful searching, and by means of bearing and forbearing with one another. In case individuals cannot repay their loans efforts will be made to work out the problem in the light of the individual situation and in the spirit of genuine Christian concern.

What Are Some Principles of Financial Assistance?

Following are some Christian ethical principles by which to carry on a mutual aid program.

Sound Business Practices: Mutual Aid is a two-way relationship benefiting all parties concerned. It is a form of Christian stewardship and it should be based on sound business practices carried on in the spirit of mutual love. Cases of outright gifts or charity should be handled through relief committees but not through mutual aid committees. The first purpose of financial assistance should be to help people to help themselves.

Amount: The amount of financial assistance to any individual should be dependent on the nature of the project to be undertaken. No two loans necessarily need be the same. If a person qualifies for a financial loan the loan should be large enough to enable the borrower to set up a self-liquidating program. It may vary from a few hundred dollars to a few thousand dollars. The amount is not so significant as the soundness of the project for which the loan is made.

Time: Loans should be made for a sufficiently long time so that repayments can be made in small amounts and over a longer period of time. Whenever possible, repayments should be amortized. That is, the principal and interest is figured out in advance and apportioned in fixed amounts for repayment. Sufficient time is an important factor in helping a man to get an economic start.

Interest: The interest rate, if charged at all, should be low. In many cases it would be helpful if no interest would be charged during the first year. The cost of a loan to the borrower should be as low as possible. It is to be remembered that the primary purpose of mutual aid is assistance of one brother by another and in no case should the stronger seek to profit at the expense of the weaker brother.

Security: The basic security of mutual aid loans is the character of the individual who wishes to make the loan. Mutual aid loans are, therefore, essentially character loans. They are loans made on the basis of the lender's confidence in the trustworthiness and the ability of the borrower to pay back the loan. Where funds are used to purchase land or equipment the purchased commodity could serve as security.

Repayment: At the time a candidate applies for financial assistance he, with the help of the lender or the Mutual Aid representative, should work out a plan of repayment. The plan should be based on the earnings of the borrower and allowance should be made for unseen emergencies. If there is no clear plan of repayment when the loan is made, it is doubtful whether a loan is advisable.

Risks: There is an element of risk in all phases of life and the local banker or credit agent anywhere accepts this as a part of his business. So, too, in the mutual aid plan. The risk, however, is minimized in proportion to the strength of character of the individual. Many young people are good character risks but still are unable to get credit in local banks because they lack material security. The plan of mutual aid is to extend credit where character is the primary security. Sincere Christian young men should offer the minimum of risk. Their word should be their bond. Every effort should be made to meet payments promptly and fully. This is the best index to a person's reliability.

Supervision: Almost as important as the loan itself is the wise supervision of its use. Local aid committees should try to provide the same careful and thoughtful help that a father would give to a son or a brother to his brother.

What Is the Source of the Mutual Aid Board Funds?

The Mutual Aid Board depends for funds on the following sources: First, outright gifts by individuals, young people's societies, Sunday schools or church congregations. Secondly, it depends on funds from people who wish to invest money without regard for interest earnings, but who wish to have the principal secured. The Mutual Aid Board in such cases issues certificates of indebtedness for the amount of the principal for a period of five years. A third source is from money loaned to the Board at 2 per cent interest for a ten-year period. The fourth source is from money loaned for two years or longer at 1½ per cent. A person who gives money on any other than outright gift basis is given a certificate of indebtedness which is a written legal guarantee that the Mutual Aid Board is obligated to him for the principal plus a fixed amount of interest as provided in the certificate.

Individuals and church organizations are urged to make gifts and loans to the Mutual Aid Board for the purpose of enabling it to carry out its objectives. If the church really believes in mutual aid, it should be willing to give to this cause. The Board, composed of men with good business experience and judgment, does all on its part possible to prevent losses and it sets aside 10 per cent of its capital for protection against losses. In every case, it seeks to protect those who have made money available to the Board.

The success of the Board of Mutual Aid depends on the amount of financial support it receives from the conference members. Applicants thus far have exceeded the ability to satisfy the applicants for mutual aid. Increasing funds will enable the Board to perform additional services. It is especially desirable to increase the operating fund so that a significant number of young couples can be given assistance in the establishment of themselves in new settlements.

The Relationship of the Mutual Aid Board to the MCC

In order that our people see clearly what the Board of Mutual Aid is, a word needs to be said about its relationship to the Mennonite Central Committee Aid Section. The Board of Mutual Aid is strictly a General Conference organization. It is represented on the Aid Section of the Mennonite Central Committee which is purely an advisory council. The MCC Aid Section meets periodically for the purpose of exchanging information and consulting among the various Mennonite groups on problems common to all MCC constituent bodies.

MUTUAL AID BOARD POINTS TO CALDWELL, IDAHO, COMMUNITY

One of the original purposes of the Board of Mutual Aid was to encourage young people to settle in Mennonite communities where there were small churches in need of additional members. The Board was furthermore instructed to lead out in the thinking and exploring of such settlement possibilities for the members of the Conference. In an effort to perform its function the Board authorized Julius Franz of Lind, Washington, to investigate such possibilities in Caldwell, Idaho, about three hundred miles from Aberdeen. At Caldwell there is a small Mennonite church whose pastor is Menno H. Kliewer, formerly from Cordell, Oklahoma. This church, with a charter membership of twenty-eight, was dedicated on April 18, 1948. It is an active church and shows great promise.

The town of Caldwell has a population of over seven thousand. This infant congregation has already appointed a Mutual Aid Committee consisting of C. F. Dick, Abe Huebert and D. D. Ulrich. This Committee with the pastor has requested the Board of Mutual Aid specifically to consider Caldwell as a place in which to launch its program of mutual aid. The type of agriculture around Caldwell is all irrigation farming, as it is in the Aberdeen community. There is a new twenty-five thousand-acre irrigation development known as the Black Canon project now being started. The canals and ditches that will carry water for the farms will be ready for operation this summer. The members of the Mutual Aid Committee of this congregation, one of them an experienced engineer and the rest experienced irrigation farmers, feel that this territory should be investigated by young people who are interested in getting a start in farming. Brother Franz, who personally investigated the community and the project at the time of the church dedication, also recommends that the community in general and the project in particular are worth further consideration. Moreover, the large number of representatives from the Aberdeen, Idaho, congregation who attended the dedication are also interested that the Conference, through the Mutual Aid Board, support this little sister congregation.

The Mutual Aid Board is not yet ready to help purchase land, but it does encourage any young men, married or single, who are likely to be interested in such a venture to correspond with J. W. Fretz, the secretary of the Mutual Aid Board, or with D. D. Ulrich, 705 Arthur Street, Caldwell, Idaho. The Mutual Aid Committee at Caldwell is willing to help young men find temporary work, if such men wish to explore Caldwell as a place for permanent settlement. Pastors and lay leaders of our congregations throughout the Conference should take note of this and act in support of both the Board of Mutual Aid and the Caldwell, Idaho, congregation, lest the time slip away and this opportunity be passed up.—June 2, 1948.

June 2. Opposition to the draft is stiffening in the House. No organized opposition exists in the Senate. Civil rights amendments do not have enough support to defeat the draft if Southerners filibuster. No Republican leader in the Senate will oppose the draft or fight for anti-segregation. Draft opponents admit that passage by the Senate will be so overwhelming that it will force the House to act on it.

Last week Rep. Barden (D-N.C.) told the House Rules Committee that the draft should be buried and received high praise from the Republican members. He said it isn't fair for Congress to pass a bill which requires one class of citizens (nineteen throught twenty-five year olds) to bear the main burden of our national defense. "We could get all the men we need, "he said, "if we treated the enlisted man with decency . . . . We take good care of our generals and officers—everybody from sargeants on up—and there's no shortage of officers."

Barden said he met many high school graduates this year who told him of their plans to study medicine, science, teaching, etc. and who asked him "What should we do? Are you going to draft us?"

"I am unwilling," Barden said, "to take away this freedom from these young people. "The draft is a drastic measure and should be used only in extreme emergency and then made to apply to all . . . . We might well ask ourselves," he added, "Where will we get our future doctors, scientists and teachers if we put them through this draft?"

100 kilometers and past Shwangshihpu, the China Mennonite Mission station.

It was a broken piston pin and also a broken oil case, so that we were sowing the insides of the motor along the trail of gas and oil. It was only God's special protection that not all of us fifty on the highly loaded truck were hurled to our death down the precipice to our right or against the ragged rocky mountain-side to our left. We felt we had a good driver, but also that he must not have left his guardian-angel (like so many drivers even in the good old United States do with their speeding) behind, for he honestly tried to halt the vehicle, but it was beyond his control—but the Lord helped the driver and stopped the truck, thank God! We did finally make the halfway place to Ch'engtu on three different trucks and on two different Jeeps, and on a mule-cart. And so "The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord, and He delighteth in his way." But also the "stops" were blessed, we believe, and thus when the truck, on which I finally caught up with my family at Kwangyuan, had a delay of a day on the road on account of a bad battery, and once for five hours for the same reason, the door of testimony for the Gospel was wide open and Mr. Mu and I found ready listeners to the Gospel. Also we met up with many of our friends of the rich type on the "trek," but evidently quite unhappy and without peace of heart, to whom we could speak of the Peace "that passes understanding" also all "misundertsanding"!

No, we are not merely escaping from danger, but believe led of the Lord to get temporarily out of the way of such who do not understand, and in a measure because our Chinese Christians practically "pushed" us out and that also for their protection should the "neighbors" come in and meet missionaries in fellowship with their countrymen. The Christians write that it was good that we had left and that now again things are quiet, and we can return soon again, thank God! And we hope so too, and that we may go on with the Gospel witness there at Paoki. Pray much! "God is able . . . He faileth not!" "If Thy presence does not go before us, lead us not up hence," we say with Moses.

A larger vision for evangelism all along these good highways has come to us, and we believe that for sometime there would be a great opportunity for "Mobile Evangelism" by means of a good auto truck, loaded with Bibles, and equipped with sound system and projector. These cars are already in operation in places in China. Why not believe God for a special and fresh aggressive forward movement by our churches for evangelism in China now? The time is too short to trifle! Christ our Captain is leading on, also in a troubled China, and He is selecting His Bride also out of China now! How many more Prayer-Warriors may we count on at this new crisis? May their number be great, is our prayer!

God willing, we go on to Ch'engtu, Szechwan, for a while. We hope to return soon again to Paoki. Our address at Ch'engtu, Szechwan, will be %West China University, Ch'engtu, China. Airmail reaches this city in a week to ten days. We've had airmail from the States at Paoki in seven days.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The regular school year closed on June 1, with the fifty-fifth annual Commencement program in Memorial Hall. Dr. Howard T. Hill, head of the Department of Speech at Kansas State College at Manhattan, delivered the Commencement address on Tuesday morning, and President Kaufman preached the Baccalaureate sermon from II Peter 3:11 on Sunday evening, both before large audiences. The graduating class, the largest in the history of the school, was composed of forty-six men and thirty women, representing sixteen states and also including Leo Beck and Janke van Wyland from Holland, Albert Roland from Italy, and Puran Banwar from India. Nine Seniors were eligible for the Order of the Golden A: Rosella Reimer, Ruby Friesen, Gordon Kaufman, Leo Goertz, Otto Sommer, Marie Funk, Evelyne Sawatsky, Gladys Dester, and Delmar Krehbiel. Traditional events attended the closing weeks of school and the Commencement season: the Junior-Senior banquet on May 14, with Rupert Hohman toastmaster, Senior Chapel on May 27, the Senior Class Program on May 28, the Sunday afternoon concert by the A Cappella Choir, Honors Chapel on Monday morning; and in the evening the class, which has been headed by Henry Claassen, was received into the Alumni Association at the annual banquet. Also featured at the banquet were two members of the class of 1898—Mrs. C. E. Krehbiel and Rev. P. R. Voth—and the class of 1938, the second to open the vault of letters written at graduation for the ten-year reunion.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The closing services of our College will take place on the morning of June 20. Rev. Marvin Dirks, of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Rev. W. H. Enns of Sprinstein, Manitoba, will be the speakers for the occasion. It will be a praise service for the many rich blessings which God has bestowed upon our school during its first year.

Mr. Cornelius Toews, the M.C.C. director of Canada from Kitchner, Ontario, spoke to the Young People's fellowship on May 24. Mr. Toews showed some very interesting slides of work that is being carried on in South America. Many close relationships exist between our Canadian Mennonites and those settling in South America so that there is always much interest in such pictures.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The College year was closed with commecement activities May 28-31. A large number of alumni, former students, and parents attended the activities. This closed one of the best years that the college has experienced. During the year sixty students took advantage of the opportunity to become associate members of the First Mennonite Church in Bluffton. Forty-five students were working toward full time church vocations. Of this latter group twenty-five were Mennonites, and twenty belonged to other denominations. Nineteen out of the forty-five plan to enter the ministry. At present prospects seem good for a large enrollment next fall. It seems that housing facilities will again be taxed to the limit. Summer school opened June 1. There are to be four three-week terms, operated on the Hiram plan. Each student will take only one course at a time and secure three semester hours credit in it in a three-week period. There are a number of problems to be solved with reference to the next school year, and we ask your prayers in behalf of the institution and those who have it in charge.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

David Habegger of Busby, Montana, was awarded the highest academic prize of the Seminary this week. Tied for first place with him was Charles Bieber of Spring City, Pa., Each was awarded a cash prize of fifty dollars.

On Monday the Seminary will bid farewell to the quartet as it starts on its extensive tour, which will eventually take it coast to coast through United States and Canada. Members of the quartet are: Irvin Richert of Los Angeles, California; Alvin Franz of Lind, Washington; David Habegger of Busby, Montana; and Kenneth Wampler of McPherson, Kansas. Accompanying the quartet will be Professor Marvin Dirks.

At the final chapel services this week President Rufus D. Bowman announced that he is making plans for a trip around the world next year to inspect Brethren mission fields. He also announced the plans to construct a new chapel on the campus.

At the commencement service, May 30, Ed. J. Miller of Freeman, South Dakota, was the only member of the Mennonite class. During the past two years the Seminary has placed its graduates as the head of Mennonite schools. Last year Arnold J. Regier was appointed principal of the Mennonite Bible College of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. This year Ed. J. Miller received appointment as president of Freeman Junior College. During his career as field secretary for the Seminary, E. J. Miller visited 129 General Conference Mennonite congregations.

You Tell It Mother

Has your child ever asked you to tell the Bible story, rather than reading it himself? There's a reason. Many Bible Story Books have words that are too big and hard to understand. Now, a new Bible Story book is available, written by Marian Schoolland, and written so that children can understand it and read it themselves. 342 pages, including many illustrations, each story with it's Scripture reference, priced at $3.00. MCC Cares for Neglected Orphans Among the relief projects now being carried on in China is that of the Henguang Orphanage, two hundred forty-eight children being cared for, most of them being homeless war orphans. The Mennonite Central Committee was interested in assuming direction of this orphanage for a trial period of a year, because the children were being sadly neglected by the careless governmental employees under whose direction the home had been operated.

"What are the opportunities for witness in the armed services?" and "Plans the M.C.C. is making for alternative service." Mr. Paul Boschman, a Bethel graduate, is to be the assistant to our pastor for the summer months. May 23 we enjoyed a program by the Freeman Junior College choir. Rev. Mrs. Amstutz is conducting a weekly Bible hour for children up to fourteen years. The young women of the church entertained the older women at a banquet May 7. "The Christian Home" theme was stressed. The young folks are working hard toward a better retreat at Stony Point, to follow right after the Conference. Our choirs are practicing for a community music festival to be held June 20.—Miss Mary Bargen, Corr.

—Mrs. Walter H. Dyck, who has been a patient at the Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton, for the past eight weeks, is now making definite progress toward recovery. The Dyck family is humbly grateful to God for His answer to prayer.

—Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario: Nearly all of the evangelical churches of the county were represented at a great rally program held in our city by the Waterloo County Temperance Federation on May 29-30. Rev. A. R. Shelly gave the closing address of the convention on Sunday night. In a stirring and dynamic message he presented the danger of alcohol as a beverage, and challenged all present to work toward a solution of this problem by helping to establish laws, by encouraging fearless leaders, by personal testimony, by education in the home, in the school, in the church; and most important of all—in the use of a power which the opposition does not have—in the power of God. In the business session of the convention, our pastor, Rev. A. R. Shelly, was elected president of the County Federation. Our church is sponsoring a quarter-hour radio program over our local station each Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock. We feel it a great privilege to have this opportunity of telling others of the saving power of our Lord.—Nellie Bachert, Corr.

Can Puerto Ricans Be Healthy?

by Richard Weaver

Why is illness more prevalent in Puerto Rico than in the continental United States?

If we were to walk through the hills of Puerto Rico, stopping for short visits at the many simple dwellings along the path, we would come away with an impression of too—frequent illness and general physical weakness. We would see homes where the children are too listless to play, the father unable to work, and the mother too tired to care for her family. In such homes there is always dire poverty, and, worst of all, an attitude of hopeless futility.

Puerto Rico has been called a land of contrast. There is the contrast of the Old and New in a late model car passing recklessly by a row of slow lazy donkeys; and of the North and the South as a storekeeper and his customer haggle over the price of a box of corn flakes; but most striking of all is the contrast between the natural beauty of the land and the misery of its inhabitants. Why must a spot so lavishly decorated by the Creator be marred by such a dense accumulation of human suffering?

Are these people sick because they are poor, or are they poor because they are sick? What is their fundamental need? Is it medical service, or economic aid, or education, or religion? This is a question that must be answered by any organization considering work in Puerto Rico.

During the fifty years that the island has been a territory of the United States, the U. S. Department of Health (and more recently the Insular Department of Health) has sought to establish and improve medical service and health education. As a result, the death rate, though still far above that in the States, has had a spectacular decline. But this, in turn, has caused a tremendous increase in population—more mouths to feed—less food per mouth—more poverty and more sickness!

By similar examples we could show that economic aid alone, or education alone, or even religion alone does not give the answer. Perhaps the reason for the slow progress of Evangelical Christianity on the island lies in the fact that too often the Protestant Churches have been just as reluctant as the Catholic Church to face the basic problems of human existence. Yet the need for a new motivation—a new direction and meaning in life such as only a religious experience can give—and the inadequacy of any program which does not center in active mission work was a fact which became more and more obvious to those of us who were engaged in social and medical work at La Plata before the church there.

The open door for the Mennonite Church in Puerto Rico lies in the opportunity to demonstrate a practical Christianity that points the way to the solution of both the spiritual and physical needs of the people.

An important part of such a program would be the provision for adequate medical service and health education. In this field there are many challenging opportunities.

Certain Death

The chief killer in Puerto Rico is tuberculosis. The death rate from this disease is ten times as high as in the States. The very word strikes fear in the hearts of the Puerto Ricans. The number of sanitorium beds is woefully indequate and even when a patient can be persuaded to apply for admission he is seldom accepted until the disease has become hopelessly far advanced It is no wonder that the verdict of tuberculosis has come to be accepted as slow, certain death.

In 1945 a survey of the La Plata area showed 80 per cent of the people to be infected with some form of intestinal parasites. Who knows how much of the so-called "Latin temperament" is temperament and how much is hookworm. Puerto Ricans know that going bare-foot may cause hookworm and that improper disposal of human wastes infects the soil—but shoes and sanitary facilities cost money!

The most pitiful cases of all are small children who, because of simple malnutrition, are, almost literally, nothing but skin and bones. Such children illustrate the need for a solution that goes beyond the mere detection and treatment of disease, important as this may be. They show the need for a program of education that will induce people to give more than lip service to the simple principles of nutrition, sanitation, and cleanliness; to convince them that even adults can learn to like vegetables, that the kitchen need not be the dirtiest room in the house, that children can be taught not to defecate whenever and wherever they please. They show the need for a thorough study of every conceivable possibility of an industry, craft, or crop that might help to offer a solution to the knotty economic problem. They show the need for an understanding of Him who said, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall without your Father . . . . ye are of more value than many sparrows."

Over 200 in M.C.C. Summer Service

Summer Service

Over two hundred youth will enter service in Mennonite Central Committee sponsored Summer Service Units during this summer. Thirteen units are being opened to volunteers. The volunteers will work in four countries, Mexico, Canada, Germany and the United States. Work will be done in four different kinds of projects: mental hospitals, community projects, correctional institutions, and European work camps.

The thirteen units in which volunteers will be working are as follows: (1) Hospitals, United States: St. Elizabeth's Washington, D. C.; Richmond State Hospital, Richmond, Indiana; Cleveland State Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio; Skillman State Village for Epileptics, Skillman, New Jersey. Hospitals in Canada; Brandon, Manitoba; London, Ontario; North Battleford, Saskatchewan. (2) Community Projects: M. C. C. Headquarters, Akron, Pa.; Gulfport, Mississippi; Cuauhtemoc, Chihuahua, Mexico. These projects will direct a morning playground for the children of the community, do clerical work in the office, assist in the hospital program in Mexico, and do maintenance work. (3) Correctional Institutions: Mount Princeton Commonweal School, Nathrop, Colorado. The members will serve as group, religious and work counselors for delinquent or potentially delinquent boys and girls between the age of four and seventeen. (4) European Work Camps: Ronnenburg, near Frankfurt, Germany. This unit will renovate an old castle turning it into a Christian youth center. Hamburg, Germany. Members will rebuild the assembly hall of the Alsterdorfer Anstalten mental institution which suffered about 50 per cent damage during air raids.

In each of the European units there will be about twenty Americans and twenty-five or thirty Europeans. Emphasis will be upon fellowship in work; education and worship between American and European youth likewise will be emphasized.

The following is a list of General Conference youth who will be serving in the different units.

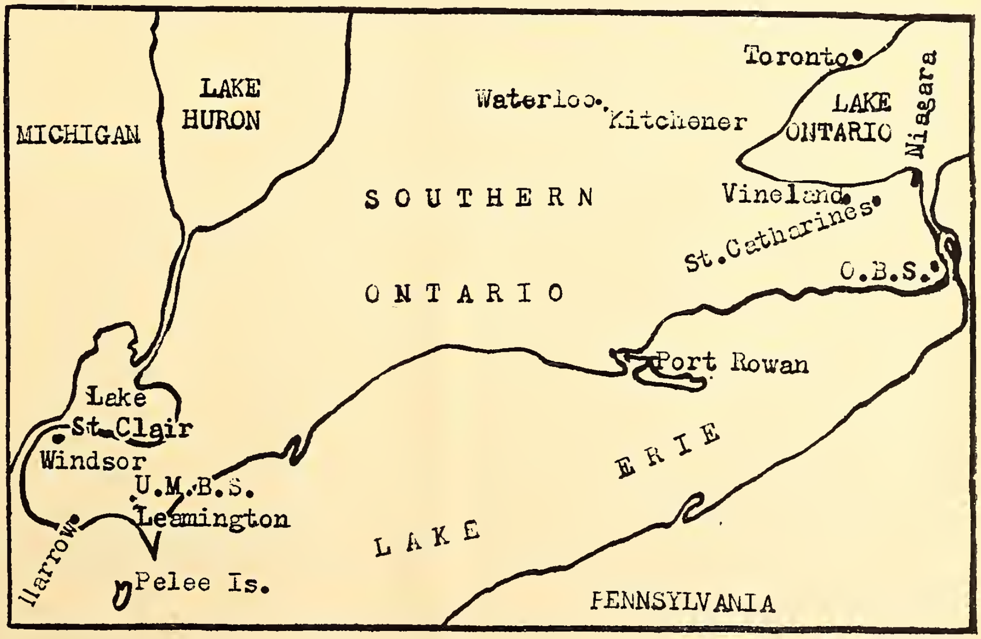
Two Units to Europe This Summer

Forty-two United States and Canadian young people and leaders will be sailing for Europe on June 3 on the Marine Tiger and Marine Jumper. These individuals pay their own way to Europe for the two-fold purpose of learning and serving. Their ten weeks in Europe will be divided in two parts—five weeks will be given to an educational tour of various countries including, England, Beligum, Holland, Switzerland, Germany, and France. The other five weeks are to be devoted to working with about an equal number of European youth in reconstruction projects near Hamburg and Frankfurt, Germany. Menno Travel Service is outlining and making the tour arrangements. MCC Voluntary Service is arranging for the two service projects.

Twenty-nine of the group are sponsored by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges and will be under the guidance of Milo Kauffman of Hesston Junior College and Edna Ramseyer of Bluffton College. The thirteen other members are teachers and others sponsored by the MCC.

Youth of Ontario Province Churches

by W. W. Dick



Map shows-Places of worship of United Mennonites in Ontario and church schools attended by United Mennonite youth.

Scattered over this fair dominion of ours, from the majestic mountain peaks of British Columbia, across the fertile plains of the Prairie Provinces, to the sunny gardens of Ontario, one may find—so they say—numerous groups of Mennonite youth.

Generally speaking, all have many things in common—one religious faith, one form of worship, one common conviction of non-resistance. Other similarities could be enumerated, while on the other hand various minor differences would become apparent. Could it have been the aim of our conference youth leaders in arranging for this conference youth paper, that these groups should be given an opportunity to become acquainted with each other, to exchange views on youth work, and to aid in creating a "United Mennonite Youth in Christ?" May these ends and more be achieved through this publication.

The purpose of this article is to give a general view of our youth program in Ontario, thus introducing our young people's groups to the multiple fellow groups in the vast expanses of the west. For clarity's sake, it has been found necessary to include various information about the congregation as well. Our young people's socieites are or should be an inseparable branch of the church.

There are about 3,000 Mennonites of the Canadian General Conference in Ontario, almost 100 per cent which are comprised of the so-called "Russian Mennonites," emigrating from Russia in the twenties and early thirties of this century. The accompanying map shows the various places of worship, it being understood that here also will the youth groups be found. There are five organized congregations known as "Die Vereinigten Mennoniten Gemeinden in Ontario." There are six organized youth socieities (Jugendvereine), Port Rowan a branch of the Vineland church, having its own youth organization.

Let us take each group separately and relate some of the latest activities as reported to me by leaders of each group.

Vineland—Here we have a group of about 150 young people. The young people give a religious program each month, with collections going to support our Bible School relief work in Europe, and missions. The choir, composed of young people, recently rendered the Cantata "Zion." The young ladies' sewing circle, known as "Helfende Haende," is busily engaged in preparing materials to relieve suffering in this world.

Niagara—The young people of Niagara purchased an organ for their church some time ago and their chief project lately has been to complete the payment of the same. The group of 100 young people have their regular programs, including "Jugend Unter Uns" evenings, where they gather informally, discuss various topics and voluntarily make up a program with Bible quizzes, quartets, etc.

St. Catharines—At one time the members of this church attended either the Vineland or Niagara places of worship, but in 1945 they built their own church in the city and now function separately. They have regular meetings. The group has about thirty members, most of which sing in the choir. A project in manual work has been to furnish the church basement by making cupboards and other necessities.

Waterloo-Kitchener—has a young people's group of about fifty members. Their choir sings very well and has brought programs in a few of the other churches.

Port Rowan—has recently organized their youth and meet every two weeks. The group of twenty-five members have also started up a choir. We wish them much progress in their work.

Leamington—Last, but not least (in number over two-hundred) reports the following activities: A youth program is given each month. Twice a month the young people gather for prayer meetings, known as "Geistliche Erbauungstunden" where the spiritual life is nourished. Various groups sing at intervals in the local County Home of the Aged. Literaries are being introduced and social evenings are held in the basement of the newly-built church school. "Die Vereinsglocke," the provincial youth paper, is published monthly. Three choirs of about forty members in each serve the congregation. Harrow, a branch of the Leamington church, has about twenty young people which have organized a choir. They have services twice a month. There are a few Mennonite families in Windsor which are served once a month by the ministers from Leamington. On Pelee Island several Mennonite families gather regularly for services. There are only a few young people.

In Toronto our conference operates a mission to serve the comparatively few Mennonites living in that city. Rev. H. Albert Claassen is at present working there.

Our Youth in Schools—The last few years have marked an upward trend in secondary school attendance of our young people. Many attend the local high school. But it is of significance that a goodly number have been able to go to church schools. Since 1943 many of our young people have attended the Ontario Bible School at Fort Erie North, on the banks of the Niagara. The school is owned and operated by the Brethren in Christ Church, and besides offering an efficient secondary education, it confronts youth with a definite Christian challenge. Many of our young people have found Christ as their Saviour there.

Our churches have a teacher there, at present, Rev. Peter Dirks of Niagara, who teaches German, Bible and Mennonite History. In the past year our young people's attendance has shifted more or less to our own school at Leamington, the United Mennonite Bible School.

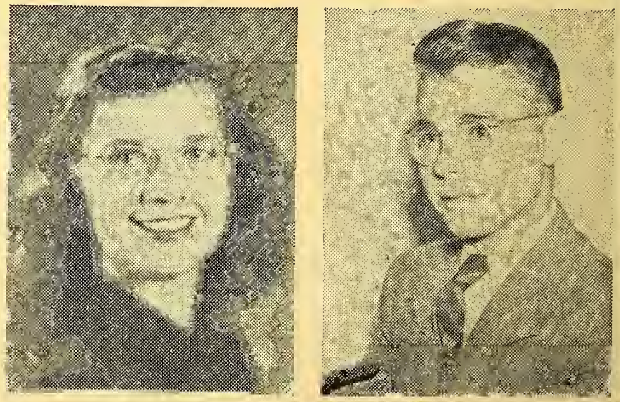
Letters across the Sea



Pictured here are Helen Tieszen and O'Ray Graber who are serving as co-secretaries of the Y.P.U. International Correspondence Project. This is a project to aid in providing contacts between youth in our churches with youth of other lands. By exchanging letters you can find interesting friends in other lands. By exchanging letters the bond of Christian fellowship can rise above the boundaries of nation and race.

To date, correspondence between Mennonite youth in our churches and youth abroad has been established in Holland, Germany and France. Contacts are being made in Paraguay. Possible contacts in Japan and Russia are being investigated.

Anyone interested in finding a friend across the sea should write to Helen Tieszen or O'Ray Graber, North Newton, Kansas. Some information needed would be your name, address, age, a list of interests and hobbies, first and second choice of a nationality for correspondence.

HOW TO STRENGTHEN THE UNITED NATIONS

by Kirby Page

THE United Nations is absolutely essential to the preservation of the peace of the world. But at the present time it is almost impotent and woefully unequal to its task. The main reason for its paralysis is the hostility and cleavage between the Soviet Union and the United States. If this enmity becomes more extreme, nothing can save the United Nations from collapse as the old League of Nations folded up in the hour of supreme crisis.

In an earlier article I discussed ways of improving relationships with Soviet Russia. The heart of what I wrote was that we Americans must show concern for the safety and the welfare of the Russian people. We must demonstrate this concern by stopping all preparedness to destroy them with our atomic bombs and biological weapons. We must prove this concern by spending money to help them to help themselves. The Marshall Plan should be broadened to include aid to Russia and other lands of Eastern Europe, and the amount of assistance should be increased substantially. An amount equivalent to appropriations made and contemplated during a ten-year period by all nations would make available for world reconstruction the titanic sum of 300 billion dollars.

Nothing could strengthen the United Nations as much as would result from this demonstration of concern for the safety and prosperity of the Russian people. The procedure would be for our Government to pay into the treasury of the United Nations the sum of 15 billion dollars annually for a decade, as our share of the cost of helping the peoples of the earth to climb out of the pit of hunger, destitution and desperation. This would improve relations with Russia and would enormously strengthen the United Nations.

The most important and the most urgently needed change in the structure of the United Nations is the removal of the power of veto from its Charter. At present the functions of the United Nations are divided between the Assembly, the Security Council, the committees and the secretariat. But all the real and substantial powers of action, as distinguished from discussion, investigation and recommendation, are concentrated in the Security Council.

This all-important body is made up of eleven members, five of them with permanent seats: China, France, Great Britain, Russia and the United States. Except in minor matters of procedure, action by the Security Council requires seven favorable votes, including the votes of all five permanent members. This means by voting in the negative or by refraining from voting any of the Big Five is able to veto proposed action. The equivalent of this in the Federal Government of the United States would be the requirement that Congressmen and Senators from New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, California, and Michigan must vote favorably in order to pass any legislation.

This power of veto was written into the Charter not merely because Russia insisted upon it, but because the United States Senate would never have concented to our membership in the United Nations if this power of veto had been omitted. The veto is the supreme expression of the power of national sovereignty. The theory underlying the United Nations is that it is composed of sovereign nations. (Continued on next page)

"The churches should conduct a vigorous campaign of education against the idea of national sovereignty with its consequent international lawlessness. Surely we can say with certainty that it is distressing to our loving Father to have his family divided into about sixty-five divisions, with each division claiming the right to do as it pleases."

Sovereignty is the right to decide. National sovereignty is the right of a nation to decide—to decide the size of its armed force, the height of its tariff barriers, the height of its wall against immigrants, and all other important questions. Before the United Nations can function effectively the nations must delegate sovereign power in specified areas to it, just as our thirteen states delegated specified sovereign powers to the Federal Government. In the meantime, the next best procedure is for the nations to make agreements through the United Nations, then for the respective governments to ratify these agreements and abide by them.

The churches should conduct a vigorous campaign of education against the idea of national sovereignty with its consequent international lawlessness. Surely we can say with certainty that it is distressing to our loving Father to have his family divided into about sixty-five divisions, with each division claiming the right to do as it pleases. Wherever in history sovereignty has been exercised by a sub-division of humanity, war has been the result. This was true of clan sovereignty, tribal sovereignty, city sovereignty, state sovereignty, and remains true of national sovereignty.

Science, communication, transportation have made God's people everywhere into one world. The Americans and the Russians, the British and the Chinese, are kinsmen living in their Father's home. They must learn how to cooperate, to put forth common efforts to solve common problems. This means that they must acquire the habit of making agreements. This necessitates agencies through which agreements may be reached, administered, and interpreted. All this is to say that world government is imperatively required.

But all government everywhere depends for its effectiveness upon the consent of the governed and upon the attitudes of its citizens. Therefore, the churches must do everything possible to create the international mind, to kindle the international heart, and stimulate international cooperation.

The United Nations is now pitifully weak, but it represents the longest step yet taken by humanity in organizing the structure of international peace, in contrast to the structure of war. Its effectiveness requires a new and wider loyalty. Clan patriotism was not wide enough, nor tribal patriotism, nor city patriotism, nor state patriotism. Through the creation of the international mind and the international heart, world patriotism must increasingly claim the loyal devotion of God's people through the entire earth. Step by step, and as rapidly as possible, the United Nations must be transformed into world government.

"Rise Up O Men of God"

an editorial

Now Is the Time To Prevent a Third World War is the name of a book written by a great Christian. However, the great majority of Christians are merely "following along" the secular materialistic program of violence pursued by our government and spearheaded by military men. Christians do not have a definite Christian program of their own.

With God, it is possible to prevent a third World War. Men are sowing the world thickly with seeds for another war, but repentance and conversion can change the situation. One of the most defeating factors in the present situation is the belief on the part of many Christians that they can't do very much about it. Naturally such a belief will not stimulate positive action. Christian faith can remove mountains. Miracles are a reality. E. Stanley Jones says, "For the Christian the attainable is the obtainable—infinite resources are at his disposal. His spirit is: 'The miraculous we can do at once, the impossible take a little longer.' " (The Way, p. 167)

When asked whether it is possible to prevent a third world War, Elmore McKee, who has done relief work in Germany for the American Friends Service Committee, replied, "If people care enough, great things happen."

That's the point—"If people care enough." It is high time that men of God be done with lesser things and apply their energies to a Christian program for the prevention of another war. The militarists claim that they can prevent it by armaments. Have the Christians no better alternative?

If the sixty million Christians of America would voice the conviction that war is never right and that in God we can live peaceably, then American public opinion would be bound to be different. If these millions of Christians would repent for their own sins and win others to repentance, then the seeds of goodness might overcome the seeds of evil that have been sown.

Once there was one man, Christ. Then there were twelve devoted Christians. They did something to the world. Today we number the Christians by the millions. What couldn't they do if they "cared enough"?

Let ministers so preach that those who hear will be convinced that war is never right and that we can live peaceably in God, let Sunday schools grapple with the problem of converting people to lives of all-inclusive love, let C. E.'s analyze just what steps can be taken to increase the number of men of good-will, let all concerned Christians be done with lesser things and realize the awful sinfulness of man which is sowing another war, and then do something to win sinners to God, and let men who pray, "Thy will be done on earth," do that will in some definite way every day.

"where the great issues are concerned they are fumbling and palsied; that they are expending what energy they have on marginal matters without much bearing on the one issue which really counts, namely, whether man is by his folly to bring about his own extermination."

Norman Vincent Peale writes in the June American Magazine, "It is growing very late. We live in a world threatened with total darkness. I am by no means alone when I say that the one hope of the human race lies in a dramatic change of behaviour. Religious faith still holds the key to world peace and world brotherhood, but we must abandon our age-old preoccupation with the nonessential forms and trappings of religion if we are to achieve salvation."

Christians must have faith that a third World War can be prevented if Christ is to have the chance to perform a miracle today. "Rise up, O Men of God! Have done with lesser things."

A Clue to Closer Unity

an editorial

Lack of unity within the church may be due in certain instances to an unbalanced preaching of the Gospel. It is easy for preachers and teachers to overemphasize certain truthes of the Gospel and to neglect others. Few people are great enough to be vitally interested and appreciative of all truth revealed in the Scriptures. Few have come far enough in Christian experience to find all truth revealed in the Holy Book meaningful in life. Some ministers there are who find certain teachings of the Bible so precious that they preach on them almost continuously. A certain minister began his sermon by saying, "Today I would like to ride my hobby and preach on the Second Coming." Riding hobbies in preaching is unfortunate on two counts. It deprives the congregation of the privilege to learn all truth, and it tends to disunite.

Ministers who have travelled in our churches have said that they find our people divided into two groups. Very likely they refer to the fact that they find different groups emphasize different things. This may be due largely to different emphases in pulpit preaching. Menno Simons used to say that the new life consists of "Bekehrung" and "Nachfolge." Both are component parts of the New Birth experience. In some of our circles the emphasis is largely on conversion and the New Birth; in others it is on living the Christlife. When preaching will strike a balanced emphasis on these two vital points we may expect unity within the church to be substantially strengthened.

Could the reason for the unbalanced emphasis perhaps be found in the experience of people? Many there are who have had a vital life-changing, heart-stirring conversion experience. They have found forgiveness of sins for their troubled hearts and peace with God through an experience that means everything to them. Without such experience it may seem to them they could not live the Christian life. As a result conversion is the important theme in their preaching.

Other people there are who have given themselves to Christ in surrender and whole-hearted commitment. They have presented their bodies a living sacrifice. They have left all to follow the Christ as the disciples did. To live for Christ and to serve Him is the great passion of their hearts. They often provide leadership in various fields of Christian service. Their preaching emphasizes Christlike living and true discipleship. Doing the will of Christ on earth as it is done in Heaven is the outstanding theme in their preaching.

Both groups recognize the need of conversion. Both groups say that Christlike living is needful. But due to their experience they may fail to preach "Bekehrung" and Nachfolge" with deserving and equal emphasis. It behooves us to bear patiently with each other. The solution towards closer unity, it would appear, lies in the direction of balanced preaching. Christ is both the Author and Finisher of our faith. He must be presented to sinners as the One Who will save them, and He must ever be held up before believers as the Lord and King Whom we are committed to follow.

M.C.C. News Notes

M.C.C. Welcomes Wheat and Flour

Plans are already being laid for the relief program for the coming winter. Directors of the present relief activity in Central Europe and other countries have given definite indication that relief "In the Name of Christ" will still be needed during the coming winter. An inquiry among Mennonite church leaders in North America has also confirmed the readiness of the constituency to support a continued relief service to those in need.

The Mennonite Central Committee is making arrangements with various mills to receive wheat and flour contributions from those of our people desiring to give of these products during the summer for relief purposes. Procedures similar to those followed last year will again be set up. Anyone contemplating such contributioins and desiring more information should contact the Akron office of the MCC.

Solicitation for wheat is being made by a number of other relief organizations. One of these is CROP (Christian Rural Overseas Program) which has been organized to serve groups not already having suitable church channels through which to give for relief. Since the MCC is not affiliated with this organization, we would encourage our people to continue using the Mennonite facilities which provide both for collection of material aid, and also distribution abroad "In the Name of Christ."

Refugee Group on High Seas

Most recent word from workers engaged in Mennonite Refugee Migration, indicates that the Charlton Monarch with its 759 passengers should arrive at Buenos Aires on about June 9. Elfrieda Dyck, who accompanied the previous refugee transport on its ocean voyage, is again serving as leader of this group.

Inflation Leads Missionary To Make Plea

[Secretary's Note: This letter by Brother John Thiessen was written concerning the out in the budget for India. We hope that Conference members will respond to the great need of our various fields, so that the Board may be able to do some things which at the present time seem almost an impossibility. Besides cutting the budget for India, it was also necessary to cut the budget of the American Indian fields. The following letter was written to the Secretary and Treasurer.—Howard G. Nyce]

Dear Brethren:

Greetings to you in the name of Him who challenges us to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33). This letter will deal largely with "these things," yet not as main essentials but as subsidiary essentials, if such a combination of words can be made. Further, I am sending this letter as an individual. No committee or conference has instructed me to write. So please take this letter as such.

I am sure I express the mind of all missionaries on our field in India and also in other countries by speaking a word of appreciation for the wonderful way our church in America has risen to meet the spiritual and physical needs in these times of inflation. The fact that our churches in 1947 contributed three quarters of a million dollars for causes of benevolences is indeed most laudable. Our churches have increased greatly in willingness to share the material and spiritual blessings God gives. So what I write here is by no means intended to be a complaint, but rather an explanation of the situation in India.

A further purpose of this letter is to ask you whether we on the field can help in some way to overcome this cut, at least partially, in these days of inflation when prices still have a tendency to go up instead of down; thus helping to shrink the gulf a bit which is created between what ought to be and what is possible. Later in this letter I hope to divide large parts of our budget in small parts or projects, suggesting that individuals, S. S. classes, S. S. organizations, C. E. societies, Mission societies, aid societies, sewing societies, clubs, etc. etc. might be willing to take one or several of these "brick" and lay them in their place in the structure of the building of the kingdom of God. I am sure it would be very welcome to all of us if you would suggest to us what we would and could do further to help along that the great work of evangelization of the world might not be curtailed as far as our General Conference of Mennonites is concerned.

As a matter of economic explanation I wish to say that India is still in a condition of inflation; and the American dollar does not yield more rupees (exchange) than it did before this inflation started several years ago. This means that we can buy less and less with the American dollar, because prices go up, and the dollar exchange remains the same. Wheat is over eight dollars a bushel, and all wheat products are similarly high. Rice, the main food for our Indian people, costs seven times as much as it did in the 1930's, yet no allowance of evangelist, teacher, or medical worker or any other workers has risen 700 per cent. Building material is on the average several hundred per cent higher than in 1940. In this way one could go on mentioning point after point. In other words, a budget in 1948 which is four times as high as in 1940, is in reality lower, considering what a dollar or a rupee can buy.

So it is a very real heartache for us to cut. We can dismiss workers; but that involves new problems, because the work is growing and we have very earnestly prayed to our Lord to send more labourer into His harvest field. These laborers are coming, some from America and some from among the churches of our own field. And many a faithful worker has worked himself thoroughly into the work in which he is now and has become middle aged or even near old age in it. If he would be dismissed, how could he find a fresh source of daily bread? A real question of justice is involved. As I have said, we do believe that Our Lord has sent us workers, both missionaries and Indian workers. But these new workers have to be housed. Several new missionaries have no dwelling in sight. Rev. Kripadan, who was called by our Eden church in the Phuljhar area, has no house, and he has a large family. Just now he lives in a little storage room on the mission compound, a number of miles away from his church. One of our first thoughts when it comes to cuts is to refrain from building. But how shall we deal with the housing situation?

Some people suggest that we should close our schools and do only preaching work. It is true, preaching (evangelistic work) is foundation work. But all preaching work aims at building the church; and in the church are boys and girls; and the church also believes that she must build up young workers who will be worthy to be leaders and shepherds in the days to come.

Our Mennonite churches in America have made some use of parochial schools, and I feel sure that those parochial schools have done very much to supply the churches with shepherds. The Catholic church surely sees this very clearly, and will not let the state teach its children. With us in India it is not so much whether we want church schools side by side with state schools; we have to have church schools lest we have nothing in many cases, or a type of state education which does not make for loyalty to the Christian church, let alone building up faithful workers in the church. But these church schools are costly.

Our Christians live scattered, so boarding homes

FAMILY REUNIONS

Are you folks having a family reunion this summer?

If you do, the question of appropriate song books will surely come up. And here is a suggestion from your General Conference Board of Publication to help you out with your problems. 101 HYMNS FROM THE MENNONITE HYMNARY is just what its name implies, a beautiful little book of songs selected as leaders in the songs most often sung by our churches and our informal fellowships. You will like the convenient size, because it fits so conveniently into the pocket! You will like it because, in addition to the notes, it has a very fine section at the back of songs which we all know well enough to sing without the notes—but singing always goes better if everyone has the words.

This book can be bought through the Mennonite Book Stores at Newton, Rosthern, and Berne, Indiana. Order them now—and use them year after year.

must be arranged. Teachers must have a living wage. Buildings must be built. Books and other supplies must be procured. Are our boys and girls in our young churches in the Orient worthy of all such expenses? Most of us think decidedly YES. In our own mission area in India we have felt the need of better qualified workers and we have prayed for them.

Our Lord has now provided us, i.e. our churches, with a high school and a Bible school. Shall such gifts from God now be set aside? We in India have the occasion to make a very interesting observation in this respect. One of our neighboring missions decided some twenty years ago that they would not preach the gospel, and have nothing to do with any subsidiary work. So they closed down all their schools and other activities. Now, after nearly two decades, they feel that there are gaps which hinder the church from growing. They sent their boys and girls here and there to different Christian mission schools. Quite a few have been sent to our schools in Janjgir and Jagdeeshpur. Recently one of their leading missionaries wrote me that it seemed increasingly clear to them that trying to build up a church without taking care of the young right at home in the church area just did not make for a church. When we visited in China in 1930 we ran across a mission organization whose leading missionary told me with some satisfaction that they only preached, nothing else. I asked what they did for and with the children of the church. He said: "Nothing." I further asked what they did in case of suffering—sickness, or in case of dire material need. The answer again was "nothing."

I do believe that we ought to thank God for awakening our Mennonite churches to take Matt. 25: 34-40, and also Matt. 28:19, 20 including "teaching them" very literally. However, there is still very much that needs to be done. As I have said, these material and intellectual phases of church work are not basic. The basis must ever be and remain the new birth—regeneration. But we believe that Jesus strongly indicates that the material and intellectual are very necessary elements in the complete structure of the Christian church and the kingdom of God as a whole.

With respect to schools I should here say that we as missionary body in India have decided not to take grant-in-aid, financially, from the state, because by not accepting such aid we feel a little more free to teach youth as we feel we should. Also, we want our schools to be populated with children from Christian homes. But this means some financial help in most cases. Most Christian parents cannot pay the whole feeding and school fees, hence in most cases there must be at least partial mission help. The few non-Christian students in our schools come from rich homes and they can pay full fees. Our schools could be financially independent if we would cater to non-Christian students, as one mission school of one of our neighboring missions has done, but—the Christian spirit has departed from that school. THAT we want to avoid. And further, our Christians in India come from among those of whom Paul speaks in I Cor. 1:26-31. What I have here said about schools, pertains to medical work also. We believe that Christians and their children should be healthy. That is what we have our missions hospitals for. But many Christians cannot pay medical fees, or only part of such fees. Then comes the temptation whether our medical activity shall cater more after non-Christians who can and do pay? In the face of a cut these are real vital problems facing us.

In the light of the above paragraphs and with the conviction that there are many individuals and classes and groups who might be willing to redouble their efforts if they would have some very concrete situations before them, I wish to submit the following suggestions. We do believe and hope and pray that havy curtailment of funds may not come until a financial depression comes upon the world, which surely would involve all the nations of the world, and which would mean a drop in prices of food materials and other commodities all over the world. That would mean that the dollar again would be able to buy more, hence not so many dollars would be necessary to carry on. At present, without a drop in prices, the gulf between what ought to be done and what can possibly be done is just too wide.

[Kindly note that all the project items listed are in the present budgets. There is nothing listed that is not in the budgets.]

Here are some concrete suggestions:

1. In these days of high prices it costs from twelve to eighteen (12 to 18) dollars a month (144 to 216 dollars a year)) to support one evangelist, or one primary school teacher, or a medical worker—compounder etc. We have about sixty such workers in our mission area in India. How many individuals, or how many families or how many classes or societies would be willing to take responsibility for one such worker? Maybe two classes or societies could go together to support one worker; or again, maybe some societies would be willing to take two workers.

2. It costs from twenty to thirty (20 to 30) dollars a month (240 to 360 dollars a year) to support a middle school teacher or a high school teacher or an Indian elder (pastor) or a hospital technician. We have about twenty-five such workers. How many groups would undertake one such support? The reason why these are costlier is because more is demanded of them—qualifications and more household expenses than in the first group.

3. (a) It takes from twenty to twenty-five dollars a year to take one primary school child through one year of school when and if the child lives in the boarding home. (The reason why I do not put down one specific sum is that parents pay something for their child in the boarding home. No parents can put their child scot-free in the boarding home, no matter how poor the parents are. And then we still have orphans for whom the mission has to carry the entire cost. We have about fifty such children.

(b) It takes from twenty-two to twenty-six dollars a year for food in the boarding home, and ten dollars a year for school fees, to take an unmarried student through the middle school and Bible school one year. If the student is married it costs double or more through one year. We have about two hundred students of this grade.

(c) It takes about thirty dollars a year for boarding food and twenty dollars a year for school fees to take one high school student through one year of schooling. We have about fifty of this grade of students.

Note: In all three of these groups if the student has parents, they make a partial contribution toward the student's expenses, and some parents pay all the expenses. Our actual number of students is higher than the above figures add up to, but as I say some parents support their children entirely when in the school boarding home. Parents who live near the school are not permitted to put their children in the boarding homes; but these parents pay some or all school fees.

Here we must note that many Christian parents live on a mere subsistence level, having an income from four to six dollars a month. Hence their contribution toward their childrens' schooling can at best be only nominal. Such parents are obviously tempted to keep their children from going to school and keep them home to help earn a little here and there to keep hunger from the door. But the Christian Church all over the world believes that ALL children in Christian homes should know at least enough to read their Bibles. So children from such homes should receive some help in order to get at least some schooling.

4. About cattle. (I hesitate to put this in. It does seem all too material. Yet millions of pounds of dried milk have been sent for relief work "in the name of Christ," and we believe rightly so.) A child needs milk, whether that child is in America or Europe or India. Our ladies' missionary societies have helped us get good cows for the children in India. Shall we now sell these cows? We think not, and our home churches will agree with us. But the upkeep of a good cow is high. It costs about one hundred dollars a year to keep a good milk-cow in condition to give milk. (Besides the boarding children, we also supply milk to the sick. Sister Panche bai, a mother of four little children and her husband's earning very meager, is a T.B. Has been in a T.B. sanitarium several times. She gets free milk daily.) We have ten cows and six buffaloes and several young animals.

5. Besides the above individual projects, there are the building projects, as noted in the budgets.

Nine Bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church join in a statement commending "the Honorable Henry A. Wallace for his contribution to the cause of a living Christianity to which our daily lives are dedicated."

MAKES PLEA FOR C.O.'S

On June 7, Senator Morse, of Oregon, introduced an amendment to the draft bill providing for the setting up of a civilian commission of three members appointed by the President to handle the problem of conscientious objectors. Morse indicated that this would establish provisions similar to those used by England and Canada in dealing with conscientious objectors.

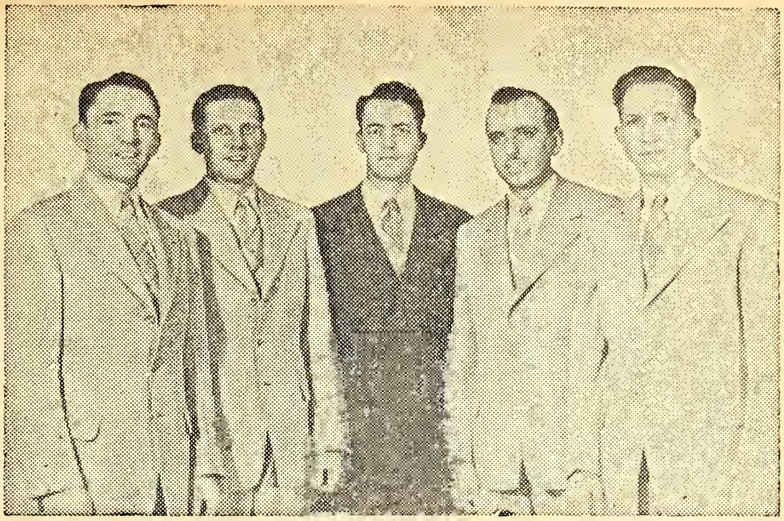
Upon introduction of this amendement, Paul Goering, Mennonite observer in Washington, wired Rev. Walter H. Dyck, of General Conference Headquarters, urging support of the C. O. amendment.

Walter Dyck, Executive Secretary of the Conference, sent the following message: "We earnestly petition you and your colleagues in the United States Senate to safeguard the position of persons who, for conscience sake, cannot participate in military training." (The matter under consideration was an amendment to the draft.)

As suggested elsewhere, the amendment was defeated forty-eight to twenty-two on June 8.

SEMINARY NEWS

Pictured here are the members and director of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Quartet, Chicago, Illinois. Kenneth Wampler, Kansas; Irvin Richert, California; Marvin Dirks, Illinois; Alvin Franz, Washington; and David Habegger, Montana. The quartet is now on an extensive tour which will take them coast to coast and through Canada.



Chicago, Illinois, June 5.—Freeman Junior College of Freeman, South Dakota, figured prominently in the life of the Seminary in the past week.

First of all, President Edmund J. Miller of Freeman received his Bachelor of Divinity degree at the commencement service on May 30. He was the only member of the senior class this year. On that same Sunday evening. The Freeman Junior College Choir under the direction of Professor Ernest Lichti, became the first Mennonite Choir to be featured on the program of the famous Sunday evening club meeting in Orchestra Hall. Dr. Albert McCartney gave a very warm welcome to the choir and invited them back for another performance. On the following Monday the choir visited the Seminary, and at the very moment the Freeman Choir arrived, the Seminary Quartet was leaving for its long trip coast to coast and Canada. At the request of Professor Lichti the Seminary Quartet sang a number to the Freeman Choir, and then the Freeman Choir responded by singing a number for the quartet and other visitors at that point. A few minutes thereafter the quartet left for its trip, and the South Dakota group embarked on an extensive sight seeing tour of the city following which they were to leave for the return to their home.

Wednesday night, Professor Benno Toews, son of the late David Toews of Canada and recently a member of the Freeman College faculty, arrived here with his family to take up residence for the completion of his seminary work next fall. During the summer Benno Toews will assist the Seminary in various work, and soon will start supplying the Pekin, Illinois, church of the Central Conference.

In several weeks we expect missionary Orlando Waltner and family to join us for the summer and the next year's term of school.

Rev. Andrew Shelly of the Stirling Avenue Church, Kitchner, Ontario, who is serving as part-time field man for the Seminary, will be visiting churches in Montana from June 17 to 20.

This week Don E. Smucker and family became the first Seminary family who moved into the three-story apartment house on 4642 Woodlawn Avenue, which contains nine apartments and sixty-six rooms. This apartment house was purchased in April, 1947. Up to this date has not been available for occupancy.

When the Thirteenth Is Not Too Late

The 13th—that mystical number of which so many people are afraid—is a good, friendly, number in General Conference circles.

It is friendly, because the thirteenth Sunday in every quarter is the Sunday which some Sunday schools and churches have set aside for a collection "For General Conference Publications." Take, for example, the Beatrice Mennonite Church, at Beatrice, Nebraska. They set aside one Sunday for publications in each quarter, feeling that since the publications of this board are used mainly in the Sunday school, it is appropriate that the Sunday school should assist with the General Conference publications budget.

Any collections raised for publications on the thirteenth Sunday in this quarter, will be too late, most likely, to get in on the accounts for this fiscal year. As you doubtless know, the Conference Boards close their books as of July 1, and in all probability the Sunday school and church treasurers will not get around to send that collection on June 27 in time to reach the Headquarters Office before the books have been closed.

But that does not mean "too late." It is never too late in the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom moves on and all its functions and projects keep going. These little lines that we draw between one day and the next on our calendar are artificial—strictly man made! And with God a thousand years are as a day and a day as a thousand years. In the work of the Kingdom we do not measure by days but we measure by the greatness of the love which is bestowed.

The older settlements received the first two thousand refugees with a marvelous spirit of hospitality and self-forgetfulness. Now these new settlers, in all their poverty and primitive conditions of living, are already helping a later group of 860 that arrived on the Heinzelmann to a new start and they are preparing to assist as best they can a second boatload of 760 probably landing in Paraguay at this time. The experiences of these homeless, hunted refugees from the scarred battlefields of Europe and their settlement in pioneer sections of Paraguay is an epic of endurance, patient suffering, heroism, prayer and faith that will stand as a new mark on the long trail of bleeding feet that marks Mennonite wanderings through the centuries.

Your contributions and prayers together with the workers you made available have made this large work of settlement possible. Your gifts of money, tools and machinery are helping to make it easier for these people to get back on their feet. They are also helping to build bonds of Christian love and fellowship that will make all of us stronger and more effective in our Christian witness and service. The work is not completed. More refugees need to be helped. We urge you therefore to continue in your generous contributions to the Emergency Relief Board for this resettlement program. Let us encourage one another with the appeal and promise of Paul in Galatians 6:9; "Let us not be weary in well doing; for in the due season we shall reap if we faint not."

GLIMPSES INTO COLONIA VOLENDAM

by Ruth Harder

Asuncion, Paraguay, May 24.—The new colony, Volendam, named after the ship which brought the 2,300 refugees to Paraguay in 1947, is located in East Paraguay about thirty-five kilometers from the already existing colony Friesland. Twelve villages named, Schoenwalde, Waldheim, Lichterfelde, Waldhorst, Tiefenbrunn, Waldeck, Waldesruh, Fredesheem, Fuerstenwerder, Grunewald, Rosenort and Mariental, have been organized. The total population is approximately 1,150, and one nurse is responsible for the health and medical service of the colony. She reports that in the month of November, 1947, alone she had seven hundred patients. Other months she averaged around five hundred. For several months one of the worst plagues was "Bizworms," which attacked not only cattle but people as well. She reports that one patient alone had seventy-four of these worms under the skin. A new hospital, centrally located, is being built now. Their present two-bed hospital is just too small to accommodate the patients.

* * * *

The first General Conference church baptismal service in Volendam took place January 16, 1948, at which time sixty-five young people were baptized and received into the church. On the same day Rev. Hans Epp was ordained as elder of the church. On January 25 they had their first communion service in the colony, so the month of January has special significance for this colony.

* * * *

School houses have not yet been built in this new colony, but four schools are in session nevertheless. In several villages the community houses, which were built when the immigrants first got there, serve as school houses. In other villages they have put up tents or conduct classes in God's out-of-doors. There are over 350 school children who have to study without books except for a few "Fibeln" and "Sprachhefte" which have come from the States. The teachers work under extreme handicaps.

Life in Colony Volendam

In September, 1947, around 1,200 Mennonite refugees from Germany went out into a large forest and grassland area, located about thirty-five kilometers from the colony of Friesland in Paraguay. All twelve villages were laid out in the forest in contrast to the Chaco settlements, which are all on grassland. The forest or "Uhrwald" is so thick that one can't get through it except by chopping a path. However, the forest soil is very fertile.

The large fields are out on the open grasslands, where the grass grows to a heighth of three to four feet. The grass lands lie here and there amidst the forests.

Sixty to one hundred people moved into a village. In some cases they built large buildings for a common temporary abode. In some cases large former sawmill buildings were available. Other settlers built their own houses, with the thought of working harder on crops later on. The large buildings will be used as community buildings.

The buildings are all made from native wood. The buildings shown here represent about three months of progress. By now all of them are undoubtedly complete. The joints of these buildings are by tenon and mortise, and then wrapped with green vine.

January was their hot season. They are now going into their winter. Once more people, who were homeless and jobless, have home, work, and food. (Pictures and explanations, courtesy Gerhard and Mildred Buhr))

C. E. KREHBIEL DIES

C. E. Krehbiel, known throughout the General Conference and former secretary and president of it, passed away at his home at North Newton at 11:45 P.M., Wednesday, June 9. The funeral was held in Memorial Hall North Newton, Kansas, on Saturday, June 12.

The Washington Scene

By Paul Goering

June 7. In tonight's Senate session Sen. Morse (R-Ore.) introduced an amendment to the draft bill setting up a National Commission on Conscientious Objectors composed of three or more civilians to be appointed by the President which shall prescribe the conditions under which C. O.'s would (a) be inducted into the armed forces, (b) be assigned to noncombatant service, (c) be assigned to special service of national importance with governmental or approved private agencies operating in the public good at home or abroad, or (d) be deferred.

Morse was careful to disassociate himself from C. O. views but declared that the constitutional rights of C. O.'s should be protected and that the government should have learned something in two World Wars about how to handle such persons. (The C. O. amendment was defeated by a vote of forty-eight to twenty-two on June 8.)

Any hope for defeating the draft itself appears to lie in prolonging Senate debate as close to the June 19 adjournment date as possible. Then, resistance of the House Rules Committee, which is holding up the House draft bill until the Senate passes its bill, might result in the draft being buried in the last minute rush of House business.

Sen. Langer (R-N.D.) has talked for two days on his civil rights amendments relating to discrimination against inductees or enlistees, and tonight the Senate passed an amendment abolishing the poll tax on members of the armed forces.

The Senate last week passed the Wiley bill admitting up to 200,000 displaced persons to the U. S. in the next two years. Pro-D.P. groups have assailed the legislation as a "monstrosity" because it discriminates on grounds of religion, nationality, and occupation. The 50 per cent priority given to farmers is out of proportion to the number of farmers in the D. P. population. The 50 per cent priority allowed to citizens of "countries annexed by a foreign power" discriminates against Catholics and Jews. Mennonite D. P.s would probably benefit from the bill even in its present form.

Tomorrow the House begins action on the Fellows D.P bill, H. R. 6369, which is regarded as a much fairer bill.

MCC relief workers in Poland are operating the Rolin Farm Project which is a farm of about four hundred acres owned by the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare. It has been turned over to the MCC to bring it back into production. MCC workers with four American tractors and machinery are farming the acres and are helping the peasants with farm work. The aim is to produce more food for the needy people.

Menno Fast, relief worker in Poland, writes that there are only a very few Mennonites left in Poland from the twenty pre-war congregations.

It is solid, hard work, farming is. It means dawn to dusk labor in the hot, broiling sun. It calls for a rugged physique, rough calloused hands, streaks of dirt lining the face. It requires a capacity to be skilled in many things—business, treatment of soil, the husbandry of animals, knowledge of crops, mechanic, and a host of other fields of knowledge. Farming requires hard work, sober though, keen insight. When youth seeks a vocation, the problems and opportunities of the farm should be weighed. Too often it has been considered a last choice. And, too often, it has been romanticized. The real values should be considered, and the choice made on the basis of real opportunities and real problems. Remember the long hours of hard work, but also remember the deep pleasure of a job well done.

An Oil Well in the Kitchen

II Kings 4:1-7

by Mrs. Amanda Friesen

In the fourth chapter of the second book of Kings we are introduced to an Old Testament mother. This mother is in great distress.

In her anxiety she hurries to the prophet, Elisha. "Thy servant, my husband, is dead and thou knowest thy servant did fear the Lord, and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons as bondmen," the widow explains. When trouble strikes it is wise to take a backward look as this mother did. Serving the Lord does not insure one against trouble or poverty. Maintaining a Christian home will not keep the angel of death from the door; but to serve God and guide our household on the upward way will bring this assurance, that our dear ones will look to God in time of need and He will not fail them.

'Got any rivers you think are uncrossable?
Got any mountains you can't tunnel through?
God specializes in things thought impossible
He does the things others cannot do."
Eliason

This woman, who had lived with a godly husband, was a true mother. She must intercede for her children! She stood alone. Her mate was gone, but her trust was in God.

It is interesting to note that the well loved hymn, "God Will Take Care of You" was copyrighted by John A. Davis and dedicated to his wife. Christian husband, why not sit down and read the words lovingly to your wife the next time she is ill or discouraged? You will see her eyes light with new courage as you point her thought upward and commend her into the Lord's care. Perhaps, to read it on Mother's Day would be the most fitting Mother's Day gift you could offer. It would be well for every husband to dedicate the words of this hymn to his bride on their wedding day. It is natural for the weaker vessel to lean upon the strength and wisdom of the head of the home, and God has planned it thus; but let there be the strong undergirding arms of the Lord beneath. Many, many mothers have felt the strength of those arms when the provider of the home has suddenly been snatched away. How comforting to know "I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." "For I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand saying unto thee, 'Fear not, for I will help thee.'" All you may need, He will provide. God will take care of you. By seeking the prophet, the widow testifies of her trust in God, that He will take care of her.

After hearing the widow's story the prophet said, "What shall I do for thee?" Perhaps this was asked merely with the thought of the problem in mind, but let us think of it as though the word "I" was emphasized. "What shall I do for thee?" Man, though he be a prophet, is limited. There are problems man can never solve, but that which is impossible to man is possible with God. Sometimes the solution of a problem lies in ourselves. "What has thou in the house?" is the prophet's next query. "Thine handmaid hast not anything in the house save a pot of oil," is the answer. Then Elisha gives minute instructions. Borrow many vessels. Close the door upon thee and thy sons. Pour out the oil and set aside that which is full. It might be well to ask that question today. What hast thou in thy house? Can all the things in our home be named to a man of God without shame or feeble apology? When trouble entered Jacob's home (Genesis 35) we find him casting out the idols Rachel had stolen from her father's house. What hast thou in thy house? If it is evil, cast it out; but if good, like the pot of oil, bring it forth for use. Perhaps the question can become more personal. What hast thou in thy house (the body)? Is there oil (Holy Spirit) in your house? "He that hath not the Spirit of God is none of His."

The Old Testament mother was a woman of faith. She did not question or hesitate but followed the prophet's instructions. Note the conduct of the sons. They obeyed their mother and borrowed many vessels. Then the door was shut. Some closet experiences are not for the eyes of the curious world. Some miracles are shut up to members of the family only. The oil was poured. "Bring yet a vessel," says the mother. "There is not a vessel more," is the answer. The oil stayed. It was not a mirage.

Then the woman goes back to the prophet for further instructions. Someone has said, "God will never leave you without light enough to take one step. Don't stop walking until the light goes out." In other words, it will not. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness."

Elisha says "Go sell the oil and pay the debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest." "Faith without works is dead." The mother cried for deliverance from the creditor. She did not think of herself. God delivered her sons from bondage and supplied her future need as well. "Your heavenly Father knoweth what things ye have need of." "He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we are able to ask or think according to the power that worketh in us." And so the story of a godly

Telescope and Stars

BY OWEN GINGERICH

This cloud of stars is called the small Magellanic Cloud. It is about 85,000 light years distant (which means that it takes 85,000 years for the light from this cloud to travel to the earth). The cloud's diameter is 6,500 light years. All the stars visible in the photograph are considerably brighter than the sun. The two globular clusters of stars shown in the photograph are known as 47 Tucanae and N.G.C. 362. Their distances from us are about 20,000 light years and 50,000 light years respectively. Most of the brighter stars in the picture are actually between us and the Cloud, at a relatively small distance—Harvard Observatory Photograph

For several months the physics lab and college shop have been scenes of furious activity. My friends shake their heads sadly at the grinding, sawing and pounding, and mutter something about telescope making.

Most folks think that telescope making is some deep, mysterious art which they could never understand. Many people are especially puzzled that my new telescope does not contain a lens, but a mirror. Most small telescopes and binoculars have lenses through which the light passes to an eyepiece.

Larger astronomical telescopes use a mirror instead of a lens. In this arrangement the light is reflected back to a prism, which directs the light to an eyepiece on the side of the tube. This proves confusing to many persons, because they do not look towards the object they are examining.

"What will the stars look like in your telescope?" is a frequent question. Those who expect to see balls as big as oranges will be disillusioned. The stars are so distant—the closest being several trillion miles,—that even the largest telescopes do not change their appearance. But the telescope will add tens of thousands of stars to the 2,000 we can usually see on a clear night. The Milky Way, but a cloud to the naked eye, is resolved into a multitude of clusters and nebulae,

Among the myriads of dimmer stars brought into view by the telescope are several dozen double stars. To the naked eye these appear as a single star, but two and sometimes three may be seen in the telescope. Often they are of different colors. Albireo, at the foot of the Northern Cross is a favorite combination of orange and blue.

Any disappointment with the appearance of the stars will be forgotten with a view of the major planets. Jupiter, the king of the planets, appears as a bright disk with dark parallel streaks across its face. These are the clouds of methane and ammonia which are important in the Jovian atmosphere. Four of Jupiter's eleven moons can be seen with the telescope. It is interesting to observe the positions, and later view the planet in the same night to note their change.

A view of Saturn will never be forgotten. A shimmering ring completely encircles the planet. In favorable times Cassini's division may be seen dividing the band into two rings. Usually two or three satelites or moons may be observed.

The moon is always a popular subject among visitors. The craters and mountains may be seen quite easily. Astronomers sometimes refer to it as the "astronomical graveyard" because so many famous persons have craters named in their honor.

Although the moon has certain peculiar advantages, its brilliance often obscures dimmer phenomona that are more interesting, These are the clusters, nebulae and galaxies. The Pleiades, a group seen in late fall, is an example of an open cluster. Several hundred more can be appreciated only with a telescope. The h-chi cluster in Perseus is often the subject of observation because it is double. Rarer are the globular clusters, where 50,000 stars may be gathered together in one nucleus. In the Northern Hemisphere these globes of light may be seen only with a telescope.

Even more remarkable are the nebulae. The gaseous materials appear in many shapes and forms that have won for them such names as Owl Nebula, Horseshoe Nebula, Ring Nebula, Crab Nebula and Dumbbell Nebula. These wisps or disks of light are so dim that they are easily lost in the glare of a bright moon.

The galaxies, often confused with nebulae, are real wonders of creation. These are remote island universes, consisting of billions of stars. With an eight-inch telescope it is possible to see a score of these in a single evening. (Astronomical telescopes are classified by the width of the mirror rather than the power).

A telescope is a definite aid to the wonders and glories of the universe, but it is not necessary in the study of astronomy. Much enjoyment may be gained with a good star map and the naked eye. Many amateurs are helping in important projects without telescopes by plotting meteors, or falling stars, while others check the entire sky each night for novae, or new stars which occasionally flare up.

A study of the heavens with only the naked eye soon demonstrates the remarkable unity, and yet the infinite variety of the creation. As the Psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth His handywork."

father, a true mother, and obedient children ends happily.

There are countless mothers in distress today. May the story of this Old Testament mother inspire each to take her problems to that greater prophet, the Lord Jesus. If a right relation exists. the inquirer will have the petition desired. "Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace that we may obtain grace to help in time of need." If that right relationship does not exist, then the need of the mother's soul is a greater need than the solution of her problem. Let that need be met first. "Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool," "If our heart condemn us, God knoweth all things."

Let every mother whose responsiblities are greater than her strength, whose problems seem incapable of solution, and who is burdened for the eternal welfare of her children, go to that prophet greater than Elisha. Let her follow His instructions and God will bring deliverance through that prophet and grant even above what has been asked. "Prove me herewith saith the Lord, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Unit Serves in Saskatchewan Hospital

On May 10 a unit of eight people began their four-month period of service at the North Battleford Provincial Hospital in Saskatchewan. They are serving as attendants on the wards of this mental hospital. The following quotations are excerpts from their "logs" or diarys for the first week.

"I have found here a great field in which to exercise love and kindness. On the sick wards, for example, some attendants change bandages in a careless manner, resulting in groans of pain over the entire ward. Another can put on a bandage in such a way that the patient is absolutely guiet and feels no pain. I have found that kind attention relieves the tension of the physically sick. They manifest their appreciation with rewarding smiles. On some wards one must use firm kindness which is less pleasant to administer. Though some of the work is unpleasant, yet when one remembers that this work is not done for enjoyment but is rather being done for the Lord, then even these tasks can be done joyfully. Here we have an opportunity of witnessing with a Christ-like life to the more rational patients, and to the other psychiatric aides as well."

"As do all the sick wards, 4A presents a sad and pathetic picture. Peculiarly so to us when we find Mennonites so liberally represented among the mentally ill. Not more than with other faiths, but is it not striking when embodied in a church-going, religiously inclined people?"

"One patient will walk around, or play with something with so concentrated an effort that one thinks he must surely break under the strain—exhausted. Another will stare into space, evidentily seeing nothing. Here is one who suddenly breaks into meaningless laughter. Again, we see one in imaginary conversation. Yet another interesting individual—seemingly intellectual, will break into earnest, violent speech, accompanied by grotesque shaking of the head and hands."

We Will Be Concerned If We Live for God

WHEN have we lived in a time in which we have been told of more things that have to be done right away with the same warnings receiving an increasingly diminished response? At a time when the very existence of man is increasingly threatened, the very man who loves his existence is becoming increasingly indifferent and apathetic to the crisis in which he lives.

Can it be that in every generation man must learn all over again to live in a world where crisis is the accepted thing rather than the abnormal? Is it not true that every generation feels that "it just can't happen to us?" Has that not been especially true of our generation that has been buttressed in this mode of thinking by the magnificent theories of inevitable progress? It was said that law had become so ingrained in the hearts of people that things just had to get better and better. But they haven't! And even in the face of global catastrophe the general pattern of living is that everything will come out all right in the end, and so the average man goes about his usual pattern of living, of having a good time while he is getting all he can and as someone has so aptly added "canning all he gets and sitting on his can."

It is clear that men and women will not be impressed by a heavy barrage of imperatives such as "You must . . . . !" "Do this . . . . or else!," even in the face of imminent ruin unless they have been thoroughly exposed to something far more fundamental than the worn-out theory of inevitable progress of a generation ago. Imperatives are absolutely foreign terminology to the climate of liberalism that rather resents any dogmatic statements. They are foreign to that mode of thinking because imperatives are always based on fundamental convictions that are in the indicative mood. All the "Thou shalt nots . . . ." of the ten commandments are based on the fundamental statement, "I am the Lord thy God who brought thee out of the land of Egypt and out of the house of bondage," that precedes the decalogue. That is the basic certainty that insures a hearing if not obedience for the "Thou shalts . . . . " that follow.

Is that not precisely the motivating and magnificent conviction that is absent in the thinking of men and women and that causes them to turn away deaf ears to the great "musts" of our day? There simply is no awareness on the part of the average man that he needs to take into account the fact that God works within history as well as beyond history, and that the blessings that are enjoyed now are the blessings of God and not the rewards for the goodness of men. America, just like Israel of old, has forgotten the early days when she leaned heavily upon God—days which gave her her present greatness—and is saying, "look what my hands, my brains, and my righteousness have gotten me." Likewise nation after nation in history has proceeded at the point of prosperity to work out its own proud destiny apart from God, not realizing that it is apart from God until it has fallen apart. Pride simply will not give up until there is nothing to give up—especially national pride in which Godless patriotism has turned into idolatries which outrank any pagan idolatries the world has ever seen! At the point of prosperity man ceases to be a worshipper of God, permitting himself to be used of God, and becomes a magician who begins to "use" God in his worship of something less than God, whether it be state, race, class, position, popularity, or possessions. As long as God is such an obvious issue in the thinking of the masses, as long as they see no Eternity to come to terms with, as long as they refuse to see God as the moral framework of any civilization, as long as they think that God exists for man rather than man existing for God—just that long the urgent pleas and the "You musts . . ." of our time will go unheeded.

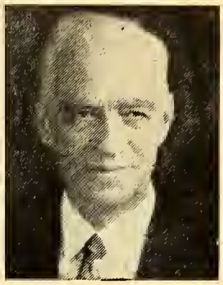
This constant feeling of living in the midst of Eternity which alone can produce the needed response to the needs of our time is one of the fundamental moods of the Holy Scriptures. The towering personalities of the Bible felt themselves to be strangers and pilgrims in a land full of people like those mentioned above. They knew because God was God, men could not continue to live in their proud and haughty ways without Eternity breaking in upon them. They were convinced that this world could not continue endlessly in its in difference and Godlessness. So in the Old Testament the prophets spoke of the Day of the Lord; and the New Testament Christ and the apostles spoke of the Return of Christ. What does this mean but that we are in the midst of the true doctrine of inevitable progress which holds that there is only one outcome for history and that is "the kingdoms of this world becoming the Kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." When our doctrine of progress becomes operative in two worlds, when we see the Kingdom of God in eternity coming into being while the present world is falling apart, when we seek loving sacrificial service which may cost life here increasing the beauty and the meaning of the Real World, when we see suffering and death as the building of the sinews of the life eternal, when we begin to see that our seemingly glorious civilizations are but the stepping stones for the Christ to make his triumphant march through history, then we will begin to see what Isaiah saw when he said, "Thy God reigneth."

It may be said that with such an outlook one will become less responsive to the "musts" of our day. The opposite in reality is true. This will make us more concerned about people, about the souls of people—the very essence of the concern of God. Then we will begin to throw ourselves as never before against anything that hurts people for whom Christ died, against anything that causes them to sin, against anything that will ultimately bar them from eternal fellowship of the Kingdom.

IS WAR NECESSARY? Undoubtedly there are millions of Christians who feel that it is necessary. What is it necessary for—to protect life, property, spiritual values? Yes, say many Christians. To them war seems a surer way of safeguarding their highest values than any other way. They feel that the way of might and power is more reliable than the way of God's Spirit. This is a sad commentary on the vitality of the Christianity of our time. The Christian life is so "spiritless" that the way of might is able to exercise its appeal. The whole issue raises the question as to what kind of a concept Christians have of God and what they consider most worth living for. It also raises the question of how real the Spirit of God is in the personal relationships of the family, the community, and the church. It would seem that with little experience of God's Spirit in the three institutions just mentioned, a Christian would find it difficult to rely on God's Spirit in his relationships with people who are strangers. Is is possible that many Christians have faith in might because they have never experienced a telling transformation in their own lives through the forgiving and accepting love of God mediated through witnesses and because they have never consciously applied this kind of love in bitter relationships near at hand? God, who is love, must become very real before there can be much faith in the efficacy of His Spirit. War is not necessary. God's Spirit is not inferior but superior. It is this faith that must somehow be spread among all Christians.

THIS YOU CAN DO: Sometime ago John Foster Dulles said, "If, during the next few weeks, 1,000,000 people would each exercise conscious control and do such things as speaking to a friend, writing to an editor or congressman, the aggregate total effect would be enormous and could make the difference between peace and war." There has been much preparation for war since this speech, but it is still valuable. It should not be difficult to talk to a friend on preventing a third world war. Such a subject might quite profitably be substituted for the usual comments on the weather.

Christian E. Krehbiel



The passing of Rev. C. E. Krehbiel removes from our number a faithful worker and a good supporter of all of our Conference activities. His many years service of secretary and statistician of the the General Conference and his two terms, 1938-44, as president, gave him a wide acquaintance with our congregations from coast to coast. His kindly disposition and conciliatory spirit was wholesome and worked in the direction of the unity of the church. After twenty years in business in Newton, Kansas, he spent a year in Russia as relief worker and in 1931 organized the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church in Wichita. But his principal contribution was probably in his capacity as editor of the Christlicher Bundesbote. His precise knowledge of the German language, gained partly during his two years study in the University of Berlin, and his facility of expression, enabled him to write acceptably and helpfully for a large number of the generation who found themselves in the difficult period of transition when family and church life passed from the German to the English language. The Bundesbote, though its subscription list inevitably declined, rendered a real service during this period, enabling the older people to hold on to the values of their culture in Germany and Russia while gradually accepting the culture of their adopted America. Rev. Krehbiel was a sincere man, of good report, whose unfailing devotion will be missed in our Conference work.

Should We Make Registration the Issue?

by Paul Goering

The June 8 issue of the The Mennonite contains a very thought-provoking article on "Should Mennonites Register for the Draft?" which deserves to be widely read and discussed. It deals with an important subject—our peace witness under conscription, and the question raised by the writer appears to be growing in the thinking of Mennonites, particularly ex-CPS men. In fact, a movement is being promoted, dominated by F.O.R. leadership, which advocates refusing to register as part of its program.

I would like to give several reasons why I am unconvinced that Mennonites should refuse to register. Let me say that if the law makes no provision for C.O.'s I would consider registration a vital issue. If I could not conscientiously accept the alternative provided, I would register and then refuse the alternative so as to focus attention on the relevant matter

I think the validity of non-registration depends on the objectives which the pacifist seeks. The writer of the article reasons that because registration is for the purpose of raising an army it is inconsistent for a person conscientiously opposed to military service to register. This is the argument of logical consistency. For a pacifist who makes logical consistency his primary objective it is inconsistent for him to register. But why draw the line at registering? By that same reasoning it is inconsistent for him to pay taxes which finance wars. It is inconsistent for him to grow food which feeds the army and the civilian population engaged in war production. In modern warfare all activity relates in some way to war. A pacifist who wants to be wholly consistent and not contribute to the war effort would be forced out of existence. Some may be led to just this conclusion and isolate themselves by going to jail.

Now, if a person feel his integrity is violated by registering, you can't argue with him. He is fulfilling his purpose. But I think trying to maximize logical consistency is exaggerating one factor of the total pacifist witness.

The second point the writer makes is that conscription violates the personality of the individual and destroys his creative development. This is the argument of personal freedom. Creativeness, it seems to me, depends as much on our attitude under conscription as on the absence of conscription itself. Christ laid more emphasis on freeing men from themselves than he did on releasing men from the compulsory effects of conscription. Creative development is probably hindered more by self-centeredness then by external restraints.

The writer argues in the third place that refusing to register would indicate to the world our unwillingness to follow our government into war. This is the argument of political effect. The political effect of non-registration are dubious. In the first place to expect enough people to refuse to register so that the world would be impressed with our opposition to war is wishful thinking. Mennonites have not been sufficiently "inoculated" or "grounded in the faith" so that very many refuse military service, let alone take a more extreme and provocative course. Perhaps, among ex-CPS or ex-prison C.O.'s there may be some but it is unrealistic to expect it of uninitiated youths of nineteen and twenty.

Secondly, alternative service could equally demonstrate abroad our Christian conscience against war, in fact, perhaps better. Thirdly, efforts to frustrate the government's policy for political effect has a tendency to change Christian grace to bitterness, Christian hope to despair, and Christian love to negativism.

I don't believe that the objectives embodied in the writer's arguments should be our highest aim although they are parts of our total witness. Our primary objective, it seems to me, should be to expand love, harmony, and understanding. Ours is a ministry of reconciliation—reconciling man with God, with others, and with himself.

Under conscription, alternative service enables the pacifist to discharge an obligation required by the government and still oppose the evil purpose under which that obligation is compelled. It operates in an evil situation but points in the opposite direction. It enables the pacifist to continue his job of reconciling. In alternative service the pacifist is a reminder to people around him that war and military service is wrong. In prison—the consequence of non-registration—he is out of the way; he has, in fact, cooperated perfectly with the conscription system. The fact that a government would allow C.O.'s to live and work under near-normal relationships in the midst of a society engaged in war or war preparation offers a much better setting for the kind of interaction which influences others than is obtained in prison.

Paul Goering, regular contributor of The Washington Scene in this paper, works in Washington. He has considerable to do with working out legislative provisions for C.O.'s. His official capacity is Administrative Assistant for the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. He also acts as observer in Washington for the M.C.C.

Thanks for the New Car!

[The following letter was sent to the executive-secretary of the Foreign Mission Board by Henry and Mary Toews, of the Congo Inland Mission, Nyanga, Par Tshikapa, Congo Belge, Africa. The letter was written May 6.]

Dear Christian Friends:

A few weeks ago I was asked to take an O. B. case to the doctor in Tshikapa. In the morning as we were getting the old jalopy ready, Miss Selma came to tell me that there were two cases to be taken. So when we were finally settled in the car, we were six grown persons and one child in the car besides a lot of things.

We had gone about fifteen miles when it began to rain. We stopped and put a large canvas over the back end of the car, covering the car up to the windshield. We tied the canvas down and drove on in the rain for about another fifteen miles. We stopped at the regional school for a while hoping that it would stop raining. There seemed to be no end in sight so we started out again, crossed the river and kept on going in the rain. Tshikpapa is about sixty-five miles from Nyanga. That may not seem far to some of you, but on Congo roads, in an open car, in a pouring rain, it seems an endless distance.

It did not stop raining till we were in Tshikapa. We drove into the city of Tshikapa with the canvas flapping in the breeze and everyone cranning his neck to see what kind of a contraption was going by. Wherever we went the children along the roadside were calling out, “Mishion, Mishion.” They know that nobody else would be seen driving in a car like that.

We deposited our ladies at the hospital, did a little shopping at the store, and went home.

Just three weeks ago today (April 15), Mr. Roy Yoder drove into the station with our new car which had just arrived at Charlesville. What a relief it was to see a new car for our station. One of the teachers remarked that this car would now take the shame away from Nyanga. You should have seen the excitment among the natives when the car came. We want to thank each and every one of you who had a part in sending this car to us.—Yours for the lost in Congo, Henry and Mary Toews

FROM AN AIRMAIL LETTER FROM ERWIN SCHRAG

[Sent to the Executive-Secretary of the Foreign Board]

“I finally arrived here yesterday evening. My coming out here was varied and complicated, and in spite of the heat of 116 to 118 degrees in the shade we are all happy and healthy.

“Mrs. J. R. Duerksen came to meet us (Marie was sent to India at the same time) in Bombay and on May 21 we sent you a wire about our arrival, using your cable code address. That cable however came back to Jagdeeshpur saying that they have no record of that address.

“We finally got off the boat with our luggage on Saturday, and through customs. Marie and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen left for the hills on Sunday and I left for Bombay on Tuesday.”—Erwin Schrag.

Conditions in Germany

BY PETER BARTEL

Krefeld, Germany.—One of the rewarding thing about relief work is the plus element that goes wit it. Our contacts with the Mennonite churches is a example of this. On April 7, 1948, the second, all German Mennonite student conference took place i Krefeld. The theme was, “The Christian betwee God and the World.” The interest shown by th young people is very heartening. Among the topic discussed the two, “The Christian Conscience in th Economic Order,” and “Non-Resistance,” were o special interest to us as representatives of the American Mennonite churches. The Pacifist movement, i general, is gaining some followers in Germany. On must, however, not confuse Pacifism with Biblica Non-Resistance.

The overall condition this year is improved ove the conditions of the previous year. That, howeve is not due to an improvement in the economic structure, but rather, due to the importation of larg quantities of foods. In view of that, one must regar the present condition as very artificial.

A MISSION -- in the CITY OF ROSES

by Lila Russell

You will find a welcome at the Alberta Community Mennonite church in Portland, Oregon, traditionally known as the City of Roses. To the east you will see majestic Mt. Hood; and to the north, beautiful Mt. St. Helens in the state of Washington. If you enter the city from the east, you probably will have driven along the scenic Columbia River Highway. No doubt you stopped to see the great Bonneville Dam, and Multnonmah Falls, too.

Here in this industrial center of the Willamette Valley the Home Missions Board of the General Conference saw fit to have a Mennonite church or mission. One often thinks of the "missions" as being in the slum or poorer-class sections of the larger cities. Or, they may be in downtown areas. Although not in a new section of Portland, the Alberta Community Mennonite Church is in a very ordinary middle-class district, and just one block off a main street named "Alberta." Properties are well kept. To the members and to the community, it is a church—and yet a mission. For that is the purpose of it, as well as it is (or should be) the purpose of each and every Mennonite church. We must reach out—be mission-minded. For, do we dare to sit in God's house each Sunday morning, only to worship Him—our souls hrilled at the message of the Word of God, our cups illed with the greatness of the Almighty—but never overflowing to give of this preciousness to others? n many churches today the message from the pulpit s all too often "for Christians only."

Young People's Fellowship Group

As the years have passed, the Lord has richly blessed this work in Portland, not only in improvement of the church property, but in increase of membership and growth in spiritual life. Regular Sunday morning services begin with Sunday School at 10:00, and the church service at 11:00. The pastor, Rev Clyde Dirks, together with wife, Berndetta, and three children, Bonnie Jean, Shirley, and Terrance (Terry) are serving here. Rev. Dirks reports that the Sunday morning services seem to fill the auditorium most of the time, and that new ones keep finding their way to the church. On "special" days, as for instances Easter, the building is uncomfortably packed. For some time it has been the desire of the congregation to build on lots already chosen. However, city regulations and building codes do not permit the erection of a church on this particular property. This is a very discouraging problem in a city, so desperately in need of the Gospel. But, trusting in the Lord, we may be assured that He will open doors for the advancing of His Word.

The Young People's Fellowship has become very active in the past few years, their number (including the Juniors) almost doubling. The Young People have their meeting of prayer and Bible Study during the midweek at the same time that the old folk meet.

Word from the Secretary of the Home Mission Board states that the Board feels that the Alberta Community Mennonite Church has made commendable prograss in the last few years, and that the congregation has made a worthy contribution for the religious and spiritual life of the community. It has served well as a center for the scattered Mennonites in and around Portland.

Yes, you will find that the Alberta Church may be a small church—but it is a friendly church in this big City of Roses—and you are welcome there.

MISSION IN COLOMBIA CARES FOR CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE

The first group of students in the Mennonite mission school in Colombia. One boy is missing from the picture. All of the girls come from leper background.

OPPOSITE PAGE: Left to right down: The road to the finca (farm) is an old trail made of big stones. It's hard on the car, but the missionaries are grateful for it.—View of mission school and boarding house. Bare spot close to building is the playground.—The missionaries: Mary Becker, Janet Soldner, Rev. and Mrs. Gerald Stucky and children. The LaVerne Rutschmans now there are not on this picture which was taken last fall.—One Sunday afternoon the children composed their own program.—The ironing is done by the children. This is Deborah Qimtero, one of the kitchen girls ironing. The iron is a gas iron.—The Saturday morning work often consists of shelling peas or some such thing. This is Luis Carrea working.—During the orange season the missionaries and the children ate about a gunny sack of oranges every two days. There were a lot of oranges on the finca.—The railroad goes straight through Cachipay. The stores and hotels are on the side. The most exciting events are the coming and going of six daily trains.

AN IDEA: The Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas, has found what may become a very acceptable substitute for the usual Children's Day program. Parents were invited to attend the classes where their children were enrolled as a sustitute for the usual program. Parents and pupils can hardly be very much unified in the child's educational endeavors unless the parents know something of the child's experiences.

TO DRIVE SLOWLY is a Christian act. According to the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, speed was again killer number one in 1947. "Nearly 45 per cent of automobile fatalities attributed to mistakes by drivers were the direct result of driving too fast." Speeding is premeditated. Its antidote is thoughtfulness. Christians ought to think of the danger of speeding and then act accordingly.

Sister Hillegonda's One Hundredth Birthday

by Sister Lena Mae

Our sister Hillegonda van der Smissen is within the reach of her one hundredth mile stone (June 30), and we cannot help writing a few lines of appreciation concerning her.

Many will recall blessings received through her teaching, her poems and recitations, her stories and her visits; while others will remember the Sister who came to their room and read the Scriptures and prayed with them while they were patients in the Bethel Deaconess Hospital.

We, as Sisters, can hardly feature our institutions without Sister Hillegonda. She definitely fills an important place even now in our thinking and planning. Our hospital was opened and dedicated on June 11, 1908. At that time the first three Sisters, Sisters Frieda, Catherine and Ida were ordained. Eight months later, February 1, 1909, Sister Hillegonda arrived in answer to the call to take charge of the institution household as supervisor of the kitchen and dining room. Not only that, she was to assist in the spiritual service to the patients and probation Sisters as well. In this she proved most capable, efficient and congenial. She was a blessing to all, the patients, the Sisters, the students and her coworkers.

It would be difficult to voice our appreciation of Sister Hillegonda and express what she has meant and does mean to us. She possesses real Christian love for her fellow beings. She is interested in each one and remembers his particular responsibilities, encourages him and prays for him. She loves the Lord, loves people, and loves work. Besides that she has been blessed with unlimited patience and endurance. In social gatherings, personal visits and in any group meetings, we could always count Sister Hillegonda to fill any gap with her human interest stories from her own experience, with poems or with some scriptural teaching as might fit the occasion. No anniversary or celebration is complete without an original poem by our Sister. She is vitally interested in all affairs of the local church and of the kingdom of God, always ready, even at the age of one hundred to contribute whenever possible to any cause that promotes the cause of Christ. Being a deaconess, this particular field has always been her chief concern. How often have we heard the question: Haben sich einige gemeldet fuer den Diakonissendienst? (Has any one applied for the deaconess work); and when our answer is: Nocht nicht, (not yet) her reply is: Ach, wie schade! Das ist ja so eine gesegnete Arbeit. Wird Diakonissenunterricht nicht mehr gegeben? (What a pity! This is such a blessed work. Have we discontinued deaconess instruction?) And then comes the assurance again that she presents all our needs to the Lord. It is His field and He will add His blessing.

(Cut courtesy "Mennonite Life")

We thank God for this handmaiden filled with the Spirit: this our Sister, our friend, our intercessor and our example. As we see her going with her brother, the Rev. C. H. van der Smissen (ninety-six years young!) for the daily walk we are grateful for the living example of God's grace as manifested in our Sister.

A hundred years and yet growing as promised in II Cor. 3:18, . . . "with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

[Anyone interested is invited to the First Mennonite Church of Newton at 3:30 P. M. Wednesday, June 30, for a short program and social hour to celebrate Sister Hillegonda van der Smissen's one-hundredth birthday. Guests will have an opportunity to write a word of greeting into the guest book rather than to shake hands and greet Sister Hillegonda personally. It would tire her too much to greet each one individually, but words of greetings in writing will be appreciated and enjoyed as she reads them later.—The Bethel Sisters]

M.C.C. News Notes

Relief Project in Japan is Approved

Approval for a small relief and rehabilitation project in Japan has been secured from the military government in Japan. The full details of this work have not yet been formulated, but in general it is to be a community center project similar to that at Heilbronn in the American Zone in Germany. This probably will include facilities for sewing, shoe repair, reading, warming, etc., by needy people, thus helping them to help themselves. Religious worship and teaching will also be integrated with the total program. Since the way for direct relief distribution in Japan is not open, it is hoped that this work of rehabilitation can be a channel of witnessing "In the Name of Christ" in Japan.

1948 Goodwill Christmas Bundles

Plans have again been made to send Goodwill Christmas Bundles to needy children abroad. In past years the response from our people in the United States and Canada has been good, making it possible to send many thousands of bundles. Because of the large number of needy children, however, there continues to be a need for these bundles. We would, therefore, encourage children, Sunday School classes, young people's groups, and others again to pack and send Goodwill Christmas Bundles.

Certain details of the instructions for this year's Christmas Bundles differ from those of last year, and therefore all who are interested in this project should secure a copy of the 1948 folder. All bundles should be packed and sent by August 14 to the MCC Center at either Akron, Pennsylvania, or Kitchener, Ontario. A small supply of the 1948 Goodwill Christmas Bundle Folders has been sent to each congregation. Additional copies may be secured from the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania..

Medical Service in Paraguay

During his short period of service in Paraguay from April 3 to May 11, Dr. Herbert Schmidt, of Newton, Kansas, was able to perform a total of eighty-one major and minor operations at the Fernheim Hospital. Another service in which Dr. Schmidt was engaged during this period was that of establishing equipment for extracting oil from cotton seed. This is a significant step in developing the industrial life of the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay.

Translation of Peace Literature

During June and July of this summer, J. P. Rogalsky, Professor of German at Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas, is serving at the MCC office in the work of translating peace literature and certain other materials from English to German. This service is a unique contribution to the efforts of the MCC Peace Section in providing peace literature suitable for use by German-speaking Mennonites in Europe, Paraguay, Brazil, and other countries.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

On June 23-28 the Seminary will provide housing for some delegates to the Rocky River Methodist District Conference to be held in the near-by St. James Methodist Church. The latter church was the scene of the Council of Boards Meeting of the General Conference held last winter. The Seminary is glad to reciprocate in helpfulness with this church. On June 28, the Voluntary Service Unit, under the Young People's Union, will arrive here to take up residence for the summer. This unit will be primarily concerned with teaching and evangelism in connection with the Mennonite churches of Chicago. On July 1-4 the Young People's Retreat, sponsored by the Middle and Central Districts will be held on the Seminary Grounds. On July 5-9 the General Conference Youth Caravan will be here under the direction of Erna Friesen.

Among the new people who have taken up residence this week are Emilia Schmidt, of Carlock, Illinois, who is a student at Bluffton College, and who will be working in the city during the summer; and Martha Harms, of Newton, Kansas, who will be studying at the Chicago Musical College.

Don E. Smucker addressed the National Conference of Brethren Youth, held at Bethany Biblical Seminary, on Tuesday.

John T. Neufeld and Jacob Goering have finished work on the new fire place and incinerator built in the backyard. Ellwyn Hartzler is also assisting in repair work this summer.

ALBERT J. UNRUH NEW PASTOR OF ENID CHURCH

Enid, Oklahoma, June 19. The ordination and installation of Rev. Albert J. Unruh as pastor of the Grace Mennonite Church, located at York and Adams, Enid, Oklahoma, will take place at the church in Enid on Sunday, June 27. In the morning Sunday School will be omitted, and a mission festival will be held, beginning at 10 o'clock. Rev. Henry Hege, pastor of the Bergtal Mennonite Church, Corn, Oklehoma, and Rev. W. F. Unruh, pastor of the West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, will bring messages.

The ordination and installation service will be in the afternoon and will begin at 2 o'clock. The ordination sermon will be preached by Rev. W. F. Unruh, Chairman of the Western District Conference Home Mission Committee, who will also ordain and install Rev. Albert Unruh. Rev. Henry Hege will give the charge to the congregation. New members will be received at the afternoon service. Visitors will be welcome.

At noon there will be a covered dish fellowship meal in the basement of the church.—A. Theodore Mueller, Clerk Grace Mennonite Church.

On How To Raise Children

We have a suspicion that there are some people in our Conference who are genuinely concerned about how they can get their children to take a keener interest in the heritage of our peace position, but who, when the question of voting on the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN arises, will vote against it in their local churches. They probably are not aware of the effect this has on their own immediate problem within their own home.

Now the effect of this is, precisely, to cancel out the good intentions. Most of our Mennonite children still love Zwiebach—mainly, we guess, because they have been getting them every Saturday ever since they were little. It wouldn't surprise us if some good Mennonite mother would be complaining that her children didn't like Zwiebach, yet claiming that she would never bake them!

No, if children are to like Zwiebach when they grow up, they must have Zwiebach when they are little. And if they are to appreciate fully our Mennonite heritage, and develop in their hearts an appreciation for the homelife which has characterized the culture of our people through the generations, we have an idea that they will have to see good, Mennonite reading material frequently on the table in the home.

That's why we are always talking for the HUNDRED PER CENT PLAN. This PLAN brings to every home the activities of every Conference board and committee. It brings to every member in every home a continuous stream of information and inspiration for better living. From such homes, when the young people go out into the world, they might be surprised, but won't be "bowled over" by the shallow philosophies and appeals. They will have had "meat," where others will have just had "milk" —well, at least, chances are!

June 14. The nation's fate regarding the draft was decided by two men when the House Rules Committee voted six to four to report the bill for a House vote. Although Rules Committee voting is done in executive session, observers guess that Harness (R-Ind.) and Rizley (R-Okla.) cast the deciding votes. The vote of either one against the draft would have split the vote evenly and killed the bill.

Opponents are hoping that the bill will be choked by amendments. The Committee adopted an open rule on amendments whereby any number of amendments can be introduced and each member can speak for five minutes on each amendment. The House could vote to change the rule, however. That the Committee would limit general debate on the bill to three hours does grave injustice to the seriousness of this legislation.

Joe Martin, Jr., Speaker of the House, and Charles Halleck (R-Ind.), majority leader, are the Republican high command who must carry primary responsibility for forcing the draft. They passed the orders to the Rules Committee to vote the bill out. It was evident from their discussion that the members were under considerable pressure. According to certain sources, Harness was called this morning before the meeting by Halleck and Kenneth Royall, Secretary of the Army, instructing him to vote "yes."

Rep. Short (R-Mo.), foe of the draft, spoke against the bill in the Rules Committee. Short will allocate the time for draft opponents on the floor. As ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, Short is slated to become the chairman next year following Rep. Andrew's (R-N.Y.) resignation from public service for health reasons. This announcement several weeks ago sent shivers down the backs of the Pentagon strategists. The armed forces is giving Andrews a "going-away" party tonight in recognition of his services.

Book Notes

Before You Decide by Howard Charles in collaboration with Jesse W. Hoover. Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa. 20 cents a copy.

In the confusion of today there is a real need for calling to the attention of our young people some of the basic issues at stake in deciding for or against military training and participation. Before You Decide is a pamphlet which deals with these issues in a clear, lucid style. While the issue of conscription is not dealth with, it being assumed that the government of a nation has the right to conscript for some types of work and activity, the basic issue of conscription for participation in military force is treated.

The ultimate factor in any military activity, be it training or warfare, is treated in the question oft repeated, "Is it right to kill?" Conclusive judgment against a Christian killing fellow man is gleaned from the Scriptures, from individual integrity in the desire to follow Christ, and from the relationship of the church to the state. In the latter treatment some of the constituent groups making up the MCC may differ, for some believe Christians should actively participate in elevating the state to a higher ethical plane through active participation in the functions of the state.

One is grateful in reading this treatment for the amount of space given to the whole of the Christian's relationship to government and other agencies for those who may face conscription. The questions involved in contributions to the Red Cross, purchasing war bonds, vocational choices in wartime, and the individual's relationship to labor unions and other advocates of force are discussed with good insight and sound thinking. Every young person should read this treatise and ponder its weighty discussions; all other church members would do well to acquaint themselves with its subject matter and honestly face the issues at stake for the Christian.

However, it is going to take more than a pamphlet to make decisions. If we are to make alternative choices to military participation more meaningful to our young people, we do well now to find real ways of service which instill confidence in the alternative of following Christ all the way to Civilian Public Service, yea, even to another Calavry. In the words of the authors, "Youth chooses right, youth chooses Christ."—Loris Habegger.

Ride Your Hobby

BY ELMA WALTNER

Webster defines a hobby as " a favorite pursuit"—this it is and much more. A hobby is a form of recreation which gives us a welcome release from the toil and worries of the strenuous business of making a living, a mental as well as a physical relaxation, the ardent pursuit of which makes us personalities more pleasant to live with.

A hobby can be almost anything you enjoy doing from studying the birds that nest in your apple trees to turning out projects for your home or as gifts in your basement workshop.

From the time I was able to hold a knife, I have enjoyed "making things," and many and varied were the creations I turned out when small. Many were the cut fingers which I took into the house to be bandaged, but so great was my enthusiasm that a mere cut was never enough to dampen my ardor and the toys I turned out, though perhaps not recognizable to anyone else, fulfilled the needs of the imaginative play of childhood.

From crude boats and the like it was a natural step to more complicated wood carving. From a semi-dull kitchen knife (which was however sharp enough for sometime whittle unwary fingers along with the stick of wood) it was a natural step to a carving knife of finest Swedish steel and a set of professional wood carving chisels—add to these several power tools such as a jigsaw and hand grinding tool and you have all the ingredients for successful pursuit of a wood carving hobby. Not that a lot of tools are necessary, a common pocket knife is all that one really needs for the everyday art of whittling, but chisels of various types greatly facilitate any serious figure carving.

Because the faces of my people either developed an overly flat nose or some other facial deficiency, I passed up the carving of human figures in favor of animal carvings. And because a little humor is good for the soul, I commenced to make caricature carvings of different animals. Dogs are especially interesting to carve in all sorts of fanciful poses, from the hound howling at the moon to the sad eyed pooch that has just been scolded by his master and hangs his head in shame. After dogs came other animals, a whole parade of them—the fat little pig with the ring in his nose, the happy horse and his pearly white teeth displayed in a toothpaste ad grin, the spooted giraffe, and so on, each animal receiving a name to fit his comical character as he went to join the rest of the menagerie on the top bookcase shelf.

Since these animals were original caricature designs, I contacted a national magazine to see whether they might be interested in publishing the designs. They were, and so captivated was the editor that the procession of carving marches on, or perhaps it would be better to say, turns back the clock, for upon the request of the editor, I am now working on a series of prehistoric animal figures also caricatures although the characteristics of each animal are emphasized.

What benefits should one derive from a hobby? In my opinion, the true value of a hobby lies in the personal satisfaction we derive from it. It must be something you enjoy doing, just "for the fun of it." Something into which you can put the best of yourself. The products of your hobby should be an expression of your real self. Perhaps you are not good at working out your own designs. There are plenty of patterns and designs already planned for you, no matter what your hobby may be. These instructions you may follow, yet you cannot help putting something of yourself into your work, and the finished product may be a copy in design, but still it will not be identical to the original because you have expressed your own personality in it.

If you have a hobby, you will be interested in the hobbies of others. Thus you will never lack an interesting topic of conversation. No matter what your particular bent may be, there are other folks interested in the same thing. You will find yourself making new contacts and new friends that should prove of great benefit to you.

Don't think that you have no time for a hobby. You can always find time for those things that interest you, and the relaxation that following a hobby gives you will make you a more interesting and more interested person.

Elma Waltner is from Hurly, South Dakota, and lives on Bonnie Brook farm. She specializes in farm photography and pictorial reporting as well as having developed the hobby of carving.

Northern District Contributes Tools for India

by Orlando Waltner to the Northern District

One afternoon of last January, Mr. Willard Unruh and I examined and checked the tools that had been purchased to equip the "Machine Shop" at Champa, C. P., India.

There were box end wrenches and open end wrenches, rasps and files, pincers and pliers, calipers and dividers, screwdrivers and chisels, rip saws and cross-cut saws, glueing clamps and a miter box, countersunk bits and drills, a tap and die set and a heavy hydraulic jack, value seat reamers and valve refacers, a mechanic's bench vise and a pipe vise, socket wrench sets and pipe cutters, an electric table saw and an electric welder, and electric hand drill with complete set of high speed drills and stand to concert to a drill press, an oxy-acetylene welder with cutting attachment, pipe dies and taps, piston ring compressors and gear pullers, and electrical supplies of all kinds such as friction tape and rubber tape as well as splicing caps and a crimping tool.

It was a very good collection of carpenter's and mechanic's tools which we were checking. Here were tools to help build clothes closets, cabinets and book cases for the missionaries. The electric and the oxy-acetylene welder would be useful in making iron beds for the hospitals and in repairing the missionary's broken meat grinder. Here was the equipment to repair the break in the chassis which one of the Jeeps suffered in going over a rough road. Here were the tools needed in the overhauling job required by two or three Jeeps belonging to the mission. Here were tools that would effect many repair jobs and produce many new things to be used in the mission. I thought of all that as Willard and I handled that pile of tools valued at over $700.

I recalled the night in Champa when the group of missionaries there felt that the "Champa Machine Shop " project should be presented as a challenge to some group or organization in our churches in America. You, the Young People's Organization of the Northern District Conference, responded marvelously. You raised the money so that Mr. Unruh and I could purchase the tools. The tools are now on the way to India —perhaps they have arrived there. As Willard Unruh and Erwin Schrag will be using the tools in India in building and repairing, they will not only be helping the missionaries but also will be retouching and building the lives of the young men whom they will train as mechanics and carpenters.

In behalf of the mission work in India I thank you young people for having made this project a reality. Surely, you can't have heard the last of this!!—The Northern Light

A Response to Aid

by Harold L. Weaver

A relief worker never knows where his witness may be seen and prove of value. Each Monday morning it is my duty to count all the laundry that we fellows have to send to the laundry woman, and then to take it to the little village of Weiler a short distance from Wissembourg where she lives. Our laundry woman impresses one as being perhaps a little over fifty years old, with iron gray hair, and strong features tempered with shrewedness. That was my first opinion of her. Perhaps this was heightened by the fact that just a few weeks after I began taking the laundry to her we decided we must cut our laundry expenses, and it was necessary for me to help negotiate such an agreement. Finally we agreed that by cutting out much of the ironing, and thus saving fuel and work for her, our expenditures would be cut about a third.

However, as time has worn on, the laundry woman has begun to show her true colors. The first step toward this, I think, was one morning when we had more bread than we needed, and I took her a loaf of good, white bread. I think it was probably the first loaf of white bread that had been in that home for five years. I had no idea that this little gift would mean so much to her, but there were the beginnings of tears in her eyes when she thanked me. By the time the next week rolled around and I stopped again with the laundry, the first thing she wanted me to do was to eat a large apple she had selected especially from her precious winter's store for me. It so happened that I had been put on a restricted diet just that week by the doctor, and one of the things he forbade me was fresh fruit. When I told her I couldn't eat it (which she insisted I must do on the spot) she was in a state of consternation to know what she could do. Finally, after she had made me name all the things I could eat, she went into a little back room and came out with four small eggs—her pullets had just begun laying. She wrapped each of these in a separate bit of newspaper, put them in a little paper bag, and handed them to me with a smile of satisfaction on her face. I knew I could do nothing but protest and accept them.

For weeks after that, as long as I was restricted in my diet, the four eggs appeared each week. If some of the pullets happened to lay larger eggs, those were the ones she put in the little sack. I was deeply moved by her appreciation, and occasionally took a little candy or gum for her two parentless grandchildren who live with her, and one time took her a pair of woolen trousers that were worn so that

I couldn't wear them, but still had good material in them. I knew that she, like so many persons all over Europe, must make things over time and again into smaller articles of clothing so that not the least bit of good material would be wasted. Through all this I found a new bit of philosophy and good will in the person I had termed "shrewd." She does her best to make me understand, in the limited vocabulary that I can understand, the way she feels about various things. One of her favorite sayings is, "A person never forgets a good man!" You'll do your best to forget the evil things that befall you, and the persons who brought about those things, but you'll never forget someone who befriends you. That is her philosophy.—Harold W. Volunteers Engage in Varied Summer Service

A number of young people of the General Conference have again availed themselves of the voluntary service opportunities sponsored by the Young People's Union with the various General Conference Boards. The following is a brief report of the number of applicants for each unit and the leaders:

Project	Applicants	Leader
Montana Mission	5	Christine Duerksen N. Newton, Kansas
Arizona Mission	5	Marie Krigor Quakertown, Pa.
Canadian Youth Farm	8	Marie Peters Henderson, Neb.
Youth Team (Ind.-Ill.)	5	Norma Jost Hillsboro, Kansas
Canadian Peace Team	3
Chicago Home Mission	4

The following states and Canada are represented in the personnel of the units: California, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Kansas, Idaho, and Nebraska.

Migrant work is a channel of service under the direction and supervision of the Women's Missionary Society of the Home Mission Council and is open to a limited number of young people. There were five applications for this type of service.

The opportunities offered by voluntary service are rare and unique. The experiences are most enriching and satisfying. As these units get started with their work, excerpts will be printed in Mennonite Youth of their experiences for the benfit of those who would have liked to take part in these projects but were unable to do so. Only in so far as Christian young people will volunteer for Christian summer services can the Summer Service program be enlarged and expanded.

Do We Take Time

by Vivian Brockmueller

How many of us enjoy to take time out to chat with a friend? We love to tell him our plans and our problems. We feel the need of a true friend as we get his nod of approval or word of comfort.

Fellow young people, there is no truer Friend who has more interest in us than Jesus. No one can give us more comfort than our Creator, who has a definite purpose for the life of each one of us, yes, even for the least talented person. Not one is insignificant in the sight of a loving Father.

How tragic it is that we don't have more time for God in our youth; the time of our life when we need His divine guidance most desperately.

It should be the desire and habit of every Christian to start the day right with prayer and devotions. When we kneel before the throne of Grace and pour out our heart to the Savior, our burdens become lighter. Isn't it the truth that we young folks must make one great decision after another? Often we don't know which way to turn, but as we "Tell it to Jesus" the way becomes clear and the problems are solved. Prayer is a great essential for growth in the Christian life.

Bible study goes hand in hand with prayer. We must search and study the scriptures to find "the way, the truth, and the life." There are several ways to go about Bible study. If we are not very familiar with the Word, perhaps it would be best to begin with one of the Gospels. Or one may wish to use a systematic plan of reading the Bible through, beginning with Genesis. This is a very advisable method of use for growth in spiritual knowledge. There are also helpful devotional booklets which can be purchased.

Meditation follows study. Paul exhorts Timothy to "Meditate upon these things." It is when we meditate upon these spiritual truths that they become part of us. Throughout the day we ought to keep in mind the devotional lesson studied in the morning.

How many of us really take enough time to pray, study the Bible, and meditate? If we are not negligent when it comes to putting first things first, our day will seem brighter and our tasks will be lighter. There will be a song on our lips and a prayer in our heart.

"Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you." James 4:8

School Teachers Needed in Kentucky

Public school teachers are needed in the Kentucky mountains. Miss Elsie Pfister, mountain missionary serving under the Home Mission Board, reports that the need for public school teachers is critical. Schools open the middle of July and many are not yet supplied with teachers. The requirements a teacher must meet are one year of college, but two years of college would make it possible for the teacher to choose where he or she would teach. This need for teachers is acute from the angle of education, lest, for the lack of teachers, areas in our own country lapse into medieval obscurantism, and religiously because it is through Christian teachers that it is possible for church workers to teach the Bible in the public school.

Any school teacher, interested in such special service and in the church's mission program, should write Miss Elsie Pfister, Laurel House, Incline, Kentucky, for further information.

for the winter. Term of service is to be two months beginning June 15; those who are not available for two months may serve for one.

Before You Decide

As Congress debates the final form of the draft act which if passed puts upon American youth conscription once again, the Mennonite Central Committee has published a seventy-page pamphlet called "Before You Decide." This pamphlet is written with the youth of the church in mind. It is written in face of the international tension which exists today and which places before youth the necessity of deciding whether their lot will be cast with military means of settling conflict or with peaceful means. The world in which we live is discussed in this pamphlet and the Christian's place and contribution to society. "Before You Decide" is available from the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

PRAISE THE LORD WITH UNDERSTANDING

The Psalmist tells us that we are to "praise the Lord with understanding." (Psalms 47:7)

It is one thing to sing a song. It is another to sing it "with understanding." The HANDBOOK FOR THE MENNONITE HYMNARY, to be published soon, will be one of the finest things that has ever come to our Mennonite church. We Mennonites have long been known for our wonderful singing. This HANDBOOK will help us to sing "with understanding," because we will know the story back of the song.

Back of every song there IS a story. In some cases it is the story of some keen personal suffering, some glorious vision, some public event, some historic movement, some great epoch which has inspired some great poet or song writer to put into song some of his heavenly visions. To know that story and to think about it when you sing it is to have an entirely new understanding of what a song is.

Look for the appearance of this new book, HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY, pray for it, speak about it, and plan to have one when it appears so that when you sing you can sing "praise with understanding."
